record made by probationary clerks who received permanent appointments during the year.

The average number of cards handled at each examination by each probationary clerk during the year ended June 30, 1888, was 726, and the average number handled by each permanent clerk was 1,014.

In 1887, 950,613 through registered pouches (including inner registered sacks) were handled by postal clerks, and in 1888, 1,103,083, being an increase of 152,470 pieces, or 16,03 per cent., while the registered packages and cases handled increased from 15,752,569 in 1887 to 16,001,059 in 1888, being an increase of 248,490 pieces, or 1.57 per cent.

Mr. VEST. If my colleague will permit me, I should like to call his attention to a table which he will find in House Executive Document No. 201, which shows the exact relation between the number of mistakes under the Republican administration and from 1882 to 1887.

Mr. COCKRELL. This table corresponds exactly, and I am very much obliged to my colleague for it. I had not had time to huut up the document, and I was only reading from the official report of each of the Departments and did not make the comparison. I hold in my hand now Executive Document No. 201, House of Representatives, Fiftieth Congress, first session, headed "The mail service in the West," handed me by my colleague, and on page 3 I find under the head of "Inexperienced employés" the following:

In response to this branch of the inquiry, I respectfully submit that in no instance where the specific complaint has been brought to the attention of the Department from the western divisions of the railway mail service has incompetency or inexperience of railway postal clerks or clerks in post-offices caused any embarrassment to the service or impairment of its general efficiency.

The results of the tests, by which the efficiency of the clerks in the railway mail service have been for some year stried and their competency proved, present a very favorable exhibit for the efficiency of the present service.

The following table gives the average percentage in correctness in case examinations of railway postal clerks for the past six fiscal years:

Year ended June 30—	Perma- nent clerks.	Proba-
1882	77.05 87.46 78.10 82,23	80.49 80.37 81.41 83,11
1886	81.61 87.50	82. 68 85. 34

These examinations are thorough tests of fitness of a clerk for the discharge of his duty, as they fully measure his knowledge, the quickness and accuracy of his memory and accuracy of rapid distribution of mail matter so as to forward or dispatch it by the most direct or expeditions route to its destination. They are conducted by the same excellent method adopted prior to 1885, and the results computed and arrived at in the same manner and on the same basis, so that the examinations are accurate and infallible comparative tests of efficiency.

By these it is demonstrated that there is not only a steady improvement in the accuracy and competency of the permanent appointees, but that the probationers or new appointees for the past three years have been of a high order of efficiency and passed a better examination at the expiration of their probationary period by a very considerable percentage than is recorded for the like results in the three years previous to June 30, 1884.

In 1888, which is not in this table, as I have shown, the permanent clerks increased their percentage of cards correctly handled from 87.50 in 1887 to 90.50 in 1888, a higher record than was ever before made in the railway mail service. The probationary clerks increased their record from 85.34 per cent. in 1887 to 85.87 per cent. in 1888. So this charge of inefficiency in the administration of the mail service, when tested by the official records and the facts, fails. That there have been some obstructions in that service I do not deny; but that they have been largely caused by partisan Republicans who have been retained in that service in my judgment is not disputable.

The Senator from Kansas referred to the incompetent and inefficient clerks, Republicans as a matter of course, retained in service in the Departments. I desire to deal frankly and truthfully with the Senate in regard to this matter. I have no apologies to make and no justifi-cation to offer for any Department of the Government retaining in its service inefficient, incompetent, and worthless employés, simply because they may have been there a great number of years or because they may have strong backing of any kind, Democratic or Republican. In my judgment, and I say it frankly, the departmental service could my judgment, and I say it frankly, the departmental service could have been improved by the discharge peremptorily, without any cause being assigned, for there is no necessity for any cause, of quite a large number of the fossils who were in there infesting the Departments and performing no real service. As a matter of course, I presume, the same kindly feelings and motives which have prompted former heads of Departments to retain these persons in office prompted the present incumbents. If former administrations were justifiable in retaining them, then it does not, it seems to me, lie in the mouth of our Repub-lican friends to criticise the Democratic Administration for not undoing that which they permitted to go amiss.

nothing on earth to do with the retention of anybody in a civil posi-tion. The head of a Department, the President, anybody who has the appointing power, has precisely the same power to-day to turn out an employé in the civil service appointed under the civil-service law and regulations that he had before that law was passed; and I am tired of hearing that law charged as the reason why persons have been retained in the public service. It is no reason why persons are kept in the public It does not guard the exit from office; it simply and solely and only provides that before the head of any Department or bureau can appoint persons to certain classified, specified places, they must pass a certain kind of examination and be certified, and that is all; but when in there they can be turned out just as readily as if they had been appointed before there was any civil-service law, or just as readily as if the civil-service law were repealed to-day and the appointment made hereafter.

The object of that law, as I understand, is to guard the entrance to it, the civil service. That it may not have been correctly and fully administered, I am not here to question. It would be very difficult to find any gentleman who could administer that law to the entire satisfaction of all persons and both political parties. I think there are serious grounds of complaint against the Civil Service Commission and their administration of the office, and those complaints lie because the carries her not been improved and betterdesic in in the law to the entire to find the control of the office.

service has not been improved and bettered as it might have been.

In committee I sustained the action of the Committee on Appropriations in not increasing this force. The commission have a sufficient force, in my judgment, if properly applied, to discharge the duties incumbent upon them in an efficient and acceptable manner—at least, I will say in an efficient manner—and therefore I hope that the amendment of the Sanator for Connecticut will not prevail ment of the Senator from Connecticut will not prevail.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I have had occasion once before, I think, on a suggestion made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. Cock-RELL] to call attention to the fact, in the first place, that what he has read here as a revision of the civil-service classification in the Interior Department (although headed "A revision," which heading was put in by the compiler, I suppose), was no such thing. The only revision asserted to have been made by the Interior Department was to include the $2,000 clerks within the classified list. I said once before, and I repeat, that this had been the rule for at least eight or ten months before the date given here as the 6th of November, which is simply the time it went on record. There was no new classification made in the Interior Department with reference to a change of Administration.

The Senator from Missouri is correct when he says the civil-service rules do not keep anybody in office. That is true. Every clerk could have been discharged without reference to the classifications, and the place could have been filled as all clerks' places had been filled prior to the time when the act went into effect in July, 1883.

I do not know anything about the change that has been made by the present board of commissioners or by the heads of Departments. I simply know that the matter is wholly and entirely under the control and direction of the Executive of the United States. When the incoming President of the United States finds that the classification includes any body who ought not to be included, I think he will have the courage to make the change. I think if he finds that it does not include any class that ought to be included, he will promptly make the change.

It is not very strange that in the case of a new law just going into effect, without any precedents, there should have been some necessity for revision of the action of the heads of the several Departments in 1883 and subsequent thereto. That is all that can be complained of. If the outgoing Republican Administration made a classification not satisfactory to the incoming Administration, it was easy for that Administration to modify and change that classification. I think that is the case now.

I do not believe myself that the class of persons performing clerical work on railway cars can ever be properly classified under the civil-service regulations. I do not think that those who hold offices of trust, who handle money, those who are in the pay department of the Gov-ernment, the financial clerks, ought to be admitted under a classification, as I understand has recently been made. If I were at the head of a Department I should not hesitate to change any regulation that had been made by my predecessors with reference to this matter if it did not accord with my ideas of right and justice.

I wish to repeat that so far as the Interior Department is concerned the practice that was in vogue in July, 1884, was the rule that was recognized in what is here called, but not by the Department, a revision of the regulations of September, 1883.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have very little doubt about the correctness of the position taken by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller]. It bears within itself absolute and irrefutable proof of the TELLER]. fact that the civil-service law amounts to nothing in practical operation. Great complaint was made here yesterday by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] that the outgoing Democratic Administration had made this classification under the civilservice law which embraced railway mail clerks, and it was assumed that the object of the classification was to keep in office Democratic appointees, who were also assumed to be incompetent.

As the Senator from Colorado says, where is the law that even by construction prevents the incoming Republican Administration from changing these classifications? So long as that power exists in an administration just so long can it nullify in spirit and letter the civil-service statute as it is now found upon the statute-books.

I recognized this fact when the law was passed. I objected seriously and strenuously not only to that provision but to the provision, which I considered an outrage at the time and so consider now, that all the incumbents of office in these clerical positions under that law remained in, whilst every applicant from the time the law took effect was compelled to go through a competitive civil-service examination, thereby retaining in office the old fossils, the old party hacks, the old instruments who were used in every close campaign, whether competent or not, and subjecting every man and every woman who came thereafter from the people to apply for these offices that belong to the people to a strict and often absurd competitive examination.

If there is any branch of the public service that needs classification under the civil-service law it is the railway mail clerks. I had occasion once before to state a single fact which came to the knowledge of my colleague and myself in regard to the appointment of railway postal clerks under the administration of the late President Arthur. It came within our personal knowledge that the content of the late President Arthur. It came within our personal knowledge that the patronage of the State of Missouri as to railway postal clerks was divided—one half of it, the eastern half, going to Chauncey I. Filley, and the western half to Col. R. T. Van Horn. There was a factional fight in the Republican party within the State, and in order to bring about that placid and ecstatic condition of political feeling that was necessary to the success of the party there was a line drawn through the middle of the State from the Iowa to the Arkansas line, and one-half of the patronage was given to Mr. Filley and one-half was given to Colonel Van Horn, and that instruction from the Postmaster-General to the appointing clerk of the Post-Office Department was put in writing. The result was that men were put in office utterly incompetent, and there were thirty-four of them in office when Cleveland's Administration came into existence, many of them from other States of whom we had never heard in the State of Missouri; but the exigencies of political warfare demanded their appointment and their retention.

If there is any Department in which classification under the rules and spirit of the civil-service law is necessary, it is in the appointment of railway postal clerks. The junior Senator from Kansas had placed in the RECORD of January 31 a letter from the secretary and business manager of Colonel Van Horn's paper, Mr. J. A. Mann, in the city where I live, Kansas City, Mo. Here is the letter, as the RECORD shows:

KANSAS CITY, Mo., January 25, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Is it possible to bring to bear such pressure, by means of a Senate committee on investigation of Western mail service in Missouri and Kansas, as will rectify the present demoralized condition of said service?

Our relations to this service are such that we suffer more perhaps than any line of business and know more of its delinquencies than those engaged in other vocations.

I can say, after eighteen years' continuous labor in this one office, with full facilities for learning as to general efficiency of the mail service, that it was never so bad nor so badly administered as during the past year, and that the tendency at this time is toward a down grade. Can you give this attention and bring it before the people in such manner as to lead to a reform?

Very respectfully,

J. A. MANN, Secretary and Business Manager Kansas City Journal.

Hon. P. B. Plumb, Washington, D. C.

Mr. COKE. What is the date of that letter?

Mr. VEST. That letter is dated January 25, 1888, and it was put in the RECORD for the purpose of showing the inferiority of the Democratic administration in the railway mail service to the preceding Republican administration. I want to read the following letter from this same gentleman:

KANSAS CITY, Mo., August 28, 1882.

During the administration of the Republicans.

Mr. R. W. CAMP, Chief Head Clerk, Railway Mail Service, Kansas City:

"And can these things be, and not overcome us like a summer cloud?"

Butler, Austin, Warrensburgh, Pleasant Hill packages for news-dealers all lost on the 24th and 25th of August.

They left this office in time for the mails; were delivered at the Kansas City post-office promptly.

You will extend to the United States mail service our unbounded thanks that they did not lose our whole d—d mail on that day.

Respectfully,

JOURNAL COMPANY, J. A. MANN, Secretary.

September 12, 1882, there appeared in the same paper, under the business control of this same gentleman, an editorial which I ask the Secretary to read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

"The mail service in the matter of the delivery of the Kansas City dailies in this city is a double-distilled nuisance. More disappointment, and consequent profanity, is directly chargeable to the slip-shod manner in which these dailies are not delivered here than to all other irritating influences combined. In the first place, with the laudable purpose of giving us the advantage of the earlier time schedule of train arrivals on the Missouri Pacific, the chief postal clerk arranged to send the Kansas City dailies over that route, but after some months of vexation and bother we have failed to perceive any improvement. In the first place, a good portion of the time the Missouri Pacific train is late, sometimes not arriving until after the Santa Fé express, and quite as frequently the packages of papers are non est when it does get in. And not infrequently neither road brings the packages, as witness yesterday, when the Kansas City papers failed to come at all. Nobody seems to know who or what is to blame, and we would gently suggest to the newspaper managers at Kawsmouth the propriety of a thorough investigation.

"The Kansas City dailies failed to arrive on the Missouri Pacific yesterday. Newsmen are seriously considering the policy of discontinuing the purchase of these papers, as under present circumstances they generally remain on their hands. A little bit of business enterprise manifested on the part of the management at Kansas City, it seems to us, might easily regulate this matter. Our people are not desperately anxious to pay for old back numbers of Kawsmouth journals."

people are not desperately anxious to pay for old back numbers of Kawsmouth journals."

We reluctantly republish the above article, taken from the editorial columns of the Ottawa (Kans.) Republican. Every effort that the managers of the newspapers at Kansas City could possibly exert has been put forth to secure to our patrons a prompt, faithful, and regular service of the Kansas City papers at all the points lying along the Missouri Pacific Railroad, trains over which leave this city at 4.15 a. m. We have appealed to the chief clerk of the mail service, and he has devoted much time and pains to remedy this evil, but without much success. We are told that when the train by accident gets off late from Kansas City the train from Holden, which crosses this early train at Harrisonville, pulls out even when the Kansas City train is in sight, leaving all the mails for Osawatomie, Ottawa, and the towns along the line behind for a day.

We have aided in having an application filed with the chief officer of the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company in St. Louis, setting forth our trials and delays and asking aid. The results are not yet apparent.

At the beginning of the dispatch of the new "Texas express" from this city we made great efforts to place our paper in the new field. In thirty days the complaints of delays of an entire day were so frequent that 60 per cent. of the mail at first sent out was turned back upon the old routes, which do not leave the city till four or five hours later in the morning, while new subscribers rapidly disappeared because they could not get their papers regularly.

From every source in Kansas where the Missouri Pacific extends there comes bitter complaints of the mails. Late, late, always late, from one to twenty-four hours. We have hitherto borne this annoyance and positive loss—for it is a serious loss to the Kansas City morning papers—without public complaint; but when our patrons take up the cry and charge the fault at our doors we must state the facts in self-deense, if nothing more. T

Mr. VEST. That was an extract from another paper republished in the Kansas City Journal. I think the Chief Clerk read the wrong extract. I have here another one. The one that I alluded to was September 13, 1882, and is as follows:

Had the "star-route" trials included investigation of postal matters in this region no one connected with that department of the Government service in Missouri or Kansas would have been convicted of "expediting" the mails, whatever other delinquency might have been unearthed. From all quarters come complaints of such gross mistakes, such incompetency, that public protest come complaints of such gross mistakes, such incompetency, that public protest can no longer be avoided.

Sample instances can be given like the following: Twelve days elapsed between the date of postmark on a letter mailed within 85 miles of Kansas City, and plainly addressed, before it is delivered to its destination here. Whole packages go wandering about from day to day off their proper routes, yet no penalty or disability attaches to the delinquents. Indeed the delinquents are carefully never found. A package of journals is placed in the Kansas City post-office each morning addressed to a news-dealer, Lathrop, Mo., in ample time for the early mail.

penaity of dashinty attaches to the definquents. Indeed the definquents are carefully never found. A package of journals is placed in the Kansas City postofice each morning addressed to a news-dealer, Lathrop, Mo., in ample time for the early mail.

Here is the record of the three consecutive days: That of September 7, received at Lathrop on morning of the 8th, and were marked "Missent." Package of the 8th in some way arrived at Lathrop on the 9th in the evening. This had been meandering about the country and was returned, marked "Carried by." Package to same address of the 9th was carried past its destination and returned same night, but no marks of delinquency on this, for the reason, presumably, that getting to its destination only twelve hours late, it was thought prompt emough to meet the wants of the most exacting. On a late occasion the whole of our mails for the line of the Missouri Pacific Railroad and tributaries were missent, as confessed by the post-office officials, but to heal the wound thus given we were assured that the Times mail was scattered in like manner.

Upon certain lines, like the Hannibal and St. Joseph, complaints of single papers and packages, especially of the Weckly Journal, are so frequent that we can not refer to half the cases. These Weekly Journals are invariably in the Kansas City post-office on Wednesday, yet often reach points but 50 or 100 miles from Kansas City on Friday or even on Saturday.

So far as known, though dozens of these complaints have been referred to those having charge of mail matters in the past few months, not one case of discipline has eventuated.

There should be some remedy and some indemnity. The Journal within a week lost a paying daily subscriber of four years' standing because he could no longer get his paper with either promptness or regularity. Another within a few days reported that he got but four papers out of seven the week previous. The complaints, we take it, are true representatives of the facts as they are, but in the face of it all invari

This is from the same paper of September 13, 1882, long before the Cleveland Administration came into power. So on the 19th of October, 1882, the very same gentleman writes to Colonel Warfield, superintendent of the seventh division of the railway mail service, as follows:

KANSAS CITY, Mo., October 19, 1882.

Col. E. W. WARFIELD, Superintendent Seventh Division, Railway Mail Service:

Superintendent Seventh Division, Railway Mail Service:

The inclosed postal of F. P. Morlan, postmaster, Dayton, Cass County, Mo., refers to a fact from which we are made to suffer continually.

The paper to which he refers is the Weekly Journal. Now, that edition of our paper is in the Kansas City post-office every week, with rare exception, by 2 p. m. Wednesdays. Seldom do they get into the mails until Thursday evening, and oftener Friday morning. There is an inefficiency about getting this weekly mail out of this city. They assume that it don't make any difference about when a weekly goes out. It frequently lies in the Kansas City post-office eighteen to thirty-six hours.

One pretext is that they have not force enough to work the Journal and Times weeklies received on Wednesdays and in time to go out on Thursday morning's mails, so take their time to it, and the consequence is that the weeklies of both offices go out Friday mornings, or about thirty hours after being received at the Kansas City post-office.

Do you think such a state of affairs creditable to a first class office?

Respectfully,

JOURNAL COMPANY,

Giving a glaring case of negligence, to say nothing worse. So upon November 5, 1882, we find the following letter, signed by the same gentleman:

KANSAS CITY, Mo., November 5, 1882.

Col. E. W. Warfield, Superintendent Seventh Digision, Railway Mail Service, St. Louis, Mo.:

Superintendent Seventh Digision, Railway Mail Service, St. Louis, Mo.:

Your report and that of all subordinates for 30 November, is remarkably clever, stupendously so. You can reach a most definite conclusion in reference to a matter of which we were, from an accident, painfully aware at the time, if you could be half as expert in finding out why all that part of our mails on the next day—when we were on time—including the entire lists for subscribers and dealers west of Harrisonville on the Missouri Pacific, including such points as Paola, Ottawa, Burlington, Emporia, all were missed, and from that day to this have missed about every other day.

There is a nut for you to crack, and we may say your report is anxiously looked for. Here's a chance to do some work that will be of value.

Respectfully,

JOURNAL COMPANY,

Here is another editorial to the same effect, which appeared on the 7th of December, 1882:

The St. Joseph Gazette complains that the Kansas City papers quite often do not reach there until they are twenty-four hours old. We can return the compliment. Only yesterday the St. Joseph papers were delivered to us thirty hours after their publication. Of course there is no excuse for this save the carclessness or inefficiency of the men who handle the mails on the cars. They often carry papers and letters past their destination and deliver them on their return trip. There ought to be a prompt remedy for this. If there is too much mail matter for one agent to handle, the Department should furnish an assistant. If there is only work for one, and the agent fails to perform his duty, he should be dismissed. That is all there is to it. It is the people who pay for mail service, and they are entitled to prompt service,

I read these to show that this same writer and publisher of this paper complained with more bitterness and with more special acrimony of the railway mail service under the Republican administration than he ever has done under the Democratic administration.

The junior Senator from Kansas also attacked the administration of the Post-Office Department in regard to the pouch mails, and stated that the clerks had been grossly derelict in their duty in regard to this branch of the service. Now, I want to read what the Postmaster-General says:

CLOSED-POUCH SERVICE.

It has also been argued in the Senate" that in the matter of closed pouches handled daily" for the same period (1887) the clerks in the sixth and seventh divisions handled 2,895, as against 2,780 in all other divisions except the first and respectfully intimate that this argument is fallacious when I state the fact

I respectfully intimate that this argument is fallacious when I state the fact that railway postal clerks do not handle closed pouches. The closed-pouch service is performed on railroads where railway postal clerks are not employed and the pouches are handled by railroad employes.

Complain has been made in the Senate, as appears from the Congressional Record, that the increase of railway postal clerks in the sixth and seventh divisions has not kept pace with the relative increase of mileage of new roads on which service has been placed, and that had these divisions received a quota of clerks proportionate to their increase in mileage they would have been as signed 700 clerks instead of 228.

The reasoning is specious which reaches such a conclusion from such premises, illustrating the danger of drawing conclusions from statistics without regard to qualifying conditions.

Clerical force in the railway mail service can not be assigned upon the basis of mileage.

Clerical force in the rallway mail service can not be assigned upon the basis of mileage.

The proportion of clerks must be greatest where the mails are heaviest and among the dense populations where post-offices are most frequent upon the routes. For instance, on the New York and Chicago railway post-office, 983 miles long, there are employed 316 clerks, or one clerk for every 3 miles of road; while on the Omaha and Ogden, the heaviest line running through Nebraska, 1,085 miles long, are required but 39 clerks, or one to every 30 miles. Were the two lines furnished the same working force, or a force on the mileage basis, at least 250 clerks on the latter road would be constantly idle.

This is a plain and irrefutable answer to the charges that have been made here, obviously for the purpose of holding up in invitious contrast the administration of the Post-Office Department of this country, and especially of the railway mail service, under Republican and Democratic administrations. As the junior Senator from Kansas stated yesterday, in perfect fairness, he recognized the fact that there are great difficulties in the way of absolute exactitude in administering the postal service of the country growing out of the enormous increase of popula-tion and the fact that remote localities are now being settled up and postal facilities required where none were required a year or two years ago. In a newsystem constantly enlarged, as a matter of course there must be friction, there must be a certain amount of uncertainty, there must be delay, there must be mistake; but I challenge any Senator here to take this executive document and, in the ordinary fairness with which he would examine any other question before this body, answer the statements made by the Postmaster-General, based upon the record, answering them as he would wish that he should receive the same sort of a fair answer in any controversy affecting himself.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I doubt whether the postal service has reached the perfection that is claimed for it in the report of the Civil Service Commission. Last November I had occasion to visit the city of Sacramento to address the people there. At the conclusion of my remarks, when it was quite late, several gentlemen, friends of mine, met me and inquired of me whether I was sending to them Democratic documents. I having made a Republican speech they thought that was very remarkable. I denied it and said that I had not done Some ten or fifteen at once came forward and said that they had received such documents under my frank. As I left I requested any gentleman who had received documents of that kind to forward one to me that I might see how it occurred. I received on my return to Carson City, Nev., the envelope with the inclosure which I now hold in my hand, and also a letter which I shall have read. The envelope was fastened together when I received it. The letter I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

RECORD-UNION, Sacramento, October 22, 1888.

RECORD-UNION, Sacramento, October 22, 1888.

DEAR SIR: Inclosed please find one of those Democratic bureau documents I spoke to you about on Saturday evening last. This package is just as it was received by me from the post-office. I will let you open it yourself, and if you do not find a Democratic campaign document inside I will hereafter declare that Jeff Davis was right in 1861, and that the four hundred thousand men who died that the Union might be perpetuated one and undivided were all wrong, and that it served them right for interfering in the manner in which they did in the great slaveholders' rebellion. Tell the old soldiers of your State ten thousand tons of just such stuff as this would never draw a man from our ranks, for we still vote the way we shot, and will continue to do so until the time will come when a voter in Georgia or any other Southern State can exercise the right of suffrage with as much freedom as any man can in Ohio or New York.

Respectfully, yours, for Harrison and Morton,

GEO. W. FICKS.

Hon, WILLIAM M. STEWART, United States Senator, Nevada.

Mr. STEWART. The letter I received before I opened the document. I then called a couple of friends, Mr. Wright, of my town, and another from it, which I replaced again, and it has been there ever since, a "Speech of Hon. L. F. MCKINNEY, of New Hampshire, in the House of Representatives, Thursday, August 2, 1888." It is a speech on the vetoes of the President, justifying all the vetoes that have been made by the present Administration and commending them in the highest The envelope shows that it had been refastened together with mucilage. The envelopes put up in the Department here are simply pasted together with light paste, but the envelope had been opened and fastened together again with mucilage. It did not appear on the outside to have been disturbed. The speech that was taken from it must have been a speech that I delivered about the same time on the Chinese question. I was requested by friends in California to send some copies of that speech to that State, and they furnished me a list of names, and among the list was this gentleman, G. W. Ficks, and in the envelope when it left my committee-room a copy of that speech must have been contained. It is directed in the handwriting of one of my clerks.

Where or how this was done I am unable to say. It having been reported to me that there was a large number sent to Sacramento that way, I supposed that it must have occurred in the post-office here, because it is not probable they would have had the speeches of Mr. Mc-KINNEY to substitute for mine at the end of the route. But wherever it was done it shows that civil-service reform, so much commended by the members of the Civil Service Commission, has not accomplished all the perfection in the mail service which that commission claims for it.

I call attention to this matter because I think that it is of the first importance that our mail should be protected, and I hope that whoever was engaged in changing my mail and substituting the speech of Mr. McKinney, whose speech on that subject was entirely at variance with my views, may be removed from office if they are found out. I hope that they will be removed and that honest men will be put in their places.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator explain how he got the envelope

Mr. STEWART. It was sent to me sealed up by the person who received it. It had not been opened. They explained to me that sometimes there were some copies sent to the post-office for distribution, and they came there in packages of ten. The first one of the package would be all right, but on opening the rest that were not directed but to be delivered they found they had been changed altogether, and that where they were directed to a single person, as this one, then they found it changed. Mr. Ficks told me that-

Mr. DANIEL. Does the Senator know the character of the man who wrote this letter?

Mr. STEWART. The character of the man is as good as the Senator's or mine.

Mr. DANIEL. I asked if the Senator knew him. The Senator knows the man?

Mr. STEWART. I know the man, and I know some twenty other gentlemen, first citizens of Sacramento, who told me on the evening to which I alluded, when I was there, that they had received Democratic documents under my frank. I had to leave; it was late; I left that night on the cars; and I requested them to send me one as a sample. This came by mail to me the next day at Carson as a specimen. When they were sent, as I before remarked, in single copies, they informed me that they were changed, but where there were ten in a package, the one containing the first address was not changed, but the other nine were

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I shall vote against the proposed increase in the appropriation for the benefit of the Civil Service Commission because I do not wish to embarrass the incoming Administration by any extra dose of civil-service reform. I shall vote against it also because I am opposed to that system, which I look upon as un-American, unrepublican, and undemocratic. While I regret the defeat of the present Administration in the recent election, I should feel that there was some consolation in it if the incoming Administration shall manifest no affection for the machine system of appointments which has prevailed under the misnomer of civil-service reform.

EXECUTIVE POWER WITHOUT EXECUTIVE RESPONSIBILITY.

My objection to the Civil Service Commission is based upon the bedrock principle that it is not a thing that was ever contemplated by the fathers of our Republic, and was never resorted to except as a refuge from corruption. The Civil Service Commission is a crystallization of executive power without executive responsibility. The Constitution has put executive power in the hands of the President, and in certain cases to be provided for by Congress in the hands of the courts and the President's Cabinet; and the Senate as the President's adviser, with the President, the courts, and the Cabinet, constitute the sole constitutional repositories of executive power.

BANKRUPT EXECUTIVE POWERS PASSED OVER TO RECEIVERS.

For the last twenty-five or thirty years we have become accustomed in this country to see all the great corporations which had become over-loaded with debt and which had watered their stock sink under these gentleman, and opened the document in their presence; and I took grievous loads and pass into the hands of receivers. The Executive Departments of the Government of the United States, bankrupt to a certain degree in the respect and confidence of the people, followed the example of the bankrupt corporations that were breaking up around them and transferred the executive powers of this Government to three receivers, who by politeness are termed Civil Service Commissioners; and the function to select the agents of the people, which the founders of the Constitution intended to confide to their own selected and responsible officers, has been side-tracked into the hands of a triumvirate who hold no responsibility to the people and who may exercise their powers just as they please without the correlative power existing in any other functionaries to supervise and to correct them. To use the expression of a gentleman with whom I was talking yesterday, I might say of the Civil Service Commission that they are men who may play with loaded dice or with marked cards without the power existing anywhere on earth to discover whether they are playing with loaded dice or marked cards or not.

THE MACHINE SYSTEM NOT BUSINESS-LIKE.

Mr. President, I have another objection to that system. We are constantly told that the great thing to govern in the selection of governmental agents is a capacity to transact business; that the business function of the public agent is the great function to be looked at in his selection. Be it so. There is no business establishment in this country of which I have ever heard, be it banking establishment, railroad establishment, or any other establishment, private or corporate, which selects its business employés upon the principle that this Government is selecting its employés. In the great dry-goods establishment of Mr. A. T. Stewart, in New York, in the great offices of the telegraph companies, of the steam-ship companies, of the railroad companies, which are conducting the business of this nation on a grand scale, where is there any one of them which has abdicated the function of individual judgment of character and transferred it to a board to ask a stranger a few questions and then admit him into the confidence of that concern and into its responsible functions?

I liked the argument of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller], and like him I would never have put the railway mail clerks in the civil-service reform machine. Why? Because the first thing you have to look to in selecting a railway clerk is whether that man can be trusted; and you can not undertake to ascertain that fact in the way that it can be ascertained by him who knows how to judge character by any little picayune system of questions and answers about arithmetic or geography. He handles the people's money; he handles the people's confidential communications; and there is not any gentleman here who, if he had to select a confidential secretary or a confidential clerk, would consent to his selection by the method which he seeks through civil service to impose upon this Government. How many Senators here appoint their secretaries by civil-service examination? Not one; and yet they would have Uncle Sam appoint all of his confidential secretaries, or a great many of them, by that method.

TRUST AND CONFIDENCE IN OFFICIAL COMMUNICATIONS MORE IMPORTANT THAN MONEY TRUSTS,

I like the Senator's argument, because it proved more than he used it to prove. Civil service is a fine thing, he intimates, in branches of the Government where the employés do not handle money. Money is the least valuable of the things which the people who are in the confidential relations of government handle. The man who takes money is stigmatized and hounded down immediately as a thief, and all society rises against him. The very nature of his offense and the absolute certainty that he will be pursued and held to responsibility is a guard against his taking money. But take the case of the man who sits at your elbow to receive your confidential communications, the man who keeps the letters of the State Department, or the Interior Department, or the Treasury Department, involving financial negotiations of millions of dollars or diplomatic affairs with great governments, or personal relations which can never be measured in dollars and cents. The Senator would abrogate civil-service reform for the man who handles the greenback in the letter, but would seek to build it up for that great class of public officials who handle the letters themselves, which are of infinitely more value and which are under less safeguards than the pecuniary contents of the letters themselves. His argument is a center shot against the whole system.

As to the corruption of the Republican party, I will not say that it has been worse than other parties would have been under similar conditions, but any party which had conducted such great movements as were in the hands of the Republican party would have grown corrupt with long time; and as these corruptions which had grown up led the people to seek refuge in this civil-service-reform business, I hope that that party will help to lead the country back to its old republican and democratic principles in which the people are recognized as having a right to share in the people's offices.

THE MACHINE SYSTEM FORTIFIED THE SPOILS SYSTEM,

Mr. President, there was something entirely illogical in the establishment of this machine system of civil-service reform. Nearly all the old employés of the Government had been selected under what the doctrinaires generally call "the spoils system." Civil-service reform came on, and damning the appointment of these men, barricaded them in office, and placed it so that they imposed upon the country by the rivet of law the very system which they pretended to desire to get rid of.

THE MACHINE SYSTEM INJURIOUS TO ALL PARTIES.

I am satisfied that that civil-service-reform system has been injurious to all parties in this country. The Democratic party have suffered most by it because they got the first full dose of it; but the time has come now when that cup has passed from it, and while I am not a great admirer of the Republican party I have human nature and charity enough in my composition to assist my brethren of that party to drop that cup and break it and assume the responsibility of government just as soon as they will.

RENOVATION OF THE SERVICE NOT SECURED BY THE MACHINE.

Suppose President Cleveland when he came into office had said to the people of this country, "After a lapse of twenty-five years Democracy is again ascendent; within that twenty-five years of revolution such as disturbed the very depths of society in this country it was absolutely inevitable from the nature of things that the public service should be jammed and crammed by men distasteful to the very ones who had to hold them there; the accumulated dust and lumber of a quarter of a century has grown around the public service; the cobwebs of age are there, and the timber is moth-eaten; now, I am going to make—I will not say a clean sweep in the sense of turning everybody out, for that has never been done and never will be done; but I am going to pour fresh waters into this stagnant pool, not by turning out the man who has been a partisan but by turning out the man whom I do not want; I am going to assume the responsibility of administering this Government by agents of my own selection; I am going to hold them to accountability and I am going to stand or fall by that."

Instead of pursuing this policy the President—but I ought not to blame him so much as the Democratic party itself, for it had unfortunately committed him in a large degree to this doctrine, and should not make him the scape-goat of sin in which nearly all of them participated; instead of that the President of the United States has kept in power and in office the people whom the Democrats wanted to get rid of and the people whom our Republicans friends would have been more than glad to part with if they could only have had somebody else to do the parting. Now we turn all this old and unreformed material of the Government over to the Republican party. If they will go about it sincerely and help to rid the country of this humbug, I will at least pledge them one Democratic vote to assist them in doing it.

WHY THE MACHINE SYSTEM COULD NOT SUCCEED.

Mr. President, there is a philosophical reason why this civil-service machine could not be a successful one. The great principles of constitutional and of municipal law, which are the safeguards of public rights and of private privileges, the customs of society which hold it in the tenure of pathways of respectability and honor, the etiquette of life which makes the law of the social circle—all these things are the growth of ages and have ripened in their time. This civil-service reform statute sprang up in a night, an unwholesome growth, or rather not a growth, but a device, an invention. It was not a fruit that ripened out of public demand and public experience and a just sense of responsibility. It was an evasion of responsibility, and an attempt to do in a side way what men feared that they could not do directly. And, sir, when this Civil Service Commission took charge of the patronage of this Government they themselves went far beyond what was contemplated by Congress in its establishment.

HOW THE MACHINE TRIUMVIRATE AMENDED THE CONSTITUTION (IN EFFECT) AND DISFRANCHISED THE PEOPLE,

What right have three men, sitting in the city of Washington, to say to an American citizen, who is guarantied all the immunities of American citizenship in our Coustitution, that he shall not hold an office if he is over forty-five years of age? And yet three men, who were put in power without a single vote being cast for them, directly or indirectly, did undertake to amend the Constitution of the United States, to fix a status of eligibility to office of which the people had never dreamed, and to ostracize one-third of the American people from sharing the offices which their taxes sustain.

Sir, if an emperor or czar had done such a thing as that he would have heard the howl of the people around his palace; but it was done under the decorous name of "civil-service reform," and all parties have bowed to it. I am glad to say, however—and it is an item which ought to go to the credit of the retiring Administration—that under Democratic rule a third of the American people have been re-enfranchised, and that when a man gets to middle life, in the maturity of his powers and in the full tide of his experience, he is not now prohibited by civil-service reform from holding office.

THE COMITY OF PARTIES, AND ENLIGHTENED PUBLIC OPINION, PREVENTIVES OF ENVOLUTION.

Mr. President, there is just one other objection that I have to building up this system. The comity of political parties, the common sense of the people, the just fair-mindedness of men would regulate the question of turning out and keeping in official employés on a much fairer and better line than any statute. If there had been no civil-service statute in existence whatsoever, if President Cleveland and his Cabinet and his official advisers had had full power to remove every officer in this Federal Government, from the highest to the lowest, and to designate also the person who would take the place of the person re-moved, I do not think that there would have been anything like a clean sweep or a revolutionary change amongst the servants of the people; and if President-elect Harrison, coming soon into the Presidency, had absolute sway and could designate every officer here in Washington or elsewhere in the country, I have no idea that there would be a revolutionary condition of things and an absolute turning over of the official agencies of government into the hands of one party. It would be regulated by the fitness of things, by the amenities of life, by the personality and individuality and services of the person who was in or the person who applied, and in these "piping times of peace" when, happily for our country, party spirit does not roll quite so high as it has rolled in other days, in either event you would have had a conservative administration, fairly responsive to the aspirations and the opinions of the people.

PUBLIC SERVANTS SHOULD BE UNDER CONSTANT SENSE OF LIABILITY TO REMOVAL.

It is to be observed, too, Mr. President, that if you ever inculcate the idea in your public servants that they are in office so surrounded with the muniments of title that per influence of their condition or of statute they are not print to be a surrounded. statute they are not going to be removed, you at once remove from them one of the chief impulses to an intelligent, diligent, and accurate them one of the chief impulses to an intelligent, diligent, and accurate discharge of duties.

If it had pleased the wise Dispenser of life to inform the human heart when it would cease to beat, and if every man knew the time when fate would call him to account, there would be a very considerable revolution in human doings. A little while before time was up I have no doubt that every body would be very good; and a long ways off, when they knew that time was not going to be up, I am not so well satisfied in my mind that they would be quite so good. The fact that the mortal skein may be broken in a twinkling, and that the Son of Man "cometh like a thief in the night," is the great power which Providence has exercised over human intelligence and conscience in its warnings to "be mindful of the time, for ye know not when it comes."

Now, Mr. President, so it ought to be with those who are in trusty and confidential relations with the people. The elective officers of the people, the Congressmen, the Senators, the President, are always, at least in a technical sense, upon their good behavior, for they know that their masters have their eyes upon them, and they have an immediate their masters have their eyes upon them, and they have an immediate self-interest in accrediting themselves to those to whom they are beholden. But take a clerk under this machine system of civil-service reform, put him down in the corner of an office and let him know that he is going to stay there until Gabriel blows his horn, and he is going to make himself as easy and as comfortable as possible and glide down the smooth ways of life, having no other ambition than to make himself easy with the immediate persons over him who may have something to do with his promotion.

THE MACHINE GAVE OPPORTUNITY TO WRONG-DOING.

The truth of the business is that if you will look right around here in the city of Washington under the present Administration, which is about to close its books, you will find that the defalcations with which its name to a certain extent is stigmatized occurred amongst those old its name to a certain extent is stigmatized occurred amongst those old habitués of office, who felt so well satisfied that the sacrilegious hand of Democracy, gloved over with civil-service reform, would not touch them, that they played their pranks in a sense of confidence, and were only accidentally discovered in their evil doings.

I will not call names, sir, for I would not wound any sensibility; but go to the Interior Department, go to the Attorney-General's department, go to the Treasury Department, find where your money has been missing under Mr. Cleveland's Administration, and you will generally find, if I am correctly informed, that it disappeared when presided over by some hold-over Republican who imagined that civil-service reform had so put an iron-clad armor around him that he would never be disturbed in his doings.

THE ADEPT OFFICE-HUNTER HELPED BY THE MACHINE, AND THE PEOPLE SET ASIDE.

Mr. President, I long to see the time come when the plain people of the country-side, when the American citizen everywhere, may feel there is no avenue to office in this Government, whether it lead to the exalted place of Chief Magistrate or to the watchmanship at your Treasury door, or a clerkship, is anything but his property to be taken possession of by him if he shall be deemed worthy to hold it. But as matters now go those who are adept and practiced and skillful in the art of office-hunting in Washington, who can learn this peculiar code of civil-service reform which has so many ifs and ands and buts about it that it would take a Philadelphia lawyer to explore its labyrinths and dissect it and tell what it is—there is growing up amongst the people an impression, well founded, that the official oligarchy and aristocracy at Washington is so defended by your laws that it is utterly useless for them to apply for a position.

THE MACHINE OPENS THE DOOR TO CORRUPTION, AND CLOSES IT TO INSPECTION.

Now, sir, I do not mean to say or to intimate that the Civil Service Commission has been in any case corrupt; but the people know that they have absolute power to be corrupt if they choose to be, and no man can explore their doings sufficiently to give guaranty to others that they are not. If it be so that they are, there is no hand in this Government that can reach them, and whether it be true or no, the people of the country-side, perceiving and knowing that the opportunity for corruption exists and that the door to it is left open, can with difficulty be made to believe that it is not habitually practiced; and a department of the Government thus clothed with official power which can not be operated under a glass case so that the people can see its works invites this scandalous opinion and brings into reproach a system which on the other hand can have no opportunity thoroughly and openly to vindicate itself.

I shall vote against this appropriation to feed the civil-service machine system. I hope that when the new Administration is inaugurated its President and its advisers will find some way of amending that system so as to throw wide open the doors to applicants all over this country, avoiding the toggery and red tape of examinations which have little or no relation to the duties to be performed. The Democracy received the existing statutory machine system from their Republican predecessors. It has been to them "a heritage of woe." We pass it back now to the Republicans; but as the country will gain by its abolition I would gladly assist to that end, and hope the opportunity may be accorded.

In the Senate February 8, 1889. The vote being taken upon the amendment of Mr. HAWLEY it was lost.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, the discussion on the proposed amendment has taken a very wide range. I am led to trespass on the patience of the Senate by the remarks of the Senator from Missouri Mr. Cockrell, who has read various communications from the heads of Departments under the administration of President Arthur classifying the clerks and employés in their Departments under what is known as the civil-service act.

If I understood the point of the Senator's speech it was this, that he undertook to justify the placing by President Cleveland of more than three thousand employés in the postal service of the United States under the operations of the civil-service act since the result was known of the Presidential election of November last. He endeavored to justify this act of President Cleveland by asserting that President Arthur, after the result of the election in November, 1884, was known, placed under the operations of the civil-service act many of the clerks and employés in the Departments who had not been included within the operations of that act wright to the election.

Now, Mr. President, if this were so, I should certainly contend that there is a vast difference between any such action taken by President Arthur between the fall of 1884 and the expiration of his term in March, 1885, and the action which has been taken by President Cleveland since November last, for this reason: The civil-service act became a law January 16, 1883, and was in operation, therefore, but a little more than two years under President Arthur. Of course it was the duty of President Arthur and of the members of his Cabinet—

Mr. ALLISON. If it will not disturb the Senator I would say that

Mr. ALLISON. If it will not disturb the Senator I would say that the act did not take effect for six months after its passage.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is right, I think, on that point; but for the purposes of my present argument I will assume that after the passage of that act President Arthur had substantially two years of his own administration in which to bring it into full and complete opera-tion. The work of classification as required under the act was com-menced and the rules were established by the President, various altera-tions were from time to time made, and on the 4th of March, 1885, the President surrendered to his successor with the civil-service act in substantially full and complete operation as it had been brought about in less than two years by the successive acts of the President and his heads of Departments.

So that, if there were some extensions of the civil-service act between November, 1884, and March, 1885, they would have been en-tirely different transactions from this one of the present President who, taking the service on the 4th of March, 1885, and waiting three years and a half, until after he had been defeated for re-election, just before the expiration of his own term, takes more than three thousand clerks in the postal service of the United States and places them under the operations of the civil-service act; which he does not appear for a single moment to have contemplated doing during all these three years and a half, nor until he discovered that he himself and his Postmaster-

General were no longer to have the appointment of postal clerks.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator will permit me, I will give him the correct figures. There were five thousand three hundred and twenty

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not.

Mr. ALLISON. The order was dated on the 5th day of December,

Mr. CHANDLER. The second day after Congress met.

Mr. ALLISON. That was the order bringing these employés within the purview of the civil-service law.

Mr. CHANDLER. So that I maintain that there would have been great difference between any action of President Arthur in extending the civil-service classification, if he had made such extension, and the action of President Cleveland in doing what he has done.

But, Mr. President, coming now to the question of fact, I do not admit, I deny, that President Arthur after the election extended the classification of clerks under the civil-service act in the various Departments of the Government, except in the one case of the Department of Agriculture. I did not understand fully the claim of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. The orders speak for themselves, and they show the extension of the civil service. The Civil Service Commission show that it was extended up and down. It took in higher classes and it took in lower.

Mr. CHANDLER. I understand the Senator from Missouri. I am glad I did not rightly understand him to claim that there was a reclassification in every Department.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. CHANDLER. I desire to be informed precisely what the Senator said.

Mr. COCKRELL. I read the order of the distinguished Senator himself, declaring that he had made such a reclassification. I read the order of the distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller], then Secretary of the Interior, saying that he had done it, and I read the official order of the Secretary of War and of the Postmaster-General, and they said they made it, and the Civil Service Commission furnished us with a copy of the orders they issued, and I presume they carried it

Mr. CHANDLER. Well, Mr. President, the Senator did not do any such thing. The Senator from Colorado has made his own statement, and I propose to make mine.

Mr. COCKRELL. Do I understand the Senator from New Hampshire to say that I did not read those orders?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators must address the Chair. Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.
Mr. COCKRELL. Did the Senator say that I did not read those orders with the dates, one signed "W. E. Chandler?"

Mr. CHANDLER.

Mr. COCKRELL.

Mr. CHANDLER.

He read certain orders.

January of the control of the con

Mr. COCKRELL. That is what I asserted.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator said he read orders from the heads of Departments reclassifying the civil service under the civil-service act, and that is the issue; not whether the Senator read anything or not-we all know he read a good deal-but whether the Senator read an order from any one of these Departments, except the Department of Agriculture, making any substantial reclassification of the civil service under the civil-service act. If he says that he did that, I say that he is mistaken, certainly as to the Navy Department, as I will proceed to

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator from New Hampshire will permit

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. CHANDLER. Certainly.
Mr. COCKRELL. I read the orders of the heads of the Departments dated after the election in November, 1884. It was a second classification. They had previously, except the Department of Agriculture, made classification, all, I believe, except the Secretary of the Navy; I am not sure whether he had done so or not. This was a reclassification. I read what the Civil Service Commission said, and that is that in some of the Departments at least there was an extension of the service up and down, and I think the orders compared with the preceding orders will show that fact. The Agricultural Department was taken

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is not so accurate as he usually is. I will deal first with the Navy Department. The Senator says that he read the order from the Department signed by the head of the Department. ment reclassifying the employés in that Department. Now, I say that there was no reclassification, and there is nothing on the face of the paper which the Senator read to show that it purports to be a reclassification. I will admit that there is a heading to the paper that says it is a revision, but the heading was made by the Civil Service Commission, not by the Secretary of the Navy. The heading was not made before this Administration came into power, but it was made afterwards, and the letter of mine, which the Senator honored me by reading, is by the commission headed "Revision of November 22, 1884." That is what the Civil Service Commission call it, and that is what the Senator calls it, but I stigmatize that as a false heading. Now, I will read the paper and see whether I am right or the Senator.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, November 22, 1884.

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, November 22, 1884.

Gentlemen: I have the honor to transmit herewith a tabular statement exhibiting the number and classes of clerks and employés in the Navy Department and its bureaus, arranged in accordance with the Department's letter to the commission of January 23, 1884; and including not only the clerks classified by the act of January 16, 1883, in four classes under section 163 of the Revised Statutes, but also the subordinate places classified under the third paragraph of section 6 of the act last mentioned; and, in addition, for convenience, a statement of the positions in this Department classified but exempt from examination, and those not classified because classification is not required by the act. I also transmit a list showing the names and positions of those "classified, subject to examination."

Very respectfully,

W. E. CHANDLER.

W. E. CHANDLER, Secretary of the Navy.

United States Civil Service Commission, Washington, D. C.

Mr. STEWART. On what page is that? Mr. CHANDLER. Page 490. Then follows a table. Now, I ask the Senator from Missouri where there is a word in that Now, I ask the Senator from anisouri where there is a word in that communication that justifies him in saying that that was a reclassification of the employés in the Navy Department, when it distinctly states upon the face of the paper that it is a list of the clerks and employés in the Navy Department arranged in accordance with the Department's letter to the commission of January 23, 1884?

Mr. STEWART. This letter is dated November 22, 1884, and you refer to an arrangement made January 23, 1884. That must have been 1883.

Mr. CHANDLER. No; the previous January, in 1884. So far as the Navy Department is concerned there was not a single person put into the classified service after the unfortunate election of Grover Cleveland in November, 1884-not one. The classification had been made as soon as practicable after the act came into force, and every person engaged in the clerical work of the Navy Department after the act came into effect was appointed after competitive examination in accordance with the requirements of the law, and the Senator will be totally unable to discover any appointment in the Navy Department that was not made in accordance with the law after it went into effect. and he will not be able to discover a single addition to the classified civil service subsequent to the election in 1884.

The letter which he has read and which he says was a reclassification was merely putting on the record in a distinct form the name and classification previously made of every one of the two hundred and sixty-three employés in the Navy Department.

I not only find fault with the Senator, but I presume to find fault with the Civil Service Commission, who, on the one hundred and seventh page of their annual report, say that this is "a revision of the classification." This report was made out to suit the powers that then existed and are soon to disappear. The Senator perhaps is justified in being misled because this commission called this a revision. They

On November 25, 1884, the commission received from the Secretary of the Navy, in a communication dated November 22, 1884, a revision of the classification of that Department, dated November 1, 1884.

And they say "See letter of the Secretary of the Navy," which I have read from page 490, and then the commission recite the classifi-cation and follow with this paragraph:

By what authority the Secretary classified certain employés of his Department and then himself exempted them from examination is not stated; but the revision thus made was then accepted, and is now recognized by the commission in making examinations for that Department. Under this classification only eighty-four places in the Department of the Navy are covered by the civil-service act.

The Secretary of the Navy was not subject to this animadversion of the commission in reference to his undertaking to classify the employés and then himself exempt them from examination, nor was he subject to the imputation that he had revised, November 22, 1884, the classification of clerks and employés of this Department, which, being asserted by them, has been reiterated by the Senator from Missouri in this Chamber. The letter states the class of employes that under the civil-service act were exempt from examination. They are the chief clerk, disbursing clerk, stenographer, chief draughtsman, draughtsmen, assistant draughtsmen, telegraph operator, carpenter, plate-printers, apprentice, engravers, assistant engravers, assistant astronomer, and the instrument-maker.

In order to give the Civil Service Commission this full list of all the employés of the Department, this class was enumerated, not because the Secretary thereupon undertook himself to exempt them from examination, but because by the operations of the civil-service act itself, amination, but because by the operations of the civil-service act itself, by the terms of that act, such employés were exempt, and because the Department wished to place before the Civil Service Commission a list containing the name of every employés ot that it might be seen whether persons appointed to any place ought to be examined under the act or were not required to be so examined; and therefore the Civil Service Commission had no right whatever to state that the Secretary of the Navy undertook himself to exempt from examination certain employés of his Department.

So much for the Navy Department, wherein, I am bold to say, no addition was made after the election in November, 1884, to the class of persons who could only be appointed as a result of competitive examinations. I believe further that the case is substantially the same as to every other Department of the Government, except the Bureau of Agriculture.

There may be in these letters which the Senator has read some trifling change, but substantially all the classes of persons which were included in the classified service in all the Departments upon the 4th day of March, 1885, were included in that service on the day of election on the previous November.

Mr. President, as I then construed the law, as I construe it now, the statute itself made the classification of the four principal classes of clerks. The clerks known to the Departments as the $1,200, $1,400, $1,600, and $1,800 clerks, constituting the great bulk of clerks, are classified by statute, and it is impossible to read the civil-service act without coming to the conclusion that the statute makes the classification of this large mass of the clerks, and it does not depend upon the President, it does not depend upon the heads of the Departments, to bring those clerkships within the protection and within the purview of the civil-service act. There is no waiting for them to do it by their act, but the statute does it, and there remains to be done only the inclusion by special classifications within the act of two classes of persons-first, the employes in the post-offices and custom-houses where they exceed fifty in each, and next, the clerical force where the compensation is more than $1,800 or less than $1,200 a year. The classification of such clerkships it was indeed necessary to have made by the affirmative act of the head of the Department.

Mr. HARRIS. I rise for the purpose of asking the Senator from New Hampshire if he will yield at this time to a motion to adjourn. For a reason that I have explained to the Senator from Iowa, in charge of this bill, and which is satisfactory to him, I desire an adjournment this evening a little earlier than usual and certainly as early as this

Mr. CHANDLER. I vield to the Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say that I had hoped to complete this bill to-night, but the Senator from Tennessee has given me a very good reason why we should have an early adjournment, and therefore I do not resist the motion.

Mr. HARRIS. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee moves that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 34 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 7, 1889, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 6, 1889.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved. SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I present the credentials of Mr. Frank P. Posey, elected to fill a vacancy in the representation of the First Congressional district of the State of Indiana, and I ask that he be sworn in.

Mr. Posey appeared and was duly qualified by taking the oath required by law.

PROVISIONAL AGREEMENT WITH CREEK NATION OF INDIANS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message of the President:

To the Congre

To the Congress:

I transmit herewith for approval and ratification a provisional agreement lately entered into between the Government of the United States and the Creek Nation of Indians through their duly authorized representatives, and which has been approved by the national council of said nation, by which agreement the title and interest of the said Creek Nation of Indians in and to all lands in the Indian Territory or elsewhere, except such as are held and occupied as the homes of said nation, are ceded to the United States.

The eighth section of the Indian appropriation bill approved March 3, 1885, authorized the President "to open negotiations with the Creeks, Seminoles, and Cherokees for the purpose of opening to settlement under the homestead laws the unassigned lands in the Indian Territory ceded by them, respectively, to the United States by the several treaties of August 11, 1866, March 21, 1866, and July 9, 1886." This section also contains an appropriation in furtherance of its purpose, and requires that the action of the President thereunder should be reported to Congress.

The "unassigned" lands thus referred to should be construed to be those which have not been transferred by the United States in pursuance of the treaties mentioned in the section quoted.

The treaty with the Creeks is dated June 14, 1866. It was confirmed by a Senter resolution passed July 19, 1866, and was proclaimed August 11, 1866. (14 Stats, 785.)

The third article of the treaty makes a cession of lands in the following words:

"In compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon, the Creeks hereby cede and convey to the United States, to be sold to and used as homes for such other civilized Indians as the United States may choose to settle thereon, the west half of their entire domain, to be divided by a line running north and south; the eastern half of said Creek lands, being retained by them, shall, except as herein otherwise stipulated, be forever set apart as a home for said Creek Nation; and in consideration of said cession of the west half of their lands, estimated to contain 3,259,550 acres, the United States agree to pay the sum of 30 cents per acre, amounting to $w75,168."

The provision that the lands conveyed were "to be sold to and used as homes for such other civilized Indians," etc., has been steadily regarded as a limitation upon the grant made to the United States. Such a construction is admitted to be the true one in many ways, especially by the continual reservation of the ceded lands from settlement by the whites, by the sale of a portion of the same to Indians, by the use of other portions as the home of Indians, and also by various provisions in proposed legislation in Congress. Thus the bill now pending for the organization of Oklahoma provides for the payment to the Creeks and Seminoles of the ordinary Government price of $1.25 per acre, less the amount heretofore paid.

The section of the law of 1885 first above quoted appears also to have been passed in contemplation not only of the existence of a claim on the part of the Creeks, but of the substantial foundation of that claim in equity, if not in law, and in acknowledgment of the duty of the Government to satisfactorily discharge the claim of the Indian people before putting the land to the free uses of settlement and Territorial occupation by whites.

But it seems to have been considered that so far as the lands had been assigned they may fairly be taken to be such as under the treaty were "to be sold." As to these, they having been assigned or "sold" in accordance with said treaty, the claim of the Creeks thereto has been entirely discharged, and the title from the United States passed unburdened with any condition or limitation to the grantees. This seems to be an entirely clear proposition.

The unassigned lands must b claim thereto.

I. In that part of these lands called the Oklahoma country no Indians have been allowed to reside by any action of the Government, nor has any execution been attempted of the limiting condition of the cession of 1866.

The quantity of these lands, carefully computed from the surveys, is 1,392,-

II. The remainder of these unassigned lands has been appropriated, in some degree, to Indian uses, although still within the control of the Government.

Thus, by three executive orders, the following Indian reservations have been created:

Acres. 619, 450, 59

This shows the quantity of lands unassigned but to some extent appropriated to Indian uses by the Government, amounting to. 1, 277, 050.19

For the lands which are not only unassigned, but are unoccupied, and which have been in no way appropriated, it appears clearly just and right that a price of at least $1.25 should be allowed to the Creeks. They held more than the ordinary Indian title, for they had a patent in fee from the Government. The Osages of Kansas were allowed $1.25 per acre upon giving up their reservation, and this land of the Creeks is reported by those familiar with it to be equal to any land in the country. Without regard to the present enhanced value of this land, and if reference be only had to the conditions when the cession was made, no less price ought to be paid for it than the ordinary Government price. Therefore, in this provisional agreement which has been made with the Creeks, the price of $1.25 has been settled upon for such land, with the deduction of the 30 cents per acre which has already been paid by the Government therefor.

As to the remainder of the unassigned lands, in view of the fact that some use has been made of them of the general character indicated by the treaty of 1866, and because some portion of them should be allotted to Indians under the general allotment act, and to cover the expenses of surveys and adjustments, a diminishment of 20 cents per acre has beed acceded to. There is no difference in the character of the lands.

Thus, computing the unassigned and entirely unappropriated land, being the Oklahoma country, containing 1,392,704.70 acres, at 95 cents per acre, and the remainder, which has been appropriated to the extent above stated, being 1,277,650.19 acres, at 75 cents per acre, the total price stipulated in the agreement has been reached—$2,208,357.10.

But as it was desirable that the Indian title should be beyond all question extinguished to all parts of the land ceded by the Creeks in 1866, with their full consent and understanding, the agreement of c

I am convinced that such ratification will be of decided benefit to the Government, and that the agreement is entirely free from any suspicion of unfairness or injustice towards the Indians.

I desire to call especial attention to the fact that to become effective the agreement must be ratified by the Congress prior to the 1st day of July, 1889.

The draught of an act of ratification is herewith submitted.

After the gentleman shall have occupied his ten minutes the that were incurred by the original stockholders. Look at all the money

Chair will endeavor to divide the remaining time equally between those opposing and those favoring the report.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] takes the floor I desire to announce, as it is evident that there will be no time to-day for the consideration of the Army appropriation bill, that I shall not call it up until to-morrow.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was before the House

Mr. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was before the House for consideration I cheerfully supported it in all its different stages, because from the beginning I was in favor of this scheme of building a canal across the Isthmus; but in one material part and one very vital part the conference report out-Herods even the provision in the original bill. By the terms of section 1 of the original bill fully paid-up stock could be issued for any real or personal property or for any concessionary rights which this corporation might acquire. That provision was stricken out by the House and an amendment was adorted prowas stricken out by the House, and an amendment was adopted providing, in substance, that all stock, except so much as might be required to pay for the concession, should be paid for in cash. Now, the House conferees, by the first amendment, have not only agreed to strike out that House amendment, but they have gone beyond what the original Senate bill provided, and have authorized the issuance of unlimited stock, not only for all the real and personal property of the corporation, not merely for the concessionary rights, but also for any work or material that may be supplied in the future. In other words, construing that provision and the amendment agreed to as to section 3, every bit of this stock can be issued for truck (if I may use that expression), and not a single dollar of it need be issued for cash. I will read from the original bill the provision in its original form:

It may receive, purchase, hold, and convey such real and personal estate, property, and rights of property, or concessionary rights as may be necessary to carry into effect the purposes of this act; may issue stock to the amount of the value thereof in payment therefor, and the stock so issued shall be declared and taken to be full-paid stock and not liable to any further calls or assessments.

The House modified this by striking out the following words:

May issue stock to the amount of the value thereof in payment therefor, and the stock so issued shall be declared and taken to be full-paid stock and not liable to any further calls or assessments.

And inserting in lieu thereof an amendment requiring that the stock should be paid for in cash, which amendment is worded as follows:

All shares, stocks, bonds, certificates, or other securities which the company may issue to raise the corporate capital shall be executed and issued at the principal office in the city of New York; and all such shares, stocks, bonds, certificates, or other securities shall be disposed of only for cash, to be paid into the company treasury and used for corporate purposes: Provided, That this shall not apply to bonds or securities issued under Article L. of the concession of Nicaragua to the canal association.

Now, here is what the conferees of the House have agreed to; and, as I said a moment ago, it out-Herods even the original bill. In addition to the authority conferred in the original bill this conference report provides that this corporation—

May issue stock to the amount of the just value of such estate, property, and rights and for work and labor done or materials provided in the execution of the work of constructing said ship-canal; and the stock issued for these purposes shall be deemed paid-up stock and shall not be liable to any further calls or assessments.

No matter at what rate that work, that property, that truck, that plunder is put in, no matter if it is put in at the rate of 25 cents or 50 cents on the dollar, the stock issued for it is to be deemed fully paid up, and all the stock, even to the extent of the whole $200,000,000, can be issued for such truck, as I shall proceed to show. I will read section 3, which the conferees have agreed to, and which ostensibly provides for a certain amount of the stock being issued for cash, but which I shall show contains an exception which renders that provision entirely nuga-tory. Here is the language of the provision as the conferees have agreed

SEC. 3. That no certificates for stock, except as otherwise provided in this act, shall be issued till at least 10 per cent. of the par value thereof shall be fully paid for in money, and such money deposited in the treasury of said company, etc.

"That no stock shall be issued except as otherwise provided."
What has been otherwise provided? It is otherwise provided by the first amendment agreed to by the conferees that stock may be issued for property, concession, material, and labor to the full amount authorized by this bill. In other words, not a single dollar in stock need be paid for in cash. These projectors or incorporators can go to work and issue all this stock to themselves and say that it is for property, that it is for materials, that it is for labor, and then they can mort-gage the property, as was done in the Crédit Mobilier enterprise; they can mortgage it to raise what little cash they need in addition to float the enterprise, thus getting the stock for a mere bagatelle; while the money, if any is needed, is obtained by bond and mortgage on the property in the usual way.

This, my fellow-members, is simply giving them an opportunity, and inviting them to do what the "Big Four" did in the case of the Central Pacific Railroad. Now I submit, while it is a laudable enterprise to incorporate this canal company, while it is a matter of great national importance to have a canal across that Isthmus, and we ought to have it by all means, we sitting here as legislators ought not to be guilty of setting a trap for the unwary. Look at all the little fortunes of widows and orphans that were sunk in the Northern Pacific road—the losses that has been sunk in the Union and Central Pacific—the money of in-nocent stockholders. And shall we here now, with the experience of nocent stockholders. And shall we here now, with the experience of the past in regard to all those Crédit Mobilier enterprises, all those "construction rings"—shall we here in such an open and palpable manner spread out this trap and leave it in the shape that the conferees have agreed on in this report? They have not only been content to adopt the provisions of the original Senate bill as it came to us, and which we said by our amendments was improper and unjust, but, if I may use a gambling expression, they have "seen" the original Senate bill, and in that respect have "gone it a great deal better."

For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I shall have to vote against the adoption of this report. I think this bill should be sent back and this matter cured. While perhaps it might be proper to allow this company to issue stock for the amount of what property they have now on hand, including the concession, I submit that as to their future company to issue stock for the amount of what property they have now on hand, including the concession, I submit that as to their future operations, the fair and honest way to do, and we ought not to teler-ate anything else, is to require them to issue and sell their stock for cash and hire the work to be done on cash principles. We should not cash and hire the work to be done on cash principles. We should not permit or tolerate anything in the form of a Credit Mobilier. Why, sir, this measure in its present state is calculated to enable this company to do what was done in the case of the Northern Pacific Railroad fin my own State. It is calculated to afford an opportunity for a "construction ring." The leading projectors of this company can form themselves into a little collateral side corporation—some kind of a "construction company;" they can issue to themselves this stock and say, "It is all for material and labor;" and then in addition they can get what money they may be able to get by the sale of bonds and stock.

Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes that I have remaining I do not know that I desire to go any further into this question. I have simply called the attention of the House to this one point, and I submit it to any gentleman on this floor who believes in honesty and integrity on the part of the nation as well as on the part of individuals, whether it is just and proper to incorporate into this bill this miserable, mercenary, outrageous net and thus entrap the unwary.

Mr. CLARDY. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Kelley].

Mr. Kelley. Mr. Speaker, I have troubled the House very rarely during this session, and have no disposition to speak now except as I am impelled by a sense of duty. I regard the construction of the Nicaragua Canal as essential to the maintenance of our just influence on the American continent-an influence which the world recognizes as the Monroe doctrine.

But, more than that, sir, its construction is demanded by other than international considerations; it is necessary to the internal development of our country. Time will not permit me to go into detail, but I call the attention of the gentlemen from the Pacific coast to the fact that with all the marvelous mineral wealth of that coast she suffers from the want of one mineral, and that the most valuable of all—the one by which all others are fused and separated from the dross and earth from which without coal they are inseparable. It has no coalfields; the coal you find upon the wharves of San Francisco is brought from a great distance, and much of it is of a low grade, sulphurous, unfit for many uses, and liable to spontaneous combustion upon the wharves and under open sheds.

The supply of coal from Washington Territory is insufficient for the expansion of the productive industries of the Pacific coast. Coal will not bear transportation for thousands of miles over such regions as our Rocky Mountains. Those mountains, destined to be the home of vast populations and to disclose unsuspected volumes and sources of wealth, are a barrier to cheap commerce in bulky commodities such as fuel between the two coasts of our country. Yes, sir, they are barriers which, by reason of the cost they impose upon the transportation of coal, prevent the development of the Pacific coast and exclude it from commerce with the most marvelous fuel-bearing region of the world, the coal-beds of Tennessee and Alabama. To offset this mountain barrier there is in Nicaragua, a neighboring and friendly state, a canal route, requiring but a few miles of construction, its main distance being traversable by river and one of the most beautiful of the fresh-water lakes of the country and half as large as Lake Ontario.

Here is an available gateway between the two coasts; and if we will, as we should have done long ago, deepen the harbor of Mobile and improve the water ways from the coal-fields of Tennessee and Alabama, we can give California a supply of coal as cheap as it is obtained in we can give California a supply of coal as cheap as it is obtained in many parts of Pennsylvania from her vast stores—give it the cheap coal of those undeveloped States by water transportation from the fields in which it is mined to the ports of the Pacific coast.

Therefore I say, sir, and I thank the gentleman for having yielded me these few minutes, I shall cheerfully vote for this bill, and shall not scan it, as it seems to me my friend from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] does, with microscopic vision in the hope of discovering possible harm which may come to some unknown widow or orphan. I contemplate which may come to some unknown widow or orphan. I contemplate the great magnitude of the work, and grieve that our Government can not construct and manage it. I consider the possibility of placing this coal of our Southern States at low cost and in adequate quantities on the Pacific coast.

I would, were it possible for us to construct this work and control it on foreign soil, gladly promote the measure. I can see no other means of guarding the sole gateway of water transportation between our two coasts than by authorizing this canal to be built by a company organized under our laws and with an American directorate under provisions which this bill contains. One fact is indisputable—that a water way across the territory of the friendly state of Nicaragua is essential to the maintenance of our dignity among nations and the full development of the resources and trade of both coasts of the American continent. [Applause.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, it is due to the House I should say that in the remarks made by me yesterday on the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, as it affected the rights of the asserted power of Great Britain and this country to regulate the tolls of this canal, I gave it a latitudinarian country to regulate the tons of this canal, I gave it a latitudinarian construction which perhaps is not altogether warranted. A hasty reading of the treaty led me into this error, and I find on a more careful examination of it that the means intended to be instituted under that treaty, for the purpose of regulating tolls, was simply a reservation on the part of the Government of the United States and that of Great Britain of the right to determine for themselves, or each for itself, as to the reasonableness of the tolls, and in case either country should judge the tolls were unreasonable and discriminated against one Government or the other, that particular Government had the right under the treaty to withdraw this protection from the canal itself, and in that way to enforce its idea of what the tolls should be. I say that is as far as the treaty itself can be construed to go. Inasmuch as the two Govern-ments agreed to extend their protection to the canal they required the canal company should make no discrimination against either by imposing any unreasonable tolls, and that on a breach of those conditions they should withdraw their protection.

The amendment I have been contending for in this bill might go a little further, but it will carry this principle, that inasmuch as we are creating a corporation, which is the creature of Congress, to exercise authority, and to which we are committed as a matter of contract, we are compelled in good faith to protect the property of this company in Nicaragua, and there is no doubt about that. I say, in view of that protection which we must necessarily give, I think it is but right we should reserve in this bill power to withdraw that protection whenever in the judgment of the Government they are not acting in good faith towards this Government or its citizens; whenever they discriminate against our Government and in favor of others, or discriminate against our commerce, then we have the right to withdraw that protection. When we grant the charter we grant it on certain conditions that we have the right to make. This is one of them, and a very important and controlling one. No one can complain if we enforce these conditions by withdrawing our protection, as we have a right to do, a right reserved in the bill itself. That, Mr. Speaker, was the spirit and the idea of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and nothing more; and I am willing, so far as I am personally concerned, to agree to a modification of the amendment I proposed, to carry out that view of the subject.

Having said that much, deeming it but just to myself and to the House, I now yield the floor.

Mr. DINGLEY. Before the gentleman from Missouri takes his seat will he permit me to ask him a question? I wish to ask if he does not think the reservation of the right to alter, amend, or even to abrogate the treaty would secure to the United States all that is substantial as to their rights?

Mr. BLAND. I do not wish to leave it to any construction or supposition. In all the treaties it is reserved in express language that when such and such things occur we have the right to withdraw the protection. There should be no room for misconception, no ground for misunderstanding. It should be in plain and explicit language, embodied in such terms that it can not be misunderstood.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of the bill as it has been returned to us from the Senate. I was not altogether in favor of it as it passed this House originally. It was emasculated by favor of it as it passed this House originally. It was emasculated by the House to a certain extent, and in my judgment emasculated for the purpose of defeating it, if not by the votes of the two Houses of Congress, at least by making its provisions so impracticable that no one would be willing to undertake the formation of a corporation under it to carry out its provisions

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Wilson] was absolute death to the project. The idea of a construction company organized inside of the canal company seems to haunt the gentleman and cause him to so far lose his balance, the equipoise of his judgment, that he loses sight—although he professes to be in favor of the project—loses sight of the fact that the intention of the bill is to create and not to prevent the incorporation of a Nicaraguan Canal company. By the terms of that amendment the stock is not assignacompany. By the terms of that amendment the stock is not assignable until it is fully paid in cash. The gentleman, it is true, in response to an interrogatory as to the position he assumed in that regard, says that that position may be avoided by not assigning on the books of the company the stock, but by transfer from hand to hand; or, in other words, he incorporates a prohibition into the law which does not prohibit, a protection against stock speculation which does not protect, because by his own admission the very thing done and which he says is harmful and which he desires to prevent, and which, he insists, ought not to be done in justice to the stockholders, can be done in another

But, sir, under the provision of the bill a man invests in the stock and pays 10 per cent, of the value of it. He can not, in that event, put the stock up as collateral. Why? Because the man who would lend money upon the stock does not know what assessments may be called for in the future; does not know the capacity of the borrower to pay the assessments if called for, and, in other words, if he makes the loan upon it, he takes as collateral a thing which has altogether a problematical value, and which, in the very nature of affairs, can not have a fixed or certain value. If you die owning the stock your children can not avail themselves of what you have paid upon the stock unless they possess the means to make full payment of it, or some one is willing to advance the money for that purpose; and whether you may pay up the full face value of the stock or not depends not only upon whether you have the money to pay it with, but whether the company has reached that stage of its affairs when it requires an assessment, or is willing to receive the full value of the stock. So you rob the investment of all value as property, strip it of all commercial quality as an investment, and make it a cave in the earth where your money is lodged to be forever unfruitful and never to see the light of the day until certain contingencies shall happen, which may never happen at all.

In regard to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr.

In regard to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Holman] I regret that it has not been stricken out in its entirety. It only seeks to affirm the law as it is, but whether it affirms it fully, or whether it conveys something else, I am not prepared to say, except that, as is well known, the assertion of a proposition within a general rule is always dangerous. No lawyer, no statesman will undertake to do it without the utmost misgiving and hesitancy. What does the proposition mean? Can you tell? Can I tell? What man can imagine the construction that may be placed upon it twenty-five, fifty, or a hundred years from now? It is not what I may understand it to mean, or what you may understand it to mean. The men who make laws do not, as a rule, interpret them. We may think we have expressed clearly a proposition which another generation will find we have not only not expressed clearly, but about the meaning of which there is material doubt, or which may mean something entirely different from what we thought we said. This provision must run the gantlet of the courts, the gantlet of future legislative bodies; and it is an act of temerity always, when there is a well-settled rule of law recognized throughout the entire civilized world, for it is a rule recognized throughout the entire civilized world, for it is a rule recognized throughout the civilized world—I say it is an act of temerity, under such circumstances, for the purpose of acting with unusual caution, to undertake to express it differently or to re-express it, if you are satisfied with the rule. It is an act of andacity to undertake to do a thing of that kind, for the expression itself may dwarf and minify the rule and circumscribe its operation. I think I know the reason of the amendment. The reason is not, and my respect for the gentleman from Indiana, which is very great, prevents me from believing that the reason is that he wishes to reassert a rule which is in the horn-books of the law, which all men who know the law recognize, but I think

I can say to the gentleman, that while in a degree that rule must be clung to, yet the time has passed when it may stand as a phantom to frighten us from the true interests of this country. All commerce is entanglement. Commerce is the society of nations. You can not be a commercial nation and be isolated. Why, this very minute voices from all parts of the world warn us of it—voices from Canada, from Panama, and from Samoa. The voices come from wherever foreign nations have planted their flags, have reared colonies, or seek to obtain commercial foothold.

The attempt to arrest and to make it impracticable for American enterprise, whether in the form of a corporation or in other forms, to plant itself in foreign countries is too late. That day has passed. We are no longer in our nonage. We are no longer weak, but the time has come for a haughty—dictatorial, if you please—American policy, and certainly for a wise commercial policy, which is not to be circumscribed by any quips as to the extent of our commercial powers. A great deal has been said of the prohibitions of the Constitution, and about that I will only add a word. This argument of the Constitution has been brought to an attenuated point. It has become a gauzy argument, a perfunctory argument. The Constitution is not a fetich, a malignant power, to be propitiated by the sacrifice to it of the happiness and prosperity of the country. I am a strict constructionist. I believe in a strict construction of the Constitution. I say that emphatically; but a construction which will dwarf the implications of the Constitution, which would rob us of the power to adopt just and necessary methods of enforcing it, that is a construction unwarranted by the Constitution itself, and unwarranted by any rule of reason.

tion, which would rob us of the power to adopt just and necessary methods of enforcing it, that is a construction unwarranted by the Constitution itself, and unwarranted by any rule of reason.

Gentlemen may not wish to do a thing. That is one question. But we are not to argue from the thing to be done back to the principle, but from the principle to the thing. It is not a question as to whether we desire it, but whether we have the power to do it. Let us settle the power and clearly define all its limitations, and after we have done that, then the question of discretion arises, and we will determine what we will do under that power and what we will not do under it.

Now, the name of Chief-Justice Marshall was invoked here. Why, before the case of Gibbons vs. Ogden, and especially in that case, he laid the foundations of the boundary, so to speak, of the power of Congress, and of this Government, under the clause regulating commerce abroad and at home. He laid them in a manner which is unmistakable in Gibbons vs. Ogden. He says that under that power an embargo even may be laid, as a mercantile power, instead of as a military measure, and that same doctrine has been clung to ever since. It is fully expressed in the counterfeiting case of the United States vs. Marigold, which gentlemen will do well to read as showing the complete, the exclusive, and I may say the tremendous power which the Federal Government possesses for the regulation of commerce.

Some distinction was made during the argument here concerning

Some distinction was made during the argument here concerning what we might do at home and what we might do abroad. If there is any restriction upon our power under the commerce clause at home, it is created solely and absolutely by the relation of the States to the Government and not by any language which is contained in the Constitution of the United States. Our power to regulate foreign commerce is affluent. It embraces the world. It is a power which civilized governments everywhere exercise over their commerce. There is no limitation to that power. There is no limitation to it save the discretion or the wisdom which we choose to exercise in the application of it.

And, indeed, to return to Justice Marshall, in the case of McCullough against the Bank, if gentlemen will take the trouble to read it they will find an unanswerable argument in favor of erecting corporations for this very purpose. It is true that Justice Marshall says in effect the erection of corporations is not with us, as with the British Crown, a mere act of prerogative and as such a substantive power, but that it is incidental to other powers when it may be necessary and beneficial. So that the argument that case makes is clear, and is in no way uncertain, that we possess the power to establish the corporation. In the case of California against the Pacific Railroad, cited by the gentleman from Maryland yesterday, our possession of that power is distinctly affirmed. In that decision the court spoke with no uncertain sound. They are emphatic upon the subject of the power of Congress to institute corporations of this kind.

Now, sir, there is no doubt about the commercial power. In regard to the exercise of the treaty power, I agree entirely with the gentleman from Alabama; but we are exercising the commerce power, and there is no doubt about that power. Our foreign commerce is not here on the floor. It is not in the port of New York; it is not on the plains of Kansas. Our foreign commerce is like the winds that bear it—it is everywhere—and it is to be regulated not where it is not, but where it is; and some of it, gentlemen, is along the coast towards the scene of this proposed canal, down around the Horn, by that circuitous route which costs so much time and so much money to these people, and on the railroads between the Atlantic and Pacific.

Now, we have had a great deal said in this debate about the regulation of tolls. I agree entirely with the remark which was made here yesterday in a colloquy by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. Reed]. How are you going to regulate these tolls—what potency have you here to do it?

There is only one substantial regulation of a matter of that kind. That regulation comes from competition. It comes, too, from the just, the reasonable sense of mankind concerning it. It will come from the necessities of commerce. If the corporation charge you too much by the Nicaragua route then you will go around the Horn, or, if you choose, by one of the several lines of railroad; or, in other words, by the route which will convey your freight cheapest from here to the Pacific. I do not wish to say anything unkind of any gentleman here; I do not wish to intimate anything unkind; but I have observed on the floor of this House that even men who are bitterly opposed to railroads oppose everything looking to the improvement of the water ways of this country. I find men from the neighborhood of the great Pacific railroads—whether they are inoculated with some disease of the imagination, or of the understanding, or of the conscience, by their close contiguity to those roads, I know not—but I find these men almost universally standing up here and opposing measures like that which is now under consider ation. I do not know why it is so; I impute no bad motives; but I say that it is a fact, and certainly it would not be unkind, certainly it would not be unfair, to connect the two facts-their contiguity to these railroads and their opposition to measures of this kind-and to speculate, at least, upon what may be the moving cause in the matter.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is a step in the right direction. This is a bold—no, not bold, because even as the bill stands it is emasculated, it is fimid, it is hesitating—but, in comparison with our past, this is a bold step in the direction of the destiny of this country. We are carrying the flag into the region of Central America; we are carrying it with the indorsement of the Government. We are putting ourselves where, though we may not be pecuniarily liable, we shall be morally liable and responsible for the safety, the protection, of a great American enterprise which will help to spread our commerce over the world. That, I say, is a step, a great step in comparison with the past, and I for one hope that that step is only a prelude to the day when the nation will follow, and we will plant our feet as a people in those regions, and the flag shall wave over the State of Nicaragua, a State of the United States of America. [Applause.]

Mr. CLARDY was recognized.

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that some gentleman on the other side be now heard, but if the Chair recognizes me, I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. Kere].

Mr. Kerr. Mr. Speaker, there was a good deal said yesterday by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Bland] about the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. I do not think we ought in this bill to assume any offensive treaty. I do not think we ought in this bill to assume any onensive attitude in regard to that matter, because it is entirely unnecessary. I think the United States ought to pursue a steady policy, with the view of developing its own national commerce. We already spend in this country, if everything is considered, a hundred million dollars a year for the maintenance of our national commerce. It is not proposed in this bill to add to the amount of that expenditure. It is only proposed that the United States shall give its countenance to a great project which will be of more advantage in developing our national commerce than all the money that we now expend for that purpose, which will do more to increase the prestige of the United States in the Gulf of Mexico and give us an influence in sustaining and developing our American theories on the American continent than all our present expenditure.

It is not proposed in this bill that we shall do anything about the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. There is no reference to that treaty in the bill; but certainly if we should put into it the declaration which is sought to be put into it by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] it would necessarily involve, in an offensive way, the question of the supremacy of the United States with respect to that matter.

In regard to the question of the regulation of tolls, we have never, even in our own internal commerce in this country, assumed to fix tolls. We have only taken the position in the interstate-commerce law, as I understand it, that tolls should be fair and reasonable; and certainly until we do assume to fix the rate of tolls in our own internal commerce, and to say just how much capital invested in railroad enterprises shall receive by way of return on the investment, we ought not to assume or attempt to do it in an enterprise outside of the limits of the United States. I do not think that there ought to be any question that this Government has the power over this subject that is sought to be exercised in this bill. It has that power by virtue of the power to regulate commerce which is granted in the Constitution, and all that is asked here is simply that we shall give to this corporation the countenance of the American Government.

It is said that this company already has a charter from the State of Vermont. I have very grave doubts whether the charter of that State is the legitimate exercise of the power of a State in charter of material corpora-tions. A State of this Union certainly has no power over international commerce, a matter that has already been conceded to the General Government; and I believe that consistency with our American theory, as laid down in the Constitution, would require that a State should not attempt to assume control over corporations outside of the limits of the nation and fix the responsibility of the American Government in regard to such a corporation. If anything is ever done in that direction, it ought to be done by the Government of the United States and not by a State. An individual citizen in a foreign nation is protected; and I ask whether it is not right and proper that associations of individuals, where they have received the countenance of the General Government in their or ganization, should also be protected to the same extent? And is it not just that, in doing this, the limit of the power of authority of such an association should be defined in advance by the Government of the United States, in order that the company may know what they may of right do, and that we should know in advance the amount of protection and the extent of the authority that we are to exercise over them? That is the reason why such a corporation should receive a charter from the General Government; that is the reason the General Government should be the only authority to grant charters to corporations having relation to the external commerce of the United States, or to any matters outside the limits of a State.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will now recognize any gentleman who desires to speak in opposition to the adoption of the report.

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CLARDY. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WILSON] has control, I believe, of the time of the other side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I do not desire to speak at this time. Mr. CLARDY. Is there anybody else on your side who wishes to Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. This side, as I understand, has occupied more time already than the other side.

Mr. BLAND (to Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota). You had better reserve your time.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Yes, we reserve the rest of our time. Mr. CLARDY. I now yield to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY] for ten minutes.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, I should regard it as exceedingly unfortunate if through any stickling for non-essential amendments we should defeat the proposition to grant the charter to this company for the construction of the Nicaragua Canal. I should regard it as unfortunate, because it seems to me that now is the golden opportunity for the construction of this canal. It is certainly too late for us now to expect that the Government of the United States will appropriate any sufficient amount of money for the construction of such a work as this. If the people of this country and the Congress of the United States were ready to make an appropriation of the magnitude required for this enterprise, I should certainly be willing to join in securing the passage of a bill to that effect. But I am certain that we shall look in vain to the Government of this country and to Congress for any appropriation adequate to the construction of such a work as this. If constructed at all it must be constructed by some private company. It will be constructed by some private company at a very early day, if the present movement does not prove successful; and it will be constructed, too, by some private company that will be, if not under the patronage, yet under the influence, of some foreign government.

It is certain to my mind that the Panama Canal enterprise is to prove a failure, and that the only successful canal that is likely to be built is that by the way of the Nicaraguan route; and that that canal will be built, if not by this company or by the company which has obtained the concession, by another company that will obtain a concession in the

Now, it seems to me, in view of the fact that this company has obtained this concession from the Republic of Nicaragua on such favorable terms—more favorable, I am sure, than any other concession that ever will be obtained—and this being a company organized under American auspices, the majority of whose directors are to be citizens of the United States, making it essentially an American company, it is of the utmost importance that Congress should recognize the value of this enterprise and the peculiar golden opportunity which is now open to us.

All that is asked on the part of these gentlemen who have obtained this concession is a charter from Congress which shall give the recognition, so to speak, the certificate of character in the financial world, which the Government of the United States will give simply by the fact of granting this charter.

What is the objection to it? It is objected by several gentlemen that the terms of the charter are too broad; that there is not sufficient restriction upon the enterprise. Now, if we were starting out in a new policy with reference to the chartering of railroads by Congress, we might well consider whether we would not impose restrictions and limitations such as we have never employed in granting a charter in the past. But this is not a proposition to grant a charter for a railroad or for a transportation company within the limits of the United States. It is a charter for the construction of a great water way outside of the It is a charter for the construction of a great water way outside of the limits of the United States, but, although outside, essential to the interests of the commerce and the welfare of this country. Now, it seems to me that in view of the character of the enterprise, in view of the fact that it involves so many uncertainties, it will be difficult to get capital to enter into it. This is, to say the least, a very unfortunate time for us, in granting a charter, to insist upon such restrictions as in all probability will make the charter useless to those who may receive it. In other words, in view of the fact this is an especially hazardous enterprise, outside of the limits of the United States, having a value to our commerce and to the people of this country of inestimable importance, we ought not to insist on restrictions that are not absolutely ssential to the security of the enterprise.

Now, what are the points of difference upon which gentlemen are objecting to the granting of this charter? It is said, in the first place, that the conference committee have acceded to the withdrawal from the bill of the provision inserted by the House providing there shall be printed on every bond the statement that the Government of the United States is not liable. Is there any necessity for doing that? Why, sir, the Government of the United States could not possibly be liable if there were no such provision in the charter; but we have inserted in the charter that the Government of the United States shall not be

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. If the Government of the United States is not under any circumstances liable, and hence there is no necessity of printing this on the bond, then why is it necessary to put the provision in the charter itself?

Mr. DINGLEY. It was not necessary to put it in the charter itself, but gentlemen who were opposed to this measure have insisted it should be put in and friends of the measure have conceded it. But the moment it is put on the bond there is not a gentleman here who does not know it will tend to discredit that bond in foreign markets, though it might not in our own, where the circumstances are known. It will discredit it abroad for the reason that foreign gentlemen will say that the Congress of the United States, with full knowledge of this matter, have taken pains to say and have caused it to be placed on the bond as notice to everybody, "We have no confidence in the success of this enterprise."

It seems to me entirely useless as a protection for ourselves to do that, and not only useless but doing a positive injury to the company without any benefit accruing from it to ourselves.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Does my friend from Maine mean to state to us that he expects foreign investors are going to buy these bonds without investigating the charter? And if they find that provision in the charter will it not frighten them quite as much as to find it printed on the back of the bonds?

Mr. DINGLEY. By no means. The gentleman's good sense will show him the difference between these two methods of dealing with

But I will pass from that, Mr. Speaker, as I have but a few moments of time, and will notice the opposition made to the conference report because the conferees have agreed to strike out the provision adopted by the House requiring all the stock to be paid in cash, and to insert instead a provision that stock may be issued at a just value in payment for labor and material used in the construction of this canal. It is said by the substitution of that language we have opened the way to what is known as a construction company, a wheel within a wheel, a Crédit Mobilier.

Mr. ADAMS. What provision does the gentleman refer to? Mr. DINGLEY. That which changes the method of issuing the Mr. DINGLEY. That which changes the method of issuing the stock. Now, as to that point, it may be true it is almost impossible for us to frame any charter that rogues may not use it in such way as to fail to carry out the fair and just intent; but I submit to the House that there is as good opportunity under the original provision for rogues to sell this stock at 25 per cent. of its real value and then to use this money in a construction company as now. There is a better protection in the amendment reported by the conferees than in the House amendment, as the former provides that stock shall be issued only at the just value of the concession, labor, and materials.

amendment, as the former provides that stock shall be issued only at the just value of the concession, labor, and materials.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. CLARDY. I yield five minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Will the gentleman permit me to call

Mr. DINGLEY. Be brief, as I have only five minutes.
Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. You wish to understand this as it is.
If you will observe the words, it does not say stock may be issued to the just value of material and labor. Let me read what it does say:
"May issue stock to the amount of the just value of such estate, prop-mry issue stock of the another the just value? limit the words "materials and labor," which follow, as much as the concessionary rights, and this of itself opens up the whole question to the courts, if any stockholder complains that there has been "monkeying," so to speak, in the construction. In other words, it seems to me that there is more prevention of this in the amendments as adopted by the conferees than in the original bill.

But, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, it seems to me, in view of the great importance of the work, that we ought not to stick on mere matters of detail, or on provisions which are not vital. We must bear in mind that this is an enterprise that is of greater importance than any other similar work ever before undertaken in the history of the world. The praises of the world have been rung over the success of the great Suez Canal, but the Suez Canal is as nothing compared with this great enterprise now proposed in its importance to the commerce of the world, and especially to the commerce of the United States of America

Why, sir, look at the importance of the canal in the single point of regulating the tolls on the great trans-continental lines of railway. As it is now there can be no practical regulation of these tolls, because there is no competition between the roads that are pooling their issues; but the moment this great water way shall be completed, opening up an opportunity to enter into competition to every vessel of the United States that participates in our coastwise trade, that moment there comes in a competition between water ways and railways that will or itself regulate the freight and passenger rates of these great trans-conti-

And again, sir, it seems to me when we bear in mind that the practical effect of the construction of this canal will be to open up a new route for our coastwise commerce, its importance will be apparent when we remember that every vessel of the United States engaged in this trade can participate in the trade of the Atlantic as well as of the Pacific. We can but see in this canal a new bond to bind the people of the East and the people of the Pacific coast together as they have never been bound before.

Why, Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of this work I certainly hope that gentlemen in this House will not adopt the attitude of hypercriticism respecting unimportant details to such an extent as to lead to the defeat of an enterprise that is already almost successfully inaugurated, and which if inaugurated, as it will be by the passage of this bill, will open up within the next decade unquestionably a great water way connecting the Atlantic and the Pacific under American control.

Here the hammer fell.

Mr. BUCKALEW. Mr. Speaker, I desire to express my regret to the House that this bill has not been placed in a more acceptable and perfect form for the accomplishment of one of the main objects of governmental policy in its enactment, namely, to secure reasonable charges upon this work for American commerce which may hereafter be carried over the proposed line of improvement. I discover no assurance in the bill as it is now proposed to the House for its final approval, no clear and certain guaranty that the amount of stock and bonds which will be issued by the corporation will not exceed two, three, or four times over the actual cost of the work judged by their par value, the result of which will be that if the holders of the stock and bonds are to receive dividends upon the stock and interest upon their bonds at ordinary rates the commerce of the United States carried over this line, and the commerce of other countries as well, may be subjected to most grievous, unreasonable, and unjust charges, and the question in my mind is whether if the committees of the two Houses of Congress engaged in the consideration of this measure had exercised due diligence and due judgment upon the framing of this bill and amendments they could not have produced a measure more safe and secure for the public interests involved.

I agree, sir, that it is extremely difficult to create such a Samson as this and attempt to bind him with green withes—meaning amendments. Those proposed by the House upon this bill did not altogether meet the approval of my judgment. Some of them appeared to me impracticable of enforcement, at least to some extent, and others unimportant as practical propositions; and the one which has been most debated, or the two, rather, on this floor do not seem to me to possess the great importance which has been assigned to them by gentlemen arguing in their support. In the first place, the provision that certificates of stock shall not issue until the stock shall be fully paid up is not only an embarrassing and inconvenient provision as a practical one, but it can be wholly evaded.

There is no certainty that it will produce any useful effect. In fact, all the stock of this company, or the larger part of it at least, such as not issued to Nicaragua for the concession, can be covered by a construction contract, and when issued for work and labor done in the construction of this improvement it will be fully paid, and the provisions of that amendment would be completely provided for. No allegation of illegality can be made against such an arrangement, so far as I understand this bill. As for the more searching amendment, for which many gentlemen have spoken, that the stock shall be paid entirely in cash, except that which is issued for the concession, I think it is open unquestionably to the criticism made, which is that it will probably render the charter a dead piece of paper when issued, that capitalists will not take up the charter and invest their money in the work and carry it forward to the completion desired by all who favor the entercarry it forward to the completion desired by all who favor the enter-

It is an unusual provision. It is not merely embarrassing, but I resume it would be fatal to the success of the enterprise. Why, in my State, by the general law which was passed to enforce the new constitution of 1874 as to issue of stocks and bonds, provision was made that stock should only be paid for in cash or in material and labor furnished. The act followed the constitution, and made very strict provision for its enforcement. But it was supposed that capitalists would not put their money in a public improvement where they had to pay down all the money at the outset, but that they would propose and desire to carry out such improvements in the usual way where they are legitimate, namely, to pay in a portion of the stock as far as the ability of the stockholders to meet the assessments extended—to pay in 20, 40, or even 50 per cent.—and then issue bonds to raise additional money to complete the work.

Now, it seems to me that in such a project as the Nicaragua Canal, to be carried out in a foreign country subject to unknown political conditions in the future, a country of revolutions, among a people speaking a different language from our own, with possible complications with foreign powers, it would not be right to insist that the capitalists who put their money into it and carry it on should be subjected to this stringent amendment. Let them pay in part for the stock and then use the credit of the company for raising additional funds. And it seems to me that the holders of the stock having certificates in that plight should be enabled to sell and convey it in the markets of our own and other countries. In fact, it seems to me that that proposition carried to the extent proposed in the amendment of the House would defeat this bill by rendering it impracticable.

One thing that might be done under this bill would be this: Ten per cent. might be paid in on the stock and a million dollars obtained for the treasury of the company. Then a construction contract could be made and the stock and bonds issued to any amount within the limits of the charter (excluding that which is to be paid to Nicaragua for the concession), and then the result which I mentioned in the outset of my remarks will be reached, and there is no guaranty for the public against it against it.

If the work costs seventy-five or a hundred million dollars you may have three hundred millions of paper, stock, and bonds floating in our own and foreign markets; and American merchants, the owners of our mercantile ships, and the owners of foreign vessels will be charged tolls to cover a profit upon this enormous amount of paper.

Now, sir, if the committee of conference in the last moments of consideration upon this bill will turn their attention to this one point and labor upon it, I think they can bring back into this House and send back to the Senate a measure of protection to the public which this bill does not afford, protection upon a point which is of the highest importance and which will strike at the true source of evil.

In time of war this improvement will possess a value the importance of which gentlemen do not seem to apprehend.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Before you proceed to that point I would like to ask whether you have formulated anything which would cover the ground which you state should be amended.

Mr. BUCKALEW. I have acted on this subject as a member of the House and not as a member of the conference committee, and having been engaged in other labors I have not given attention to matters of form in this bill. I have only spoken from a mind enlightened to some extent by the debate which has taken place and to express my own views in order that they may accompany my votes given here upon this subject.

I wish to add, sir, a word or two upon the point upon which I commenced. Now, in a time of war, when this American canal, that is controlled by American citizens—for it is in fact to be in future as it now is in contemplation, an American improvement—it will be of immense importance to the Government of the United States. We will be in a different situation from any other country with reference to it. Our war vessels upon the Pacific side of our country can be transferred to the Atlantic or from the Atlantic to the Pacific side, so that upon each one of our great shores we can meet upon equal terms any antagonist that can strike us east or west. We have the means of transportation of our naval armaments from one sea to the other.

How different it will be with a foreign power. This canal will be closed against them. It will be sufficient if we have a naval force at either outlet—on the Gulf of Mexico or upon the Pacific coast, upon one end or the other—which will completely bar up and close this canal to a power hostile to us; whereas a foreign power that desired to use this canal would be compelled to keep a fleet at the east end of it to keep the east end open, and another fleet at the western end to keep that end open. It would have to provide against the hostility of Nicaragua itself if the latter were in alliance with us, and should permit us to send a military force there to protect the canal. Therefore, at each end of the canal, and upon any point along the line of it where we were permitted by Nicaragua, or could compel her to permit us to have a military force, we could close this improvement against any hostile foreign power. I hope that the time will come when we will secure to our country such safeguards and protection for a time of war with Great Britain, or with France, or with Germany, or any other

As to constitutional difficulties, gentlemen may talk about them in the Rotunda or somewhere else. If we have not power under a grant of control over our foreign commerce by the Constitution, and, along with that, the treaty-making power, by which we can regulate the relations of such an improvement with foreign countries—if we have not in that way power to do this thing, we have no power at all. The grants are express and complete. It is a question for the discretion of Congress. It is not an occasion where we are to look to the charter of our authority and find some specific item under a general power

In matters of internal and local concern, when we are talking about a canal or a railroad or any other work in the nature of a public improvement, we must go through the body of the instrument and find what are our relations to the States which constitute the Union, which furnish the other branch in our great division of political power; but when we leave the water's edge, whether it be the shore of the Pacine, the shore of the Atlantic, or the shore of the Gulf of Mexico, there the power of the United States is exclusive, there our jurisdiction is not bounded or limited by State rights or by State limitations. The arm of public power is not palsied or weakened when it goes forth from our shores and comes into relations with the other countries of the globe. Therefore, sir, I have no difficulty on the matter of power, and the only difficulty in my mind is that which I mentioned in the outset, that this bill, in my judgment, does not contain any substantial, reasonable provision to secure to the people of the United States using this canal reasonable charges for the services which it will render them.

Mr. CLARDY. I now yield one minute to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. O'NEILL].

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I received the following dispatch from the Merchants' Exchange of St. Louis:

We hope you will favor the majority report in favor Niearagua Canal. St. Louis and the whole Mississippi Valley is largely interested in its building and completion.

JOHN JACKSON. HENRY C, HAARSTICK. CHARLES F, ORTHWEIN. WEB, M, SAMUEL. CHARLES A. COX, President.

These men stand pre-eminent among the business men of the Mississippi for their energy, ability, and integrity. Mr. John Jackson, president of the St. Louis Elevator, has been from their inception at the head of the jetties projected by the deeply lamented James B. Eads, and contributed largely to the successful prosecution of that magnificent aid to the commerce of the Mississippi Valley.

Mr. Haarstick is at the head of the Mississippi Valley Transportation Company. Mr. Orthwein and Mr. Samuel have been the chosen heads of our great Merchants' Exchange, and Mr. Cox is its present chief.

They well represent the public sentiment of the business men of the West, who appeal to us to pass this bill and give every aid to this grand enterprise, which the commerce of the world demands and which would redound in such grand benefits to our country.

I am not familiar with all the points involved in the pending controversy concerning certain amendments, but my experience in this House led me long ago to the conclusion that you must trust to a great extent to the judgment and intelligence of the members of your com-This bill has been considered carefully by the committees in mittees. both Houses and has been practically agreed upon. I care but very little for the extreme sensitiveness manifested here concerning the bondholders. I do not know that we are called upon always to worry in regard to whether or not the bondholder shall obtain a magnificent return on his investment or whether he shall occasionally, to use a mining phrase, strike an Irish dividend in the form of an assessment. [Laughter.]

What we want is to have this canal built. It is conceded that the Panama Canal is a failure and will not be built. I believe that this project is feasible and that it will be built, and, as far as my vote is concerned, I am willing to give it to these parties who promise to build it, and also to give them all that goes with it as far as the sanction of this Government is concerned, and its protection if necessary, in order to have this cut made, which is absolutely needed for our own interests in time of peace and still more in case of war, and which will confer one of the greatest benefits that can be conferred upon the business interests of the world. I sometimes think the American people are lacking in self-assertion. [Laughter.]

A nation of sixty millions of people and destined to be the greatest nation on earth, we should lead in enterprises of this kind and not hesitate about the consequences. So long as our aim is in the direction of increased facilities for commerce and the greater benefit to humanity we can face the future without fear of peril.

The extremely conservative gentlemen who fear trouble can rest content that the people are in favor of this project and will shoulder all the responsibilities that may arise from it in the future. [Applause.] Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, the latitude taken in the consideration of this bill has been so great that even if my time were unlimited it would be impossible to refer to more than a few of the points which have been raised. I think, sir, that the old story so often repeated in this House, of the cuttle-fish muddying the water in order that he might escape, is applicable to the gentlemen who appear to be opposed to this

The distinguished gentleman and jurist from Alabama [Mr. Cobb] confined his argument to the constitutional question, supplemented by the interest he took in the "lambs" who frequent the stock exchanges and the bourses of Europe; his anxiety was lest possibly we might do something here by which those gentlemen would be inveigled into an investment and thereby lose their money. Sir, if the investors and the "lambs" of Europe, as represented by the Rothschilds and the Barings and others of the great banking houses there, are not able to take care of themselves and look out for their own interests, I do not think this House or the Congress of the United States can do it for them.

I do not propose to discuss the constitutional question, because I am not competent to do so. When the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota came to address the House on his particular amendments, the classes of the community in which apparently he took the greatest interest as investors were, I think, the carpenters, the blacksmiths, and the bakers. Mr. Speaker, what is the situation as it presents itself to us now? This bill comes into the House from a committee of conference; it is not in the power of this House to amend their report; it must either go back to the Senate with the message that the House will not concur, or it must go back with a request for a new conference. If either of these courses is decided upon, then in all human probability this bill will fail at this session to become a law.

But six before proceeding further in the request for a new conference. If

But, sir, before proceeding further in regard to the questions between the two Houses on the various amendments proposed, I will state that I had a great delicacy in speaking on this bill at all. As there undoubtedly exists in this Hall, and probably outside of it, an idea with certain gentlemen that as soon as any member of this House has by his industry and economy succeeded in securing enough of the goods of this world to give him a decent burial when he pays that debt which we must all inevitably pay, he immediately becomes an interested party in any legislation that may come before this House and is thereby disqualified to express an opinion or to cast a vote upon any measure that may be under consideration and in which the people have an interest. may be under consideration and in which the people have an interest. I desire to say that I have not at this time nor do I expect ever in the future to have any interest in this corporation, directly or indirectly. I think, sir, that the oath which is administered to a member of this House ought to be amended and that he should not only swear to support the Constitution of the United States, but should also swear that neither in personal property nor in real estate does he own to exceed $500. [Lengther.] $500. [Laughter.]

But, sir, to come down to the bill. The amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota was in substance this: First, that the stock of this company should be paid for in cash. The object of that amendment was, as he put it, to protect the stockholders; that is, that one class of stockholders should not swindle another. Now, if we consider the principle governing capital stock of corporations we find, for instance, that it would not be proper for us in chartering United States banks to say that a bank should be allowed to receive property as its capital, because we know that the only capital which a bank ought to hold is But when we come to a corporation other than a bank the same principle does not hold good. Under all laws governing capital the simple proposition is that the capital is the security upon which credit is to be based. In the case of a canal company or a railroad a franchise or property may be as valuable a security as money.

On general principles I fully agree with the views of the gentleman from Minnesota. I believe that it would be better policy to confine all subscriptions of stock to cash, and that if that had been the policy of the law under which every charter has been granted we would have been better off to-day in this country than we are now. But the gentleman has brought in here a proposition which, when you come to apply it practically, you find has never been applied in any State of this Union. The inference which might be drawn from the discussion which has taken place here is that the privilege proposed to be conferred upon this corporation to issue its stock for cash, labor, or property furnished is something new and unheard of. I had not time to examine the statttes of all the various States bearing upon this subject; but when I refer to the general railroad law of Minnesota, the gentleman's own State, what do I find? And when I go to the statutes of the State of Illinois what do I find? Absolute power conferred upon any board of directors within the same to issue its stock for about anything they want to issue it. If the gentleman wants to inaugurate that principle why did he not begin earlier and at home? I have in my hand the statutes of Minnesota, and I ask the Clerk to read an extract from them. The Clerk read as follows:

Any railroad corporation now existing or hereafter created or organized by brunder any law of this land, general or special, shall have the power to create, issue, and dispose of special stock, preferred stock, and income certificates or such amounts, in such form, and for such purpose as may be determined on.

Mr. SCOTT. You need not go any further; that is enough. It will be seen by the general statutes of the State of Minnesota, which State the gentleman represents in part, that for such purposes as the board of directors may agree upon, capital stock may be issued. I will send up to have read an extract from the statutes of Illinois.

Mr. CLARDY. I would not read them all; state what they are. Mr. SCOTT. I ask the Clerk to read a brief extract from the stattites of Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

No such corporation shall issue any stock or bonds except for money, labor, br property actually received and applied to the purpose for which such corporation was organized.

Mr. SCOTT. It will be seen, sir, that virtually the language adopted by the conference committee is in perfect harmony with the statutes of these two States with regard to the issue of stock. Therefore I call attention of the House to this fact so they may understand this is nothing new-that it has existed and does now exist in the statutes of about every State in this Union. In referring to the other amendment of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr.WILSON], in regard to prohibiting the transfer of stock which has not been fully paid, I stated yesterday in my remarks he could not point me to one single charter that has ever been granted where a certificate of stock partly paid was prohibited by any statute in force from being transferred or assigned between individuals. I do not raise the point as to the transfer of stock on the books of a company which has not been fully paid, because there is a distinction in the transfer on the books of a company and an assignment from A to B, and the title to stock passing from A to B. The gentleman's amendment prohibits the assignment of stock from A to B. It would virtually be impossible for the stock of this canal company to be subscribed if that provision should be retained in this charter.

We have got either to take the bill as it comes to us or reject it, and if we reject it the chances are it will fail to pass this session. I will not attempt to consider the importance of this canal. You can not pick up a daily paper that you do not realize the necessity for its construction. Isaw in this morning's Post that the Government's coal in the Samoan Islands is exhausted and the Secretary of the Navy is engaged in contracting for the delivery of 3,000 tons at those islands for the use of our ships which are going there to protect our interests. I find that the coal costs the Government less than $3 a ton, while the transportation of coal from here to its destination is from $12 to $14 a ton via Cape Horn or the Cape of Good Hope. If this canal were in operation to-day that coal could be delivered to points in the Pacific Ocean at $4 or $5 per ton freightinstead of $12 or $14 per ton. Whether the Government pays $12 or $14 per ton or $5 per ton is not a matter of material importance; but if you apply this great difference in cost to the transportation of the merchandise, I may say of the world, and especially of our own people, which would be saved by the construction of this canal, it becomes a very important question.

Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] in connection with this subject, and the reason which he gave for opposing it. I confess, sir, that to me it appeared a little foggy and disjointed; but I fully sympathize with him in this respect, as I have found myself in discussing questions in this House in the same situation.

There is one thing, sir, I learned early as a member of this House, that while I found no one member here knew everything, yet that the 325 members taken collectively represented an amount of learning that, spring what subject you might, it would strike some one as a familiar topic; and to make any statement here to stand uncontroverted, it was necessary to give it consideration and be sure it was right, or it hazarded a criticism when least expected. The explanation of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] this morning shows that he was materially mistaken in some of his statements made yesterday, and he as an honorable and high-minded gentleman has acknowledged that During the discussion in connection with this bill the Monroe doctrine and the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, as well as our existing treaty with Nicaragua, have been reterred to. I have no doubt, sir, that every gentleman on the floor of this House has by heart what is known as the Monroe doctrine; but perhaps the country may not be as thoroughly conversant with it, and as it is very brief I will give it here. It is to be found in President Monroe's message of 1823, and if we confine ourselves to the language and meaning as expressed by President Monroe, it is utterly impossible to give it the construction that appears to be given to it in this age:

In the discussions to which this interest has given rise, and in the arrangements in which they may terminate, the occasion has been judged proper for asserting as a principle in which the rights and interests of the United States are involved, that the American continents, by the free and independent condition which they have assumed and maintained, are henceforth not to be considered as subjects for future colonization by any European power.

It will be observed that President Monroe simply refers to colonization of any part of this continent by European powers. It does not relate to commercial relations, trade, or commerce with foreign powers of the states of North or South America. Whether the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is in force to-day or not, is a question in dispute between the two governments. It appears that the representatives of our Government claim that it is not; and after carefully reading the Clayton-Bulwer treaty, as I have, I can not but come to the conclusion that it is in perfect harmony and consistent with the Monroe doctrine, and in pursuance of the provisions of that treaty Great Britain has acknowledged it. It is true, sir, that the treaty relates to a canal which was never constructed through the territory of Nicaragua; but under that treaty Great Britain expressly agrees to abandon her protectorate over the Mosquito coast and the territory adjacent to where the proposed canal is proposed to be constructed.

In pursuance of the terms of the treaty both nations have pledged themselves that they would not fortify or in anywise take military possession of any territory on the Isthmus of Panama through which a canal could be constructed. It can not be overlooked that, for probably a century prior to the ratification of this treaty, Great Britain had acquired certain rights upon the Isthmus, long anterior to the date of the promulgation of the Monroe doctrine. There was no principle announced in the Monroe doctrine that we as a nation should colonize or take possession of the territory of any of our neighbors, but simply that we should not permit foreign powers to do so. It is true, sir, that Great Britain has not lived up strictly to the conditions, contained in that treaty, to be performed on her part. She did not withdraw her protectorate, or occupancy in fact, from certain territory on the Isthmus; but she has never positively asserted her control of that territory in the manner that she did prior to the date of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty; and no better evidence can be given in proof of this fact than when it became necessary for this Government to protect its interests on the Mosquito coast we sent a United States ship there and bombarded Greytown for the protection of American interests, and Great Britain did not raise the question that it was a casus belli against their Govern-

It appears to me, sir, that while Great Britain has not performed the obligations contained in that treaty, it is the true policy of this Government to maintain that she is bound by them. The treaty itself related, as I have said, to another canal, and whether the provisions of that treaty can be made applicable to an entirely different corporation proposing now to construct a canal across the Isthmus is a question that I do not propose to consider; but as far as I am able to judge, there are no prowhich it was then proposed to construct that would be detrimental to our interests now if applied to this company which it is proposed to grant a charter to. Sir, I think the time has about arrived in our history that we should abandon the methods of Bombastes Furioso, and that we should realize the fact that we are now one of the most powerful nations upon the earth, and that we should be exceedingly cautious as a nation in making any claims or assuming any exclusive privileges, from the fact that we are so powerful, not consistent with the rights of others, whether our equals or inferiors in population and wealth.

Here the hammer fell.] Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Scott] concedes that if this provision—I now speak of the first provision, which requires that stock issued by this corporation shall be paid in money—he concedes that if that had been the rule hitherto it would have been good for the country. No one denies that, I think. But his argument is that it is unusual, that it is something new, and that inasmuch as it has not been the rule heretofore we new, and that inasmuch as it has not been the rule heretofore we should not now introduce it as a new principle to be applied to this corporation. I think I have stated fairly his proposition.

Mr. Speaker, we have learned some lessons in the past, and if there is any one lesson that has been learned by us at greater expense than another it is that the people must guard themselves against the neverceasing, ever-increasing power of corporations of every class. At first, when we were less acquainted with them, we threw fewer restrictions around them. Why should we not continue to throw restrictions around them as the necessity therefor becomes apparent? To me this would seem to be the part of wisdom.

If this would have been a good rule heretofore the gentleman states no reason why it should not be adopted now and followed hereafter. He tacitly concedes, and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER]

He tacitly concedes, and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] who yesterday with great eloquence and force argued in favor of the report of the conference committee conceded and expressly admitted, that as this bill now stands it affords great opportunity for fraud.

Under such circumstances it is not wisdom to follow in the path that may lead to such a result, but rather to pursue such a course as will guard against it.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania, after reading from the statutes of my State to show that payment for stock is in that State allowed to be made otherwise than in money, says, "Why did not the gentleman from Minnesota commence his reforms at home?"

I admit, Mr. Speaker, that corporations, not only in my State but in most of the States, have been able to obtain concessions of extraordinary and dangerous powers, and that not unfrequently they have used those powers to the detriment of the people. But even if it were conceded that the charters of corporations in none of the States have hitherto required that stock should be paid for only in money, yet when it is admitted that this has opened the door for great frauds, and when experience has taught us that it is frequently, or perhaps I might say generally true that it has resulted in great frauds, is it not meet that we should learn wisdom from such experience?

Until very lately there has been no legislation against trusts or against discriminations or extortionate charges by common carriers; therefore by parity of reasoning it might be urged that these illegal practices should not be forbidden now. We have learned by a very severe and dear experience that we must limit and control the great power of corporations or else they will become dangerous to the people who created them.

And I hope my friend from Maine, and my other friends who agreed with me fully when this amendment was first offered, will not now be turned away in their zeal in favor of this public improvement-the importance of which I recognize, and for which I would go as far as he who goes farthest-I say I hope these gentlemen will not now turn away and hesitate about insisting on such prudent safeguards as the experience of the past has demonstrated to be necessary. The chairman of the committee in his opening argument said in this connection:

It can not be objected, Mr. Speaker, that a fabulous amount of stock may be issued; for, if the projectors of this great enterprise are to derive any benefit from it, such benefits must come from the stock, every increase of which will lessen its value.

I have heard the agents and advocates of corporations, when applying to Legislatures for enlarged powers, use just such language and make just such promises. But, alas, experience has shown that these promises have rarely been kept; that neither self-interest nor sense of duty has restrained the agents and officers of such artificial persons within bounds. Indeed, experience has shown that their interest is not usually in the line indicated. The issue of watered stock or unpaid-for stock has been one of the most common misdeeds of corporations misdeed that has unjustly taken from the people and put into the pockets of a class of men who grow rich by their wits hundreds of millions of dollars.

These corporations, I say, invariably tell us that it is unnecessary to place restrictions upon them because their interest in the enterprise is a sufficient check. But still, sir, notwithstanding their assertions, experience has demonstrated the contrary, and that we do need limita-tions and restrictions. Experience has shown that they do issue stock watered and unpaid for; and when such stock is issued it is unnecessary to argue to a body of intelligent men that it is with the purpose of collecting dividends on it, thus levying tribute upon the whole people to pay interest on a fictitious capital to men who have used their infuence and position for illegal purposes.

Mr. KERR. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him if there is any case where you put a limit upon profits or what a man may receive upon his investment, so far as to say that the amount of stock issued

Mr. KERR. Does the amount of stock issued by a corporation in any manner determine the rate of freight?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Yes, investments are made in these public improvements generally, I might say uniformly, for the income or profit that may be realized therefrom; and when the expense or cost of such an improvement is doubled the income must be doubled to pay a reasonable interest, and it usually is doubled. I do not say that this is the uniform rule, because there are exceptions to nearly every rule.

And it is wholly immaterial that part of the stock may be issued without consideration or for a nominal consideration, for such stock can not be distinguished from that issued to honest investors for a valuable and full consideration. When such fraudulent stock is issued, if the honest investor who paid for his stock gets a return for his invest-ment the holders of the fraudulent stock must also receive a like return. To thus pay dividends on stock that represents no actual capi-tal must necessarily require an increase of the tolls and freights paid by the people. Mr. KERR.

Mr. KERR. But suppose it is said in reply to that that the stock so issued is fraudulent? The Legislature will say you can not expect us then to allow dividends on fraudulent stock.

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. No, sir. Who is to distinguish the fraudulent from the honest stock? Who can? You can not say this is the stock that was issued for nothing and which is a fraud upon the public, and that is the stock for which the honest stockholder paid his money; and therefore you must rob the honest stockholder or pay interest or dividends on the watered stock and thus rob the public.

terest or dividends on the watered stock and thus rob the public.

Mr. KERR. Now answer the other question. Is there any rate of interest which the law requires to be paid on any investment of stock? Is there, in the nature of things, any such rate of interest or dividend which must be paid upon any stock?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. Oh, no.

Mr. KERR. Well, then, what is the use of talking?

Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. I am talking about what the effect is of issuing watered and fraudulent stock, and I think that any man of as much intelligence as the gentleman from Iowa can not deny that it is issued for the purpose of cetting dividends on it, and that ordinarily is issued for the purpose of getting dividends on it, and that ordinarily such dividends are gotten, and if gotten they are ultimately taken from the people.

Mr. KERR.

Mr. KERR. But in Iowa they do not accomplish that result. Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. If not, then the man who honestly Mr. WILSON, of Minnesota. If not, then the man who honesdy invests his money is beaten; and I am not willing to adopt or follow a rule that requires us, for the purpose of paying tribute to dishonest men, to wrong either honest men or the people generally.

Here the hammer fell,

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. CLARDY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL].

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I did not desire to speak in my Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I did not desire to speak in my own time yesterday or to-day as one of the conferees, because I found that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY] and the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. RAYNER] had explained so fully and so impressively, as I thought, to this House the logic of the reasons which led the conferees to present this conference report and to ask the House to adopt it. I favor this enterprise upon general principles, and, Mr. Speaker, my desire now to speak for the moment or two which I will occupy is to go upon record as favoring this great enterprise—this great international enterprise—I want to go upon the record as favoring it, and hence I have risen to say a word.

and hence I have risen to say a word.

Now, sir, I will say to my friend from Minnesota, who is an exceedingly clear-minded man, a gentleman who looks well into every subject upon which he feels interested as a member of Congress, that he need have no fear that the people can be deluded if this conference report is adopted. He has warned the people against the watered ence report is adopted. He has warned the people against the watered stock that he fears may be issued by this company. I have the Philadelphia papers of yesterday afternoon and of this morning. They have his remarks, not in full, but they have the point that he has made. My constituents are warned. The people of Pennsylvania are warned of what they should do and what they should not do, as suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota. And, Mr. Speaker, if I have any reputation at all, it is that I am apt to care for the interests of the people I represent immediately from the city of Philadelphia, as well as the people of my State. [Applause.] And I want to maintain that reputation. I am willing that my name should go down to posterity as a member of the House of Representatives caring for the interests of his people. But the gentleman from Minnesota has given this warning, and he can rest satisfied in his conscience that he has done his full duty to the people of this country, which I am sure he

Mr. Speaker, I will say this: It matters not to me who the incorporators of this company are, so that they are men who can give capital to this great enterprise, and who can attract others to give their capital to its building and completion. It is too great an enterprise to be destroyed even in the slightest degree by conditions of any kind; and I will say this, that the conferees did endeavor to bring this report into the House so that it would meet the acquiescence of the members here.

Why, sir, it may not be according to the rules to refer to the other branch of the legislative body of this country, but I want to ask if you could select anywhere in this country, in Congress or out of it, in the Senate or in the House of Representatives, greater legal minds than the Senatorial conferees—Senator SHERMAN, Senator EDMUNDS, and Senator MORGAN? I would like to know where they can be found. And they gave their time and attention to this subject in connection with the House conferees, guarding every possible interest, or attempting to do it, and to allow to be kept upon this bill limitations of the powers which would lead to a legitimate building of the great enterprise.

We have built the Pacific railroads from the Pacific to the Atlantic. I wish I had been in Congress at the inception of that great idea. was here perhaps to aid in legislation in some part. Maybe some of the matters connected with those roads may be criticised as to who had the control of those roads; but we have crossed the continent from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Now, I say let us build this great international work, and let us give to capitalists the chance to put their money into it without aiding to destroy it by improper amendments. [Applause,

Mr. CLARDY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas

[Mr. PETERS]

Mr. PETERS. I am in hearty sympathy with the object sought to be accomplished by the legislation under consideration. It seems to me that the shortening of the water route between the West and the East by thousands of miles is one that should attract the attention of legislators in both branches of Congres

The situation of our country is such that we have everything to gain and nothing to lose by the chartering of this company. It certainly will not increase the cost of transportation between the West and the East if this water route is established. In the opinion of all who have spoken upon this question, the necessary tendency of this legislation will be to decrease the cost of transportation between the West and the Not only this, but one of the objects sought to be accomplished by this bill is to open up this water route under the auspices of the American nation, and by the granting of this charter and by the pro-visions contained in it we retain future control over this canal if it is built. Now, in order to carry out this project a large amount of capital is necessary, and the investment is an uncertain one. It is not known whether this will be a remunerative investment or not. It is almost impossible at this stage to obtain a correct estimate, either of the cost or the value of the enterprise, and if the investment is an uncertain one, then capital must have some extraordinary incentive to induce it to invest.

Why is it that capital now invests in Government bonds at a nominal rate of 3 or 4 per cent. interest? It is because the investment is an absolutely safe one. It was not so when the life of our country was in danger, when we were fighting to maintain its very existence, and accordingly extraordinary inducements had to be held out to capital to invest in our bonds at that time. So it is with this project; if you desire capital to invest in it, you must hold out extraordinary inducements as a compensation for the risk that capital must incur in the enterprise. Now, if the proposition that all the stock must be paid for in cash at par is to be placed in this charter, then you simply require capital to agree to take all the risk and yet to receive no greater remuneration than it can now obtain from investments that are absolutely muneration than it can now obtain from investments that are absolutely certain. You require that the capitalist who invests in this enterprise shall be satisfied with the same return that he can obtain by an absolutely certain investment in Government bonds.

Mr. COBB. What extraordinary inducement do you propose that the Government shall hold out to the projectors of this enterprise?

Mr. PETERS. I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the Government should hold out to the projectors of this enterprise and to the capital that engages in it the inducement of ample remuneration for the risk which it takes, as well as for the use of the capital that is invested. But, aside from all that, if there ever comes a time, as is apprehended by some of the gentlemen who have spoken against this proposition, when the capital invested in this enterprise shall attempt to oppress the public, why then we have, by the very terms of this charter, the right to enact such laws as will prevent anything of the kind, because in the provisions of this bill we reserve to the Congress of the United States the right to amend or repeal any or all of the provisions of this charter.

Mr. CLARDY. I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Alabama

[Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, during the little time allotted to me in the closing moments of the debate upon this important question I desire to express myself as most thoroughly in favor of the passage of this bill; and that the votes now to be taken will be an overwhelming victory for the friends of the measure I do not think there can be a shadow of doubt. The long and able discussion upon the bill has only tended to strengthen the views of its adherents and add recruits to the increasing majority who will now record their votes in its favor. The advocacy of the bill is a demand for progress and development.

While other nations are exercising their power to the fullest extent possible to expand their commerce, and in that way to increase their prestige as nations and the wealth of their people, I do not think we have a right to refuse to our own citizens the simple aid of a charter to authorize them to open this great work, which will do more than anything else that has been proposed to extend the commerce and trade of the United States. In the existing condition of our country, when the products of our farms and factories so far exceed the purchasing power of our people, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker that we might go far beyond what is contemplated in this bill in opening this great highway which will do so much towards restoring the commercial supremacy of our country. England, France, Germany, and other nations are aiding the laudable efforts of their citizens for the extension of trade and commerce; we are asked by the opponents of this bill to repose quietly while the best fields of enterprise are being occupied by our rivals.

We are told to do nothing, while European nations are extending their commerce and influence to every port on the globe. We are asked to reject the inviting field of enterprise which the projectors of the Nicaragua Canal tender to the people of the United States. The completion of this great work will make the Gult of Mexico the center of commerce of the world. It will put new life into all the ports of that great inland ocean. They will become coaling stations for the navies and merchant marine of the globe. The ships of all nations would then come to our Gulf, our Atlantic, and our Pacific ports.

New business would spring up with all our sister republics of South America, and we would practically control the trade of the Pacific coast of that great country.

Our almost lost commercial relations with China and India would be restored and our supremacy upon the ocean would once more be regained.

Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CLARDY. Mr. Speaker, I can readily understand why gentle-men who believe as my friend from Alabama [Mr. Cobb] does, that Congress has no power to pass the bill under consideration, should manifest an earnest interest in trying to defeat its passage; but I confess my inability to properly estimate the zeal displayed by gentlemen who do not regard the measure as subject to any constitutional objec-

I can not conclude that they are unmindful of the revolution that will be wrought in the world's commerce by uniting the oceans by means of a canal, or that they are indifferent to the commercial pros perity of our country, but I must think they underestimate the diffi-culties that would confront the projectors of this great work with the most liberal charter that could be granted. I am frank to say that even if I believed that the bill gave to the incorporators the advan-tages indicated by gentlemen, which it does not, I should support it. I have a great regard for the people who have money to invest in corporate stocks, but my tender affection for them does not cause me to be ambitious of making them the wards of the nation.

I would do no injustice to the poor people who have an abundance of money to convert into canal stock; but I would like to do something for the American citizens who propose to reduce the distance from New York to San Francisco 8,800 miles, and make the latter city 9,000 miles nearer New Orleans than it is to-day. The Government has declined to enter into a treaty for the building of a canal across the Isthmus, and we are about to serve notice on the nations of the world that they shall not build it; yet when a simple proposition is made to clothe with corporate powers an association of American citizens to enter upon the work, without expense to the Government, and with absolute exemption from all liability, gentlemen urge that they should be denied the right that belongs to all corporations of a similar kind, to pay stock for work and labor and property necessary to carry out the purposes of its cre-

I have hardly time to advert to the argument made by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Wilson]. He seems to think that anything in the bill is more tolerable than that part of it which authorizes the payment of stock for work and labor. The railroad companies of the country, great and small, have issued stock for such purposes under charters that did not specifically authorize them to do so, and they had the right so to do because they were availing themselves of a power inciright so to do, because they were availing themselves of a power incident to their corporate character. The Senate bill, considered by a committee of this House, of which my friend from Minnesota is a member, would have authorized the exchange of stock for work and labor done and for materials used in the construction of the canal.

Why should we apply a different rule to this great commercial enter-prise? Why, I ask, should we put into this bill restrictions which are not to be found in the laws of any State of this Union in relation to the government of corporations?

I know that my friend from Minnesota was originally in favor of the I regret exceedingly that he came across, as he indicated yesterday he did, an amendment which had been prepared by Judge ED-MUNDS, and on his motion put on the Atlantic and Pacific Ship-Railway bill. If my friend had known that the Senator's purpose was perhaps to kill that bill, because it committed the United States to the payment of the interest on certain of the bonds of the ship-railway company, and that the amendment had the desired effect, he might not have insisted on making it a part of this bill.

And having referred to the ship-railway bill let me say, Mr. Speaker, that I think all the Representatives from Missouri, including my distinguished colleague [Mr. BLAND], favored the ship-railway bill, and that bill proposed not only to grant a charter to a company but to guaranty the interest on its bonds. Why my friend from Missouri did not discover that it was necessary to put an amendment on that bill by which the United States Government could control and regulate and actually fix the quantum of tolls, I can not conjecture. Mr. BLAND. That bill was never before this House; I was never committed to it at all. When it came from the Senate it had on it the very amendment which I have offered to this bill.

Mr. CLARDY. Would the gentleman have voted for the bill with that amendment on it?

Mr. BLAND. I do not say whether I would or would not. I was never committed to it.

Mr. CLARDY. Ah, but the gentleman comes in here and his apology for opposing this bill is that this provision is not on it. Mr Speaker, he had an opportunity to show his contempt for the Clayton-Bulwer treaty and to flaunt the flag of defiance in the face of John Bull on the 4th day of January last. He had his amendment put on the bill; other opponents of the measure had their amendments put on it. Yet my colleague from Missouri marched up and cast his vote against the whole measure, amendments and all. So that his opposition is not because the amendment that he seeks to ingraft upon the bill is not on it; but it may be because he has got into the habit of opposing things; he is like Bill Arp's horse, "He's got agoin and can't stop." [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House the time for debate on this subject has expired. The question is now on agreeing to the report of the committee of conference.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I understand that this report must be adopted or rejected as a whole.

The SPEAKER. It must be voted upon as a whole. If the report be rejected, the amendments will then be open for separate considera-

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to present a privileged report, which will take but a few minutes.

The SPEAKER. The privileged report has preference over the mo-tion of the gentleman from Missouri.

SEAL FISHERIES, BEHRING SEA.

Mr. DINGLEY. By direction of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, I send to the desk a resolution of inquiry and ask its adoption with an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, requested to inform the House what orders were given to the commander of the United States revenue-cutter Richard Rush in reference to the protection of the seal fisheries in Behring Sea, in the spring and summer of 1888, and whether such instructions differed from those given the same commander in the season of 1887; and if so, what reason existed for any material change in such instructions; and the Secretary of the Treasury is further requested to transmit to the House copies of all orders given to the commanders of United States vessels charged with the protection of the seal fisheries in the seasons of 1886, 1887, and 1888.

The committee recommend the adoption of the following amendment: Insert, after the word "House," in line 2 of the resolution, as follows: "If compatible with the public interests."

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Speaker, without taking the time of the House in explaining the importance of the information called for, I ask consent to print in the RECORD in lieu of debate certain extracts from the evidence taken by the committee which will show the pertinency of the resolution of inquiry

Mr. DUNN. I could not hear the reading of the resolution. What was the purport of it?

The SPEAKER. It is a resolution of inquiry addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury in relation to the instructions given to the revenue-marine service in regard to the protection of seal life in Behring

Mr. DUNN. I desire to ask if it contains the provision "if compat-The SPEAKER. That is proposed as an amendment.

Mr. DUNN. That is all right.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine to print certain extracts from this testimony?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The amendment recommended by the committee was adopted.

The resolution as amended was adopted.

Mr. DINGLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. STRUBLE. I rise to a privileged question.
Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. What was the request of the gentleman from Maine?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asked consent to have printed in the RECORD certain extracts from the testimony taken by the committee, to which no objection was made.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I object.

Mr. DINGLEY. It is now too late.

The SPEAKER. It was submitted to the House and no objection was made.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I could not hear the request. Mr. DINGLEY. Well, Mr. Speaker, if the consent is not given I will simply take the time in my own right to have these extracts read from the desk.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman from Kentucky as stating that he was unable to hear the request and now interposes objection.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then I take the floor in my own right, Mr.

Speaker.
The SPEAKER. But the resolution has been agreed to.
Mr. DINGLEY. But I stated that I would not occupy the time, as was then my right, if the consent was given to have these extracts printed in the RECORD, which request was granted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine made the statement that in order to save time he would simply ask to have the extracts printed.

Mr. DINGLEY. And does not the objection come too late?
The SPEAKER. It has always been the practice of the Chair to allow a gentleman who claimed not to have been able to hear what was going on the privilege of interposing objection, if it was his desire to do so, when a request for unanimous consent is submitted.

Mr. DINGLEY. Then, in view of that, Mr. Speaker, I ask to have the votes on the resolution considered as vacated, and take the floor on the proposition in my own right.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would consider the resolution as not having passed, under the circumstances, because the gentleman from Maine stated that in lieu of debate he would ask to have certain matter printed.

Mr. DINGLEY. As showing the pertinency of the resolution which Mr. DINGLEY. As showing the pertinency of the resolution which has just been reported from the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and the importance of having copies of the instructions to which I referred, I ask the Clerk to read in my time the following extracts of the evidence taken by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, as it will be found in the testimony of Captain Shepherd, of the revenue-cutter Richard Rush, relating to the protection of seal life in Behring Sea during the seasons of 1887 and of 1888.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. That request has been made and objected to.
Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The confusion is so great that it is impossible for us to hear.

Mr. DINGLEY. I think I will have it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Question to Captain Shepherd: Do you have any opinion as to the probable extent of the destruction of seals [in Behring Sea and other Alaskan waters] by the unlawful hunters?

Answer by Captain Shepherd: During the season of 1887 I estimated that they killed about 40,000 seals, and would have taken 20,000 more had no seizures been made. We captured fifteen vessels, on board of which we found 12,000 skins.

12,000 skins.
Q. You estimate the destruction of seals, then, by marauders, at 40,000?
A. In 1887 I estimated the number to be about 40,000. This last season the number was about 25,000 or 25,000.
Q. It so happened that last year there were no seizures made?
A. No, sir.

A. No, sir.

Cross-examination by Mr. DINGLEY:
Q. Why were no seizures made last season?
A. I found no vessels violating the law, according to the instructions I received from the Treasury Department in regard to the taking of fur-seals up there.
Q. There were instructions issued by the Treasury Department in regard to vessels catching seals unlawfully?
A. I found no vessels liable to seizure under the instructions I received.
Q. Do you mean to say these were no illegal catchings?
A. No, sir; I do not say that.
Q. There were vessels catching seals illegally?
A. I saw vessels in Behring Sea, apparently for the purpose of taking seals.
Q. Eat under your instructions you could not seize them?
A. No, sir.
Q. Will you state to the committee how those instructions varied from the instructions previously given? How were they different from the instructions in 1887?

In 1857? A. I received confidential instructions from the Treasury Department, which were returned to the Department by their orders. If it is all the same to the committee, I would ask that it apply to the Secretary of the Treasury for a copy of those instructions, rather than ask me to divulge them.

Mr. DINGLEY. I did not intend to add anything to the testimony which has been read. But inasmuch as objection was made to my request to print it without reading, and the confusion has prevented members from distinctly hearing its purport, gentlemen around me desire that I should explain its purport. Captain Shepherd, who appeared before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries in their investigation into the seal fisheries in Alaskan waters, testified that he was in command of the revenue-cutter Richard Rush, and was charged with the protection of seal life in those waters in the season of 1887 and in that of 1888. He testified that in 1887 there were a large number of vessels seized in Behring Sea for illegally catching seals, and twelve thousand seal-skins were captured. He also testified that in 1888, notwithstanding there were vessels illegally sealing in those waters, none of them were seized; and when asked why none of them were captured, said that his instructions in 1888 would not admit of it. And when he was further inquired of in what respect these instructions differed from those of 1887, he replied that his instructions were secret and were returned to the Treasury Department, and that he preferred we should call upon the Treasury Department to furnish copies of the orders. And this resolution, which has been reported by instruction of the committhis resolution, which has been reported by instruction of the commit-tee, asks the Treasury Department for copies of the instructions given in 1888, in consequence of which, as Captain Shepherd testifies, seal life in Behring Sea was not protected in Behring Sea by the revenue-cutter as it had been in 1887. I do not deem it proper to make any comments on these disclosures by Captain Shepherd until the Treasury Department has an opportunity to forward to the House copies of the orders and make whatever explanation is thought proper.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the adoption of the resolution and amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I wish to say a word or two on that Mr. DINGLEY. Then I withdraw the demand for the previous

Mr. DINGLEY. Then I withdraw the demand for the previous question. How much time does the gentleman want?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. A minute or two.

Mr. DINGLEY. I yield that time to the gentleman.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The ground of my objection to putting this into the RECORD was to this extent: I was not present at the meeting of the committee which instructed a report on the restaution and committee which instructed a report on the restaution and committee which instructed as a member of committee which instructed a report on the restaution and committee which instructed a report on the restaution and committee which instructed a report on the restaution and committee which instructed a report on the restaution and committee which instructed a report on the restaution and committee which instructed as the restaution of the previous committee which is a second commi olution and amendment, but I did not want to stand by as a member of that committee and have it seem that the committee had directed the gentleman in making that report to select excerpts from the very large amount of testimony giving a color very different from the whole testimony. That did not seem to be fair. Therefore I objected. That is the only statement I desire to make to the statement of the gentleman from Maine

Mr. DINGLEY. On that point I desire simply to say that the extracts selected were all of those that bore upon the question of instructions at all. There were none other to be selected, and if any other had been selected they would not have borne on this question. Furthermore, I distinctly stated that these extracts were to be printed as part of my remarks and not as part of the report of the committee. Moreover, these extracts show exactly the purport of Captain Shepherd's testimony. Whether Captain Shepherd has stated the facts as the Treasury Department understands them is what the committee seek to learn by the resolution of inquiry.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I simply desire to say that the committee authorized the gentleman to report the resolution.

Mr. DINGLEY. Precisely.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That was all. As a member of the committee I did not desire to sit by and seem to indorse the manner of the selection of these excerpts, nor do I now desire to seem to indorse the last statement that the gentleman has made. That was

Mr. DINGLEY. No further statement is needed in reply to what the gentleman from Kentucky has said, and I now move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to, and the resolution as amended was passed.

Mr. DINGLEY moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was passed; and also moved to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced the passage of bills of the following titles; in which concurrence was

A bill (S. 2714) for the relief of Thomas Lannigan;

A bill (S. 3795) granting to the Big Horn Southern Railroad Company the right of way across the Fort Custer military reservation, Montana; and

A bill (S. 3419) providing for an additional associate justice of the supreme court of Iowa, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed House bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 3132) for the relief of David A. Haywood; A bill (H. R. 500) for the relief of William R. Blakeslee; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 25) to print 4,000 copies of the report of Naval Constructor Philip Hichborn on European dock-yards.

It also announced concurrence in resolution for printing extra numbers of the proceedings, testimony, documents, and consular reports submitted to the select committee to inquire into the importation of contract laborers, paupers, etc.

MRS. GENERAL WARD B. BURNETT.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] calls up a privileged question.

Mr. STRUBLE. It is the question of reconsidering the vote of the House upon a bill the title of which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 681) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. General Ward B. Burnett.

Mr. HATCH. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HATCH. Is that a privileged question? The SPEAKER. It is a motion to reconsider.

Mr. HATCH. Then I raise the question of consideration.
Mr. STRUBLE. I hope this bill will be considered now. I would like to have it disposed of in one way or another.

The question was taken; and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. STRUBLE. Division.

The House divided; and there were-ayes 69, noes 76.

So the House refused to reconsider the vote.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. The motion is pending, but while it is pending the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] rises to a privileged

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I move that the House now proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2547) to increase the pension of Mrs. Matilda Wilkins Emory, which was reported from the Committee of the Whole with the previous question ordered upon it, and which has been postponed from July 6 last until the present time, because we never could get to this Calendar.

cause we never could get to this Calendar.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, is that a privileged matter?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. And I think that we should now pass the bill without further delay.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] that his motion is not in order until after the call of committees, which has not yet been dispensed with.

Mr. HATCH. But I think the Chair will find that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARDY] asked unanimous consent this morning to dispense with the morning hour.

Several MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. HATCH. It was so understood.

The SPEAKER. Still, the bill called up by the gentleman from

The SPEAKER. Still, the bill called up by the general and Pennsylvania is a privileged matter.

Mr. HATCH. I raise the question of consideration against it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Just one moment, Mr. Speaker.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I appeal to the House to let this bill be taken up and passed, now that we have a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. A number of these pension cases have come over from Evidence against sessions with the previous question ordered upon from Friday evening sessions with the previous question ordered upon them, and under the practice of the House they are entitled to be called up at any time.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I appeal to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] to let this bill be considered now.
Mr. HATCH. And I appeal to the gentleman from Pennsylvania not to stand in the way of a general appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. This motion is not debatable.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I think we should not wait—
The SPEAKER. This motion is not debatable. The question is, Will the House proceed to consider the bill called up by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL]?

The House divided; and there were—ayes 63, noes 72.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. No quorum has voted. I demand tellers. I am in carnest about this matter.

tellers. I am in earnest about this matter.

[Cries of "Regular order!"]
The SPEAKER. The point is made that no quorum has voted, and the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'Neill] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. Hatch].

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 89, noes 83.

Mr. HATCH. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 40 members voting therefor.
Mr. HATCH. There has been so much confusion in the Hall, Mr.
Speaker, that some gentlemen desire the Chair to state the question again,

The SPEAKER. The confusion is on the floor. The Chair has been endeavoring to secure order in the House. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] calls up for consideration the bill the title of which the Clerk will read.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. It is Mrs. General Emory's increase of pension bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2547) to increase the pension of Mrs. Matilda Wilkins Emory.

The SPEAKER. Upon this the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] raises the question of consideration. The question is, Will the House now proceed to consider the bill?

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative-

The SPEAKER. Under the order of the House thirty minutes are of debate we have the report of the committee read. I believe that will satisfy the House floor and asked that the report be read as a part of his remarks.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us have a vote on the bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I will not insist on the reading of the report.

Mr. CHEADLE. I ask that the bill be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Matilda Wilkins Emory, widow of the late Brig. Gen. William H. Emory, United States Army, and to pay her a pension of $50 per month from the passage of this act, in lieu of the pension she now receives.

The SPEAKER. If no gentleman desires to debate the bill, the question is on ordering the bill to a third reading.

Mr. CHEADLE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is a motion to recommit in order at this time?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. CHEADLE. I move, then, that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 46, noes 68. Mr. CHEADLE. No quorum.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. There is an order for a recess at 5 o'clock; I move that we now take a recess.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the debate on the part of those who are opposed to the bill go on until 5 o'clock.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McMillin). Kentucky [Mr. Breckinridge] moves that the House take a recess.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I desire to have those opposed to the bill say what they can in opposition to it, and then we may have

Mr. RANDALL. I call for the yeas and nays. If gentlemen are not willing to allow for the discussion of this bill the ten minutes between now and the time fixed for the recess, we will keep them here twenty.

The yeas and nays were ordered. Mr. HOLMAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I call for tellers.

Mr. RANDALL. Yeas and nays. I ask that the question be put.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There will be no unnecessary hesitation on the part of the Chair, but the question upon which the Chair has doubt was whether the yeas and nays could be called on a motion to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays had been ordered. It would seem to be illogical, and the Chair remembers no instance where it has been done. The Chair is in doubt, and therefore will submit the question for determination to the House itself.

Mr. STRUBLE. I raise the point the Chair can not submit the question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair was inclined to think it would not be in order, but knowing of no precedent he will submit it

Mr. STRUBLE. Submit what?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for a vote on my motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That question has been submitted, and the gentleman from Kentucky has demanded tellers.

Mr. RANDALL. This is the first time I ever knew the gentleman from Indiana to be opposed to a pension bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am for pension bills, but it is only two minutes to 5 o'clock.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. But this pension bill has been prevented from passing by filibustering.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. There is so much confusion we can not understand what is going on.

The SPEAKER protempore. The House will be in order. The question is on the demand for tellers. Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. On what proposition?

The SPEAKER pro tempere. On the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Then it is a question of tell-

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is.

Mr. RANDALL. No, it is a question of delay. [Laughter.]

The House divided; and there were—ayes 17, noes not counted. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The tellers are refused.

Mr. DUNHAM. Count the other side. Mr. STRUBLE. What is the question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On the call for tellers.

The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, in accordance with previous order the House took a recess until half past 7 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House, at 7.30 p. m., was called to order by Mr. Dockery, who directed the reading of the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Washington, D. C., February 6, 1889.

Hon. A. M. Dockery is designated to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the JOHN G. CARLISLE, Speaker,

Hon, JOHN B. CLARK, Clerk.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The session of the House this evening is provided under the special order heretofore made for business from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

SIOUX RESERVATION, DAKOTA.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I call up for further consideration the bill (H. R. 11970) to divide a portion of the reservation of the Sioux Nation of Indians in Dakota into separate reservations and to secure the relinquishment of the Indian title to the remainder, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having gone there on the point of order made at the last session of the House.

Mr. PEEL. I believe all of the amendments to this bill have been prepared by gentlemen present, and I ask unanimous consent that the further consideration of it be in the House as in Committee of the

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, this bill has already been read, and I ask unanimous consent that it be taken up and considered by sections without reading. Let the Clerk read only the numbers of the sections as they are reached in the bill, and when those parts of the bill are reached to which gentlemen desire to offer amendments they can indicate their wishes; and I will state also that if by accident any section of the bill shall be passed over in this manner where amendments were designed to have been offered, the opportunity shall not be lost, but we will consent to go back and take up these sections afterwards.

Mr. PAYSON. This is quite a lengthy bill, and the suggestion made will facilitate the business of the House this evening. By that arrangement the rights of every member will be saved, because the opportunity of offering amendments will be presented just as if each section had been read in its order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill having been read already, the Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from Arkansas for unanimous consent that only the numbers of the sections be read as they are reached, and that gentlemen having amendments to offer to the various sections may offer them when the numbers of the sections are read.

Mr. HOOKER. I think we ought to have each section read as we proceed.

Mr. PAYSON. This bill has already been read at a prior meeting of the House, and it is quite lengthy. The reading of it now will simply impose additional work upon the clerks, and as the gentleman's suggestion saves the rights of every member present, I hope there will be no objection to that request.

Mr. HOOKER. There are two sections to which I desire to offer amendments, notably section 21.

Mr. PAYSON. Every right to offer it will be preserved if this consent is given.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the sections by number only.

The Clerk read the title of section 1.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to offer the following amendment to the

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 13, section 1, strike out "Pass Creek," and insert "Black Pike Creek." Strike out "thence," in line 13, and all of line 14.

Mr. PEEL. That is acceptable to the committee.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read the titles of sections 2 and 3.

Mr. MORROW. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 8 strike out "ten" and insert "five;" so it will read: "five miles,"

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read the titles of sections 4, 5, 6, and 7. Mr. MORRILL. I move to strike out all of section 7.

Mr. HOOKER. Let it be read.
Mr. MORRILL. This is quite a lengthy section. I will state that the regular Sioux Indians deny the right of the Santee Sioux to any part of this land. This section gives them certain allotments, and the other Indians deny their right to any of the lands, and will oppose the bill if this is left in. They insist that it shall be stricken out before they will consent to accept its provisions.

Mr. PEEL. I am not sufficiently conversant with the matter to say whether this is exactly just or not, but I know that when the delega-tion of Indians was here last fall that was one of their objections to the other bill, and hence we are willing to accept the amendment and let the section go out.

Mr. PAYSON. Before the question is taken I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas if he is thoroughly satisfied that the great Sioux tribe of Indians claim any right to this reservation in Nebraska? It is the first time here, after a somewhat intimate acquaintance with their claim, that I have heard this set up. I have never heard that the Sioux Indians make any claim to this land in Nebraska.

Mr. NELSON. It has been in the bill ever since the first of these bills was framed.

Mr. GIFFORD. The Sioux make no claim whatever to this land. Mr. PAYSON. Then the motion of the gentleman from Kansas ought not to prevail. Mr. NELSON. This is a strip independent of the Sioux reservation extending into Nebraska.

Mr. PAYSON. This is entirely independent of the main reservation of the Sioux, and, as I understand it, they are protesting against the claim of the Santee Sioux to any part of that reservation.

Mr. MORRILL. If the statements made are correct, and I presume they are, that is a reason for adopting the amendment, which is offered at the request of the friends of the Indians.

Mr. NELSON. What friends of the Indians? Mr. MORRILL. The Indian Defense Association; and in accordance with their request I have moved to strike this section out.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I do not want to take any time, because minutes are precious to-night. I simply want to call the attention of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] to the other provision of that section. If it be stricken out it will do the Flandreau Indians an injustice, as they are provided for here. They are civilized Indians, and to strike this section out would do them an injustice.

Mr. MORRILL. I would suggest that that section be passed over for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the section will be passed over informally for the present.

There was no objection.

Mr. MORRILL. If that section remains in I would ask to make an amendment, in line 23, by striking out "50 cents" and inserting

Mr. GIFFORD. I have an amendment, if the gentleman will allow me, that I desire to make in line 23.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Kansas withdraw his request to pass this section over?
Mr. MORRILL. I do.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words "50 cents per acre," in line 23, and insert "$1 per acre."

Mr. PEEL. That is accepted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOOKER. I desire after that amendment is agreed to in line 23, to ask the attention of the gentleman from Kansas. It provides "that it is to be paid out of the proceeds of lands relinquished under this act, which shall be used under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. NELSON. There are thirty, or forty, or fifty of these families who do not want to go out on the reservation to take up homesteads. They have homesteads in Moody County, Dakota, and they do not want to go out on the reservation and live, and this gives them their share out of the proceeds of this land without going there.

Mr. MORRILL. I move to make the following amendment to sec-

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 8, line 18, strike out "one-fourth of a section" and insert "320

Mr. PEEL. This is in accordance with the treaty of 1868, and we will accept the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. As this amendment gives the head of a family 320 acres instead of 160, should not a change be made in the figures as to the other persons named?

Mr. PEEL. I understand from the gentleman from Kansas, who has charge of the amendments, that it would be in conformity with the treaty of 1868. I do not know how the treaty reads in regard to

When section 9 was reached,

Mr. MORRILL said: I offer the following amendment to section 9.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 9, by adding:
"Provided, That this section as to allotments shall not be compulsory without the consent of the majority of the adult members of the tribe, except that the allotment shall be made as providing for the orphans."

Mr. PEEL. I understand that it reserves to the majority the right to consent to it. We accept the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Sections 10 and 11 were passed without amendment.

When section 12 was reached,

Mr. MORRILL said: I offer the following amendment, to be prefixed to section 12.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 12 by prefixing as follows:

Amend section 12 by prefixing as follows:

"That the President of the United States is hereby authorized and directed to cause a patent to be issued for each of the reservations established by this act to the respective tribes to whom they are set apart. Each of said patents shall be recorded in the General Land Office and the Indian Bureau, and shall be delivered to and placed in charge of some person designated therefor on the reservation affected thereby, for inspection and use at all times to any one interested therein, which patent shall not, however, operate as a grant to any individual Indian."

That is understood as being accepted by the committee. Mr. HOOKER. That causes the patent to be made by the Government to all land embraced in these six reservations.

Mr. PEEL. That is correct.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer a further amendment to that section.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6, section 12, after the word "treaty," strike out "or statute under which such reservation is held," and insert "of 1863 which requires the consent of three-fourths of the adult males of the tribe."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer the following amendment to section 13.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 13 by inserting in line 18 "320 acres" instead of "a quarter of a section."

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I want to change these other figures. There is no justice in giving the head of a family 320 acres and limiting an orphan to 80 acres. I move, in lines 20 and 21, to strike out the words "one-eighth of a section" and insert "one-quarter;" and in line 22 strike out "one-sixteenth of a section" and insert "one-eighth;" then it will be in conformity throughout in regard to the distribution.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAUGEN. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of lines 25, 26, and 27 the following:
"Not to exceed 20 acres of land in addition to the right of way, for stations for every 10 miles of road," and insert "so much land as may be necessary for stations and depot purposes."

Mr. BUCHANAN. As I understand it, that leaves no limit whatever. Who is to judge of what amount is necessary?

Mr. HAUGEN. I will add a proviso, "not to exceed 10 acres."

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Say 20 acres.

Mr. HAUGEN. No; I think that is a great deal more than is necessary under ordinary circumstances. I will add to my amendment the words "not to exceed 10 acres."

Mr. BUCHANAN. The difficulty about that as it will stand is it does not say how frequently these stations shall occur. The words "for stations for every 10 miles of road " are struck out and nothing is put in to supply their place. The company might have stations every mile and take their 10 acres in each case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman offer an amend-

Mr. BUCHANAN. No; I simply call attention to the effect of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

The amendment was agreed to.
Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I offer the amendment which I send to the

The Clerk read as follows:

In lines 36 and 37 strike out the words "have been agreed upon and paid for by said railroads, and to."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I ask the Clerk to read the balance of the section from the end of the amendment which I have just offered.

Mr. PEEL. I suggest to my colleague that we pass over this section for the present and return to it later.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the gentleman will permit that, it will suit me better.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read section 17.

Mr. PAYSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on line 23, page 20, after the word "cash."

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

No sales, barters, or bargains shall be made by any person other than the said Indians with each other of any of the personal property hereinbefore provided for; and any violation of this provision shall be deemed a misdemeanor and punished by a fine not exceeding $100 or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, the object of that amendment will be apparent, I think, to members when they take into consideration that we are proposing here to try the experiment of a first step in the work of civilizing these Indians. We propose to put them in possession of farms varying in extent from 80 to 320 acres, and then we propose to provide every Indian who is entitled to land in severalty with two milch cows, one pair of oxen with yoke and chain, or two mares with one set of harness in lieu of said oxen, yoke, and chain, as the Secretary of the Interior may deem advisable, and also one plow, one wagon, one harrow, one hoe, one ax, and one pitchfork, all suitable to the work they may have to do. Now, there ought to be a provision in this bill to guard the Indian against his own improvidence and want of thrift and to protect him against the cupidity of the white men surrounding him, in order that these cattle and implements which the Government gives him shall not be got rid of and bartered away to some white man the first time the Indian strikes a corner grocery. I offer this amendment upon the basis of a good deal of experience for several years in connection with the Indian question, and I trust there will be no objection to it.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, I heartily concur in what has just been said by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. Mr. Speaker, I have an amendment to offer which proposes to strike out a large part of this section, and perhaps the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] would come in better with mine.

Mr. PAYSON. Then I will withhold my amendment for the present. Mr. MORRILL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 17, after the word "effect," in the seventh line, and Strike our an of section 11, and 1 section 12, and 1 section proceeds to insert:

"When an Indian who has taken an allotment under this section proceeds to build a house and shows a desire to adopt civilized industrial habits, he or she shall be entitled to receive from the United States two mileh cows, a yoke of oxen, one wagon, one hundred dollars' worth of agricultural implements and seeds, and, for three years thereafter, seeds and implements to the value of $25 per year; also instruction from farmers, etc., as provided for in the treaty of 1868 between the United States and the Sioux Indians."

Mr. PAYSON. I withdraw my amendment for the present.

The amendment of Mr. MORRILL was agreed to.
Mr. McKENNA. I would like to inquire what is meant by "et cetera" in that amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that the amendment be again read.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. It seems to me the meaning is very plain. stead of enumerating the provisions of the treaty it simply says, "et cetera, as provided for in the treaty."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. PAYSON. I offer my amendment to come in at the end of the amendment just adopted as a proviso; and I take this occasion to make inquiry of the chairman and other members of the committee with reference to the effect of striking out, as is done by the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL], the provision in section 16, commencing at line 7 and running down to and including line 14, providing for purchasing for the Indians on these reservations animals for breeding purposes, etc.

We all know as a matter of observation that that is a grazing country, not an agricultural country. There are plenty of these farms which will be set off by allotment to these Indians which so far as agricultwith be set off by anothers to these indians which so far as agricultural products are concerned would not without artificial irrigation support agrasshopper. Gentlemen who have been in that locality know this to be a fact. The provision of this bill which commends itself more heartily to me than any other is that which proposes to encourage the Indians to engage in pastoral callings by providing them with cattle, stock, etc.; but that provision is stricken out on the motion of the gentleman from Kapess and the chairman of the continuous content. the gentleman from Kansas, and the chairman of the committee gives no intimation whether it is proper this should be done or not. It seems

Mr. PERKINS. Allow me to suggest in addition that if I understand the effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Kansas it strikes out the appropriation of $2,000,000 which is found in the same section of the bill.

Mr. MORRILL. I think that is provided for in another section.
Mr. PAYSON. If this legislation is to mean anything, this matter ought not to be passed over without some consideration.
Mr. PERKINS. Certainly not, unless we are to return to this section hereafter.

Mr. PEEL. I think we had better return to this section. I have not had time to examine the effect of these amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection this section will be passed over with the privilege of recurring to it. The Chair hears no objection. The next section, section 18, will be read.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to offer an amendment as a new section, to come in between section 17 and section 18. I ask the Clerk to read it. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For and in consideration of the restoration to the public domain of the land out of the separate reservations herein set apart to the six different tribes of Indians, and the provisions herein made, there is hereby appropriated the sum of $11,000,000, which shall be set apart out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, of which $20 per capita shall be paid at once in cash and the remainder deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Sioux Nation of Indians as a permanent fund, the interest of which at 5 per cent. per annum shall be appropriated under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior to the use of the Indians lawfully residing on the reservations created by this act and legally belonging to said Sioux Indians, in proportion to the numbers that shall so reside at the time this act shall take effect, as follows:

One half of said interest shall be so expended for the promotion of industrial and other suitable education among said Indians, and in such manner and for such purposes as in the judgment of the said Secretary shall from time to time most contribute to the advancement of said Indians in civilization and self-support; and the other half shall be paid to them in annual installments on a per capita basis: Provided, That after ten years from the time this agreement shall take effect, any adult member of any one of said tribes who shall have become self-supporting shall be entitled to receive 5 per cent. of his or her proportionate share of said sum of $11,000,000 annually, in addition to his or her share of $11,000,000.

Mr. PAYSON. I hope that this amendment will not be adopted.

I hope that this amendment will not be adopted mr. FAYSON. I nope that this amendment will not be adopted proforma. I would like to hear from the gentleman from Kansas some reason for its adoption. It seems to me the "softest snap" that can be imagined for the outsiders around these Indians. By the amendment these people, who at that time will be the richest people on this continent, are at the end of ten years to succeed to this vast sum of money. I hope the gentleman from Kansas will give us some explanation of the reason for the amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I stated when I commenced offering these amendments.

Mr. MORRILL. I stated when I commenced offering these amendments that they had been prepared by the Indian Defense Association.

Mr. PAYSON. Then, permit me to say, the Indian Defense Association ought to have somebody else than themselves to prepare amend-

Mr. MORRILL. The object, as I understand, of paying the $11,000,000 for 11,000,000 acres of land is that the Indians will be better satisfied to receive a dollar an acre and have it all paid at once than they would be to receive $1.25 an acre and have it paid as the land is sold.

Mr. PAYSON. But at the end of ten years, by the terms of this amendment, one-half of this vast sum of money is to be paid to the Indians entitled to it, and the whole disposed of as they see fit, without regard to their capacity to manage their affairs.

Mr. PERKINS. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that the provisions of this bill were considered very carefully by the committee, and it was framed so in the judgment of the committee as to protect the rights of the Indians, and to protect them also from the consequences suggested the Indians, and to protect them also from the consequences suggested by the gentleman from Illinois. It was not thought good policy that at the end of ten or fifteen years this great sum of money should be given to the Indians absolutely and subject to their control to dispose of as they thought best, but was to be kept as a fund for their benefit in the Treasury of the United States for a long period of time; and as the amendments are not printed, and we have no opportunity to examine them for ourselves, it seems to me that we ought not to accept such important amendments without thoroughly understanding their con-

Mr. PEEL. I will ask the gentleman from Kansas to withdraw that amendment for the present, and we will recur to this hereafter.

Mr. MORRILL. Very well; I will withdraw it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the title of the next section.

The Clerk read the titles of sections 18, 19, 20, and 21.

Mr. HOOKER. I do not know whether the provision I desire to incorporate should apply to this section or not, but I wish to offer an amendment that this act shall require the consent of the Indians, in accordance with the treaty of 1868, before it becomes operative.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Where does the gentleman desire the amendment to come in?

Mr. HOOKER. I desire it to come in at the end of section 21.

Mr. GIFFORD. Is this the submission clause?

Mr. HOOKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. GIFFORD. I had an amendment I desired to offer myself, to come in section 27, to the same effect.

Mr. HOOKER. I am going to offer it in the form of the old law.

Mr. GIFFORD. I would suggest, then, that it come in as a separa I would suggest, then, that it come in as a separate section.

Mr. HOOKER. I shall offer section 16 of this act as an amendment to the present bill. Mr. PERKINS.

Mr. PERKINS. To be offered as a new section?
Mr. HOOKER. I will offer it in that form if desired, and I ask the Clerk to read section 16 of the act of 1868.

The Clerk proceeded to read the section.

Mr. HOOKER. The section the Clerk is reading is not the one I had designed to offer. The amendment I wish to offer is section 24 of the present law, in the following words:

SEC. 24. That this act shall take effect only upon the acceptance thereof and consent thereto by the different bands of the Sioux Nation of Indians, in manner and form prescribed by the twelfth article of the said treaty between the United States and said Indians, concluded April 29, 1868, which said acceptance and consent shall be made known by proclamation thereof by the President of the United States, upon satisfactory proof presented to him that the same has been obtained in the manner and form required by said twelfth article of said treaty, which proof shall be presented to him within one year from the passage of this act; and upon failure of such proof and proclamation this act becomes of no effect and null and void.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Where does the gentleman desire it to

Mr. HOOKER. It is immaterial; perhaps as a separate section.
Mr. PERKINS. I will suggest that it be a separate section, to come in at the close of the bill Mr. HOOKER. I will prepare the section and send it up to the Clerk in a moment.

Mr. PAYSON. While the gentleman is preparing the amendment wish to offer an amendment to section 21, which I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

On page 24, line 22, strike out the word "soldiers" in that line and insert "honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors in the late civil war;" so that it shall read:

"But the rights of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors in the late civil war, as defined and described in sections 2304 and 2305 of the Revised Statutes, shall not be abridged," etc.

Mr. PAYSON. My reason for offering the amendment is that sections 2304 and 2305 of the Revised Statutes provide for the saving of certain rights and privileges to honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors, and those who served in the Marine Corps, etc., during the war. The language of the bill confines this right to soldiers merely; and I think this has a better ring about it.

Mr. ROGERS. What rights are reserved by the statute in ques-

Mr. PAYSON. To make homesteads upon the public lands and to be credited in residence the length of time that they served in the Union Army, provided that not less than one year's residence shall be required before a patent is issued.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. PAYSON. I have now another amendment to the same section, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 24, in line 25, strike out the words "except as to said sums," and insert "it is expressly provided that the rights of honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors in the late civil war to make homes on the public land under the existing homestead laws shall in no degree be impaired by the passage of this bill; and the right of such honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors to make homestead entry and perfect the same by occupancy under the existing homestead law shall extend to any and all lands which shall be opened to any settlement by the provisions of this bill."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I would like to hear some explanation of the amendment. What is its effect?
Mr. PAYSON. The effect, Mr. Speaker, is shown by this reading, and I quote now from the Revised Statutes, section 2304:

and I quote now from the Revised Statutes, section 2304:

SEC. 2304. Every private soldier and officer who has served in the Army of the United States during the recent rebellion for ninety days, and who was honorably discharged and has remained loyal to the Government, including the troops mustered into the service of the United States by virtue of the third section of an act approved February 13, 1862, and every seaman, marine, and officer who has served in the Navy of the United States, or in the Marine Corps, during the rebellion for ninety days, and who was honorably discharged and has remained loyal to the Government, shall, on compliance with the provisions of this chapter as hereinafter modified, be entitled to enter upon and receive patents for a quantity of public lands not exceeding 160 acres, or one quarter-section, to be taken in compact form, according to legal subdivisions, including the alternate reserved sections of public lands along the line of any railroad or other public work not otherwise reserved or appropriated, and other lands subject to entry under the homestead laws of the United States; but such homestead settler shall be allowed six months after locating his homestead and filing his declaratory statement within which to make his entry and commence his settlement and improvements.

improvement. SEC. 2305. The time which the homestead settler has served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps shall be deducted from the time heretofore required to perfect title, or if discharged on account of wounds received or disability incurred in the line of duty, then the term of enlistment shall be deducted from the time heretofore required to perfect title, without reference to the length of time he may have served; but no patent shall issue to any homestead settler who has not resided upon, improved, and cultivated his homestead for a period of at least one year after he shall have commenced his improvements.

This act was passed in 1872 and has been in force ever since, and as to any tract of land which the United States owns the Union soldier has the right under these two sections to enter upon it and make a home, the Government requiring from him no payment except of the ordinary office fees. As is apparent from the reading of the section, an actual residence of at least one year is necessary before he can receive a patent. This bill proposes that the soldier, taking advantage of these two sections, shall be required to pay such a sum of money as is required by this bill to be paid to the Indians in order to extinguish their title.

This is the same question that was presented in the discussion upon an amendment in the same language that was offered to the Oklahoma bill. It presented the same question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The effect of this, as I understand it-and I am not familiar with those laws-will be that the General Government will pay the Indians for the lands.

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. This gives the land to the Union soldier. So that, in point of fact, the effect of it will be that a certain sum of money in the Treasury, raised by taxation, is to be used to purchase the land, and then to give the land to the soldiers, as directed in this bill? rected in this bill?

Mr. PAYSON. Precisely.
Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. And nobody knows how much that amount will be?

Mr. PAYSON. It depends upon the number of soldiers who choose to Mr. PAYSON. It depends upon the number of soldiers who choose to go there and make homestead entry under that provision of this bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Does this amendment give the right to a discharged Union soldier who has had a homestead elsewhere to get another homestead?

Mr. PAYSON. No, sir; it does not. The general homestead law provides that after once exercising that right it can not be exercised

Mr. ROGERS. This is a privilege given to this class of persons alone?

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, sir. The class of persons known as Union soldiers and sailors.

this provision.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I think that they have the privilege of having counted to them in the length of time that is necessary to perfect their title under the homestead law the period which they served in the Army or Navy.

Mr. PAYSON. That term is credited upon the five years which is required under the homestead law to perfect title by actual occupancy.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That, of course, is a privilege entirely distinct to that class. Now, then, in addition to that the Government has to pay money to acquire the title of the Indians, and this inures to the credit of such of them as shall take advantage of this receiving.

this provision.

Mr. PAYSON. Exactly. And that is precisely as it has been with every acre of public land disposed of by the General Government.

Mr. BRECKINKIDGE, of Kentucky. Has it ever occurred when this right has accrued to land for which the General Government has paid money to extinguish the Indian title?

Mr. PAYSON. I am just coming to that, and I will be very glad to enlighten the gentleman from Kentucky. I was saying when I was interrupted a moment since, Mr. Speaker, that there has never been an acre of public lands disposed of since the General Government organized that was not nurchased of somebody—the claim of paramount. ganized that was not purchased of somebody—the claim of paramount title as against the Government to every acre that has been acquired.

When we made the Louisiana purchase we paid for that area of land $27,267,621. When we made the purchase of East and West Florida from Spain that cost the General Government $6,490,768. When we made the first purchase from Mexico, under the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, we paid that Republic $15,000,000 for the land we acquired. The first Texas purchase, in 1850, cost the Union $16,000,000, or 25 cents and a fraction per acre. But in order to correct inequalities in the southern line, in what is known as the Gadsden purchase in 1853, we paid $10,000,000 for that piece of land, being 34 cents and a fraction for every acre of it.

In the purchase of Alaska we paid $7,250,000, in round numbers, and in correcting the Georgia State cession we paid $6,200,000. And for the extinguishment of Indian titles alone—and when I say "Indian titles" I mean the bare right of occupancy which the Indian tribes of this country had, and which have always been recognized by this Government-down to 1883, which are the latest figures which I have at hand, there were paid out of the Treasury of the United States two hundred and eight million seven hundred and seventy-six thousand and some odd hundred dollars. So that every acre of public land that has been disposed of by the General Government under the homestead law from the time of its adoption down to to-day has been public land that the General Government has purchased from somebody, Indians or others, either in the extinguishment of the Indian title or succeeding to the title held by foreign nations. The money was paid out of the Treasury of the United States and then the land was subjected to homesteads.

Mr. Speaker, there has never been a criticism made until in comparatively recent days upon the policy of granting a homestead to the ordinary citizen, let alone the additional claim that the Union soldier has upon the gratitude of the Union; but to the ordinary civilian there has never been a criticism upon the policy of the homestead law, based upon the idea that we have been compelled to pay out of the Treasury the different sums of money paid, to which I have alluded, for the purchase of title from white governments abroad or the extinguishment of Indian titles; none whatever. And, therefore, Mr. Speaker, the argument of novelty can not obtain. But I insist now and here, and I do it in only a few words, because my views are well known to gentlemen and members of the committee, as I have frequently expressed myself upon this floor, that the time is not yet come when the Government of the United States can afford, through any motive, to turn its back upon the honorably discharged Union soldier or sailor and say that the right which he has always had during these years to make a free home upon the public lands of this Union upon paying the fees at the local land office shall be departed from. That time has not yet arrived and puboffice shall be departed from. It

Mr. ROGERS. May I interrupt the gentleman a moment?

Mr. PAYSON. Certainly.

Mr. ROGERS. I want to ask the gentleman if there is any legislation at all with reference to the public domain, however it may have been acquired, which has discriminated so far as the homestead law is concerned, against any class of our citizens. In other words, has not the general homestead law applied to every citizen just as much as to the Union soldier, except that the soldier has been allowed to commute the time under the special acts to which the gentleman has re-

Mr. PAYSON. That has always been the rule.

Mr. ROGERS. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is against such a discrimina-tion that I enter my protest. I maintain that the policy of disposing of the public domain ought to be placed on the broad basis of allow-ing every citizen of this country who has not enjoyed the benefit and privilege of the homestead law to have a right, if anybody has a right, to go upon the public domain and acquire a homestead by conforming to the provisions of the homestead law. I enter my protest against the inauguration of any policy that would discriminate against one class of persons or in favor of another, so far as the disposition of the public domain under the homestead law is concerned, and I, for one, announce the proposition that I believe every existing provision for disposing of the public lands ought to be repealed except the homestead law, so that we might reserve the balance of the public domain for the benefit of actual settlers.

Mr. PAYSON. I indorse every word that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Rogers] has uttered upon that subject. That has been the doctrine that I have attempted to advocate ever since I have been in public life.

I offered an amendment to the Oklahoma bill containing the very principle announced by the gentleman from Arkansas, and supported it with what little ability I was able to command. That amendment proposed that the uniform policy should be adopted with reference to citizens of this country in their relation to the public lands, with the exceptions contained in the two provisions of law which I have read, but that amendment, as the gentleman knows, was voted down by an overwhelming majority in the House. I stood comparatively alone with reference to that provision. But so long as the members of this House thought that the time had come when the benefits of the homestead law as to certain portions of the country ought to be given provised and law as to certain portions of the country ought to be circumscribed and that rights heretofore given should no longer continue to be given, I acquiesced in that judgment, however little I agreed with it—that is, I concurred because I was compelled to.

But, Mr. Speaker, I do insist now, as I insisted then, that however swift the House of Representatives may be to debar the ordinary citizen from the right of making a homestead upon the public domain, that deprivation ought not to extend to the Union soldier; and this country can well afford now to do, as it has done with reference to all the lands embraced within the great purchases which I have enumer-ated—this country can well afford to donate, as an exhibition of its gratitude to a class of persons known as honorably discharged Union soldiers and sailors, the little pittance that is evidenced by the purchase price of 160 acres of land to enable them to secure a home free of cost. That is all there is in this amendment. It is a simple proposition.

The amount that is involved in it is comparatively small. Very few The amount that is involved in it is comparatively small. of the Union soldiers of this country will go up into the extreme Northwest to make homesteads upon this land; but wherever there is one who chooses to go there the benefits of the existing law ought to be extended to him. If I have made myself understood, that is all I care to say with reference to this provision.

Mr. PEEL was recognized.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I ask the gentleman from Arkansas to yield to me that I may offer an amendment and have it pending.

Mr. PEEL. With pleasure.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Strike out the proviso from line 8 to line 18 of section 21.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move that as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman; or, if that amendment is adopted—

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It can not be offered as a substitute, but it can be voted on later.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I ask the Chair not to decide that point too hastily, as the question of order has not been raised. [Laughter.] I ask the Clerk now to read the provision which I move to strike out, so that the House may understand the effect of my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That each settler, under and in accordance with the provisions of said homestead acts, shall pay to the United States, for the land so taken by him, in addition to the fees provided by law, the sum of $1.25 per acre for all lands disposed of within the first three years after the taking effect of this act, and the sum of 75 cents per acre for all lands disposed of within the next two years following thereafter, and 50 cents per acre for the residue of the lands then undisposed of, and shall be entitled to a patent therefor according to said homestead laws, and after the full payment of said sums.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, it is well known to every member of the committee that this whole question was most thoroughly discussed on an amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] to the Oklahoma bill. I do not suppose there is a single member of the House who has not his mind made up on this subject; and, as a matter of course, unless we can have a yea-and-nay vote upon it in the House, after a reasonable amount of discussion, so that each and every member may understand fully what he is voting upon, it is unneces sary to consume any further time with this bill. I understand, however, that my friend from Illinois is willing to agree to an arrangement whereby we can have a vote on it in the House.

Mr. PAYSON. I am quite content with that arrangement.

Mr. PEEL. I hope that will be agreed to, because otherwise this bill will be defeated and the time spent upon it will be wholly wasted. This is identically the same proposition that was thoroughly discussed in the House and voted down by a very large majority.

Mr. PAYSON. But that was in relation to a different country; that applied to Oklahoma.

Mr. PEEL. That is very true; but I maintain that the same prin-ple applies. I indorse the action of the House in regard to that I agree with my colleague [Mr. ROGERS] that every foot of the public lands of this country, when tendered for the occupation of the citizen, should go to each and every one alike. This land is the common property of a common country, and no discrimination should be made between citizens when they undertake to acquire a home under the homestead law, save and except that of time, as the law now provides.

If we should enter into a discussion of this question to-night it would not benefit members who will be called upon to vote on the question to-morrow. If we should consume the whole evening in discussing the matter, the time would be lost; nothing would be accomplished. therefore appeal to my friends not to enter upon a discussion of this matter at present, but let us come to an agreement if we can in regard to voting on the question to-morrow. I hope we shall agree that the question on this amendment be taken in the House to-morrow by yeas and nays after fifteen or twenty minutes' debate on each side, so that each member may understand the question on which he will be called to vote.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. So far as I am concerned I will not consent to a vote in the House to-morrow upon the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] as he now offers it. I am perfectly willing to make an agreement which will give the House an opportunity to settle first the question whether persons who desire to take out a homestead on these lands shall pay anything—

Mr. PAYSON. I should be delighted to have that question submitted.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I confess that I favor the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois to the Oklahoma bill, proposing that no payment be required from the citizen settling upon this land; that the extinguishment of the Indian title be made by the General Government, and after the title had been thus extinguished, that the citizens going to that Territory shall stand on the same footing on which citizens have always stood; that is, that they shall take homesteads under the general law of the Government in the territory acquired by purchase, by treaty, or otherwise. If an agreement can be had by which the House can express its opinion on these two questions I have no objection. But I will not consent to an agreement which will make the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Illinois the sole question to be voted upon. I think that the discrimination in favor of the discharged Union soldier, which credits the time served by him in the Army as a part of the time necessary to obtain a title under the homestead law, is eminently just. But I do not think it proper that there should be a donation of land to | proceed to take a vote.

him on a different principle and for a smaller payment than in the case of every other citizen who chooses to go and make homestead entry. At this stage of the session, and under the circumstances connected with the present bill, and in view of the interests necessarily involved in a matter of this sort, I am not willing to stand by and assent to an agreement for a vote upon the single amendment as offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair desires to call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky, as he endeavored to do when the amendment was offered, to the fact that his amendment can not be entertained as a substitute for that of the gentleman from Illinois. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois is designed to come in at an altogether different point in the bill. Therefore the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky can not be treated as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PAYSON. That difficulty can be obviated in a single word.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If my amendment should be adopted, it would render the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois unnecessary, because if no payment is required—

Mr. PAYSON. The difficulty can be obviated in a sentence. The motion of the gentleman from Kentucky was to strike out certain words ending with the word "sums," in line 18. If he will allow me, I will make the suggestion that his amendment ought to be extended so as to include line 21, ending with the word "acre."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYSON. Now, I ask unanimous consent that the proposition of the gentleman from Kentucky thus modified—to strike out so much of section 21 as begins with the word "Provided," in line 8, and ends with the word "acre," in line 21-be adopted now pro forma with an agreement that a vote may be taken on it to-morrow in the House, and that if it be then voted down the question shall recur upon the amendment I have sent to the Clerk's desk, providing for a homestead for the Union soldier. It seems to me there can be no objection to this proposition.

Mr. PERKINS. Let us come to some agreement also as to the time that is to be consumed in discussion. I suggest twenty minutes on each side as to the two propositions.

Mr. PAYSON. I am content with that.
Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That would make the whole debate forty minutes. There may be some trouble in deciding as to the "sides" on this question, as the gentleman from Illinois and I will travel together up to a certain point; and then, if the House should disagree with us, he and I will immediately face each other.

Mr. PAYSON. I will agree to yield all the time to which I may be entitled to the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Arkansas and let those two gentlemen debate the matter.

Mr. PERKINS. Say forty minutes.

Mr. PEEL. That is ample time and will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask the two propositions be adopted now proforma, wi h the agreement the vote shall be taken in the House after twenty minutes' debate on either side.

Mr. PERKINS. Let me suggest we adopt pro forma the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] with the understanding when the vote is taken in the House if that is voted down then the gentleman from Illinois will offer his amendment.

Mr. PAYSON. That is my proposition.
Mr. MORRILL. I have offered two amendments which should be adopted before this agreement is entered into.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is an amendment pending.
Mr. MORRILL. My amendments as offered should be adopted before any arrangement is entered into, because if the section is adopted paying a lump sum for the whole reservation then my amendments are necessary. For instance, after the word "sums," in the eighteenth line, it says:

That all lands undisposed of under this act at the expiration of ten years from the taking effect of this act shall be paid for by the United States at 50 cents per

That ought not to be there if we pay for the whole reservation. Mr. PAYSON. Suppose we strike that out.

Mr. MORRILL. Suppose that proposition is voted down.
Mr. PAYSON. Then the section will stand as it is.
Mr. MORRILL. We should strike that out before your agreement is entered into.

Mr. PAYSON. I do not think so.

Mr. MORRILL. Then you will pay 50 cents after paying a lumped

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Let me suggest that amendment has not been adopted, and it will be better for the gentleman from Kansas to wait until that has been done.

Mr. PEEL. I suggest when the debate closes—
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated no proposition as yet for the consideration of the House, but has been indulging this informal colloquy in the hope some agreement would grow out of it.

Mr. PEEL. I suggest, then, that it be understood that after debate for forty minutes, twenty minutes on either side, the House shall then Mr. PERKINS. Of course.

Mr. PEEL. That it shall proceed to take a vote by yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If the gentleman from Illinois will submit his proposition the Chair will state it to the House.

Mr. PAYSON. I move you, then, Mr. Speaker, that so much of section 21, beginning with the word "Provided," in line 18, and ending with the word "acre," in line 21, be stricken out of the bill. That is the first proposition. That will present the homestead question pure and simple as to the lands embraced in the terms of this bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection that amendment as proposed by the gentleman from Kentucky will be considered as agreed to.

Mr. PAYSON. As modified by my suggestion, beginning at line 18 and going down to and including the word "acre," in line 21.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let me suggest that we are now in the House and if this amendment is agreed to that is the end to it. There can be no proposition made to agree to an amendment conditionally; it is either in or out of the bill. If we agree to the amendment, then it becomes a part of the bill, and nothing but a motion to reconsider will get it out of the bill.

get it out of the bill.

Mr. ROGERS. Let me make a suggestion. I understand the gentleman from Illinois will vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky. Mr. PAYSON.

With the greatest of pleasure.
Then why not adopt it now once for all? Mr. ROGERS.

Mr. PERKINS. There is objection.

Where does the objection come from? Mr. ROGERS.

I should like to object, for one. Mr. SPRINGER.

Mr. PAYSON. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. SPRINGER. I have a suggestion which I think will be satisfactory, and that is that this amendment shall be withdrawn and the bill be allowed to pass as the Committee on Indian Affairs reported it, and also the other amendment to which my colleague has been refer-

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. We have only an hour and a half to consider this and other propositions reported by this Committee on Indian Affairs which are of great importance to many people, and I hope we may be permitted to go on and perfect this bill so it may be acted on this evening without further debate.

Mr. SPRINGER. We have been pursuing the policy for many years of requiring the settlers upon the Indian reservations, where the Government is obliged to obtain the title by the payment of a dollar or a dollar and a quarter an acre to the Indians, to reimburse the Government by paying that sum back for the land. Now, if we are going to make an absolute change in that policy by this bill, we must go back, it seems to me, to Kansas, to Minnesota, and to Colorado, or wherever we have so disposed of the numerous reservations, and charge settlers from a dollar and twenty-five cents up-

Mr. PERKINS. To $10.

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes, to $10 an acre for the lands, and refund the amount collected from them. We must begin this thing at the beginning and make it uniform.

My colleague refers to the fact that we paid for the first territory acquired from Mexico, and Spain, and the other governments, and that we did not apply that rule in disposing of the lands so acquired.

Mr. PEEL. Will the gentleman allow me a moment? I would suggest, as my colleague from Michigan has already said, that we have but an hour and a half remaining to-night, and I would be glad to come to some kind of an arrangement in regard to this bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would be glad to reach some arrangement my-

Mr. PEEL. We cannot do anything with the bill unless we do arrive at some such arrangement.

Mr. PAYSON. What objection is there to the proposition that the two amendments I have offered shall be considered as pending in the House without prejudice until the further consideration of the bill shall be proceeded with and all of it disposed of except the two amendments, and then when the House adjourns to-night it be with an agreement that a yea-and-nay vote shall be taken to-morrow upon them, with twenty minutes' debate on each side?
Mr. PERKINS. That is fair.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Allow me to ask a question. What avail is it to have the previous question ordered and that peculiar privilege given to any measure, when as a matter of fact some appropriations committee will want to set aside the special order and use the day for some other purpose? That has been done so often that it seems to be hardly necessary to make these orders at night sessions. It is a perfect farce to do it and then have the business which was set for the next day swept out of the way by the dictum of some chairman of an appropriation committee.

Mr. PAYSON. Then we will vote down the chairman of the appropriation committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, in the absence of an arrangement.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask unanimous consent that the arrangement I have suggested be adopted. That is to say, that the two amendments I have offered be passed over informally, and—

Mr. SPRINGER. Well, just stop right there and we will agree. Let us finish the bill, and you can offer it at the end of it.

Mr. PAYSON. I want to see if we can not reach some arrangement, and I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the proposition I made a few moments ago be again submitted, that the amendments be considered as pending in the House without prejudice, and that when we adjourn to-night it be with the understanding that a yea-and-nay vote be taken to-morrow upon them, with twenty minutes' debate upon each side.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] just stated? The Chair hears none. The Clerk will proceed with the bill.

The Clerk read the title of section 22.

Mr. PAYSON. I offer an amendment to come in on page 25, after the word "void," in line 37.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That there shall be reserved public highways 4 rods wide around every section of land allotted or opened to settlement by the bill, the section lines being the center of said highways; but no deduction shall be made in the amount to be paid for the quarter-section of land by reason of such reservations; but if the said highways shall be vacated by any competent authority, the title to the respective strips shall inure to the then owner of the tract of which it formed a part by the original survey.

Mr. PEEL. I have no objection to the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. PAYSON. Now, I offer another amendment, to strike out on page 25 the first proviso, commencing with the word "and," in line 37, and ending with the word "acre," in line 39, and insert what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to reserve on any public land embraced in this bill town sites for any existing or prospective town, city, or village, in area not exceeding 640 acres each, in compact form, or such additional area in governmental subdivisions as may be wholly or in part occupied as a town, city, or village site; and no application to enter any land shall be allowed until approved by the Secretary of the Interior of any tract of land, first, where any exterior line of the land is within one-half mile of the line of any railroad which is constructed or of the line of any railroad not constructed but where its map of location shall be filed with the Secretary of the Interior at the date of the application to enter; or second, of any tract of land upon which at the date of the application to enter; or second, of any tract of land upon which at the date of the application to enter is a town or village settlement; and no settlement in advance of survey by proper authority shall give any right as against the power to reserve town sites hereby given; it being the object of this provision to secure to the inhabitants of all towns, cities, and villages in said Territory the benefits and profits arising from the sales of lots therein; and to that end where town sites shall be located upon any public landsopened by this act, the provisions of chapter 8, Title XXXII, Revised Statutes, entitled "Reservation and sale of town sites on the public lands," shall apply except as otherwise provided herein. The Secretary of the Interior shall cause the lots in any site now existing or to be located to be offered, sold, and conveyed as provided in sections 2382 and 2383 of the Revised Statutes. The money so received from the sale of lots in each town site, less such amount as shall be required to be paid to the Indians as provided in sections 5 and 6 of this act, shall be held by the Secretary of the Interior path is direction for the erection of school

Mr. PAYSON. I will say, Mr. Speaker, that this is the same provision that was inserted in the Oklahoma bill.

Mr. PEEL. That was what I was going to ask my friend.
Mr. BUCHANAN. It is all wrong.
Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman stated that it was by agreement.
Mr. PAYSON. There was no vote upon it.
The SPEAKER protempore. Where does the gentleman want this amendment to come in?

Mr. PAYSON. To strike out the first proviso on page 25, at the beginning of line 37, and insert it in lieu of these three lines commencing with "Provided" and ending with the words "per acre."

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the noes seemed to have it. A division was demanded.

The House divided; and there were-ayes 14, noes 9.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PAYSON. I move, to perfect the text of this section, in line 8, on page 23, after the words "town sites," to insert "as herein mod-

The amendment was agreed to.

Sections 22, 23, and 24 were passed without amendment.

When section 25 was reached,

Mr. BUCHANAN said: I ask to add to section 25 the following:

And that $28,200 be, and they hereby are, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for payment for the seven hundred and five horses that were unadvisedly and illegally taken by a portion of the Army of the United States, in the year 1875, from Red Cloud and Red Leaf and their bands of Sioux Indians, then at peace with the United States; and the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed, upon the said Indians expressing, through their proper council, their willingness to accept said sum as full and complete satisfaction for all their claims and demands against the United States for and on account of the loss of said horses, to pay the same over to said Indians, or to the person or persons whom they, through their proper council, shall select and empower as their agent or agents to receive and receipt for the same; said sum to be disbursed, under the direction of said council, to the individuals or their families from whom, as said council shall adjudge, said horses were so taken: Provided, That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs shall first approve of the selection or appointment of the agent or agents to receive and pay out the moneys herein appropriated.

Mr. BRECKINEIDGE of Kantuaky. I desire to

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I desire to reserve the point

Mr. BRECKINKIDGE, of Kentucky. I desire to reserve the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Subject to the point of order, I will make a statement in regard to this matter. The facts out of which this transaction grew will be found set forth in Executive Document No. 102, first session of the present Congress. That document contains a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, under date of June 19, 1888, transmitting a communication from Mr. Muldrow, Acting Secretary, of January 17, 1888, and inclosing a communication from Mr. Atkins, then Indian Commissioner two communications from Mr. Price, former then Indian Commissioner, two communications from Mr. Price, former Indian Commissioner, and one communication from Colonel Manypenny, each of these recommending the payment of this amount.

It is for ponies taken from the Sioux Indians in 1876. These officials two Commissioners of Indian Affairs and the Acting Secretary of the Treasury-have examined the claim, and say that it is a proper allowance to be made, and recommend that it be made.

Mr. PEEL. Mr. Speaker, while I do not think that this allowance ought to be made on this bill, I believe the claim is a very meritorious one. It has been examined by the Department with great care, and has been reported on perhaps a dozen times. The Committee on Indian Affairs has had it under consideration in two different Congres and I have myself made two reports upon it. As I have said, I do not think it ought to go into this bill, but the claim is a just one, and I shall not object.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The ground upon which I made the point of order was that I hardly thought that a bill containing as many provisions as this, and depending for its validity upon the consent of the Sioux Indians, ought to be made the vehicle of the payconsent of the Bioux Indians, ought to be made the vehicle of the payment of claims which can be properly legislated upon in a proper manner. This claim, even if it be a just one, belongs on a bill of a different character and can pass through Congress in another way, and it is not a good precedent to put it upon this bill. I understand there has been no report made of the claim to this Congress, and the bill is not now pending upon the Calendar with a favorable report, and I reserve a regint of order. point of order.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But the chairman of the committee [Mr. PEEL] states that he has himself reported upon this claim twice over.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I have no doubt, from the statement of the gentleman from Arkansas, that he has examined this claim carefully and that it is a very proper one; but all proper claims growing out of the relations between the Sioux Indians and the United States are not in order on this bill.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I hope the gentleman will not interpose a technicality to prevent justice being done in this case.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If we include one claim of this kind we may include all such claims.

Mr. BUCHANAN. They have already waited twelve years, and I hope the gentleman will not interpose a technicality here to defeat the payment of this claim now.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I am very sorry for those who have waited, but there have been a good many depredations committed by Indians during those twelve years from which other people have suffered, and they have had to wait, and have not got their money yet. The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is constrained to sustain the point of order. The Clerk read the titles of sections 25 and 26.

Mr. HOOKER. I offer an amendment, to come in as an additional section to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 27. That this act shall take effect only upon the acceptance thereof and consent thereto by the different bands of the Sioux Nation of Indians in the manner and form prescribed by the twelfth article of the treaty between the United States and said Sioux Indians, concluded April 20, 1868, which said acceptance and consent shall be made known by proclamation by the President of the United States upon satisfactory proof presented to him that the same has been obtained in the manner and form required by said twelfth article of the treaty, which proof shall be presented to him within one year from the passage of this act; and upon failure of such proof and proclamation this act to have no effect and to be null and void.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi as an additional section.

Mr. PEEL. I accept the amendment.
Mr. HOOKER. The amendment is accepted by the chairman of the committee, as I understand? Mr. PEEL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, if the gentle-man from Arkansas, the chairman of the committee, accepts the amendment, of course I will not interpose, but I simply want to put on record the view which I hold, that this is not a precedent that ought to be established at this time.

Mr. PERKINS. I want to be recorded as seconding that. [Laugh-

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I believe, Mr. Speaker, the time has some when the General Government ought to recognize the fact that its duty to the Indians lies in a higher domain than in apparently keeping the letter of a treaty, a course which results in keeping the Indians vagabonds and paupers and their reservations mere breeding places of vice.

Mr. PERKINS. And of ignorance and crime.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I believe that it is in a higher domain that we must find our true relation to the Indian with reference to his development and civilization, and I think the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi—I say it with that great respect which I have for him and all that he does in the House—is not in the line of the true interests of the Indian. As long as we give the Indian large reservations upon which to roam, and feed him, and clothe him, and thereby constantly tempt him to remain a vagabond, he will be on our hands as a constant source of expense, and not only that, but as the breeder of vice in the localities in which we keep him.

Therefore, our true policy, I believe, is, as rapidly as it can be done under the conditions in which we find him, to destroy the tribal relations of the Indian, allot to him in severalty such land as is necessary for his support, retain in the Treasury a fair price for the land we take from him for the white settler, and for a reasonable length of time pay interest upon it in the shape of an annuity, with the distinct understanding that at the end of a limited period he is to run the risk of losing his lend and sangadaring his annual to the state of the same than the losing his land and squandering his money unless his own prudence prevents such a result, just as every other man has to do, and that after a certain time he must depend upon himself for his development and for the support of himself and his family.

What is that time is a question of detail which I am not to-night prepared to discuss; and it is not necessary I should do so. I think, under the circumstances, that the policy I have indicated is that to which we must look forward; and I did not desire to sit here and seem by my silence to approve the principle that the American Government can not by act of Congress open these reservations, with justice toward the Indians, without their consent. The Supreme Court of the United States has decided that we have this power. I think our true interest suggests that we should exercise it; and true kindness to the Indian points in the same direction.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word in response to what has fallen from the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. Breckin-RIDGE] with reference to the propriety of the amendment I have just offered. I believe the honorable gentleman was present at the last ses-sion of this Congress when the House passed the bill providing in the very terms I have incorporated in this amendment that the assent of the Sioux Nation should be had to that measure before it became a law. I presume the gentleman gave his assent to that proposition; I imagine he voted for the bill, though I have not examined the record.

With reference to the question whether or not it is a proper policy on the part of the Government of the United States and a kindness toward the Indians, in order to save them and to save their lands to the white settlers, to disregard the treaties which we have heretofore solemnly made with those nations, I have only to say that I do not think the Indian will be very much advantaged if he is to lose all his landed estate by the violation of a treaty which you yourselves twenty-one years ago entered into with him, and by which you provided that he should not lose any more of the lands than he had then lost in the Black Hills, which, being discovered by the white man to be valuable, were taken from him, the treaty of 1868 being made by General Sherman, the leader of your Army, by which treaty you agreed that none of the residue of the reservation should ever be taken from the Indians except with the consent of the requisite number of male adults of the tribes, as prescribed in the treaty.

In 1876 you made another agreement upon this subject with these In 1876 you made another agreement upon this subject with these Indians, in which the same principle was adopted—that their lands should remain theirs, not subject to be taken from them except with their consent. So late as the first session of this Congress you passed a bill for which I presume the honorable gentleman from Kentucky voted, in which you provided for obtaining the assent of the Indians to the cession of the remaining portion of the Great Sioux reservation, which was left to them after the execution of the treaty of 1868.

The argument of the honorable gentleman from Kentucky is that you are going to civilize the Indian by taking from him that which belongs to him and which you have conceded to belong to him. How much better off, I would ask my honorable friend from Kentucky, will the Indian be so far as concerns his advancement in civilization by the violation of the treaties which the Government has made with him?

violation of the treaties which the Government has made with him? Do you propose to benefit him by taking that which is his, and which, by the most solemn form of agreement which one nation can have with another, you have conceded to be his?

When you wanted the Black Hills you made this treaty; you eagerly, anxiously made it; and said that the residue of the Great Sioux reservation should belong to the Indians, not to be taken from them without their consent. Let me say to my honorable friend from Kentucky that when the commission was sent to the Sioux for the purpose of treating with them on this subject, those Indians, though they were "blanket Indians," though they did not live in the blaze of the civilization of the nineteenth century, though they had not advanced to the same extent as the five semi-civilized tribes, showed a native vigor of intellect and a comprehension of their rights which would have been creditable to any man dressed in the garb of European or American civilization. When the commissioners offered them 50 cents an acre for their land they said, "You have not offered us the value of our land." They said what any white man would have the right to say, "You have not offered us the value of our lands, and we decline the offer."

This bill originally proposed that this land, saving and reserving the six reservations which are carved out for the several tribes of the Sioux Nation, be taken without the assent of the Indians. But the honorable chairman of the committee, acting for the committee, agreed to accept this amendment of mine which proposes we shall still respect the treaty made between these Indians and the Government of the United States.

I do not know, Mr. Speaker, how you are going to civilize these Indians by denying them the very rights which, under your treaties, you have conceded to them. By what legerdemain of legislation does my honorable friend from Kentucky propose to advance the welfare of the Indian by taking from him that which by the most solemn compact has been conceded to be his? Is every treaty to be violated, is every agreement to which the plighted faith of the nation has been solemnly pledged to be disregarded?

"These are savages," you say. But they are savages who seem to understand their rights and to insist upon them. Hence, when they were brought here in some numbers for the purpose of being treated were brought here in some numbers for the purpose of being treated with by the Government, and when, in the midst of the splendor of the city of Washington, the great Federal city, they met your Secre-tary of the Interior and others, they advanced through their interpreters a line of argument in maintenance of their rights which the distinguished Secretary and those who were acting with him were unable, with all their civilization, to answer.

I say, therefore, this amendment is a proper one, and I am glad the gentleman who represents the Indian Committee has consented to adopt it as a part of his bill. It ought to be done. It is right and proper it should be done. It is simply a naked act of justice, and ought not to be denied in the name of civilization which should be based on the recognition of the great cardinal rule of doing unto your neighbor as you would have your neighbor do unto you.

I say, sir, that all civilization is based on this cardinal principle, and although these are blanket Indians, although they are uncivilized, although they are wards under the guardianship of this great American nation, it does not follow therefore that the United States can afford with any regard to its reputation to break the solemn treaty which it has made with these Indians.

Mr. KILGORE. Will the gentleman from Mississippi allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOOKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. KILGORE. If I understand the purpose of the amendment moved by the gentleman from Mississippi, it is to obtain assent of two-thirds of the adult males of the Sioux Nation of Indians to this bill before it shall become a law.

Mr. HOOKER. That is the treaty.

Mr. KILGORE. I suggest, then, to the gentleman from Mississippi that he ought to embrace in his amendment provision for the glass beads and mean whisky with which to buy that assent of that twothirds majority?

Mr. HOOKER. In reply to the interruption and question propounded to me by the gentleman from Texas, I will say that I think it is likely you have got a great deal of the land of these Indians already by the use of such means. When you proposed to pay to these Indians 50 cents an acre for the land which is embraced by the terms of this bill cents an acre for the land which is embraced by the terms of this bill did you expect to do it by means of cheap beads and mean whisky?

Mr. KILGORE. No, but in money.

Mr. HOOKER. These Indians understand how it is to be paid, and if the United States hitherto has acquired the lands of these Indians through means of beads and whisky, if it has exercised toward them a Punic faith almost without parallel, I wish to say now that the day has passed when such things can be done, when it can be said that a dead Indian is the best Indian. You must do them justice and not subject them to further outrage. I have no sympathy, Mr. Speaker, with the proposition that with the strong arm of your Government you will take without regard to the rights of the Indians the lands which belong to them by treaty. I have as little sympathy with the suggestion long to them by treaty. I have as little sympathy with the suggestion coming from the gentleman from Texas, that you shall by means of trinkets and whisky take from them what remains of their possessions. Enough of this has been done already.

Why did you insert this same clause in the treaty? Some of the most distinguished officers of the United States Army were commissioners on the part of the United States, and signed that treaty. Why did these distinguished officers of the United States, and signed that treaty. Why did these distinguished officers of the United States Army append their signatures to that treaty entered into on their part with the chiefs and headmen of these blanket Sioux Indians? Why did they enter into this treaty containing this solemn stipulation on the part of this Government? Was it merely to keep the promise to the ear and break it to the hope?

You make reservations for six of these Sioux tribes of Indians. According to the argument of my friend it will not be long before you will come here and desire to obtain these reservations in precisely the same way in which you have secured possession of the other lands belonging to these Indians.

Hence it is, sir, that I insist you shall give a patent to these Indians for this land in the most solemn form to secure these Indians, because I apprehend, on the same principle suggested by gentlemen here, the time will soon come when these six reservations will be taken from them. I insist upon that amendment because I thought it was essential to the protection of their rights. I insist it is a just one because it is in to-tidem verbis copied from the bill passed at the first session of this Con-gress, and embodies the essence and spirit of the treaty made with these Sioux Indians in 1868.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not desire to discuss this matter further, and therefore have nothing to answer to what has been so eloquently, so plausibly, and so unsatisfactorily said by the gentleman from Mississippi.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. Hooker].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL. I now ask that the vote be taken on the amend-ment I have suggested.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new section between the seventeenth and eighteenth sections the following:

"SEC. —. For and in consideration of the restoration to the public domain of the land outside of the separate reservations herein set apart to the six different tribes of Indians and the provisions herein made, there is hereby appropriated the sum of $11,000,000 to be set apart out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, of which $20 per capita shall be paid at once in cash and the remainder deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the Sioux Nation of Indians as a permanent fund, the interest of which, at 5 per cent, per annum, shall be appropriated under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior to the use of the Indians lawfully residing on the reservations created by this act and legally belonging to said Sioux tribes, in proportion to the numbers that shall so reside at the time this act shall take effect, as follows:

"One-half of said interest shall be so expended for the promotion of industrial and other suitable education among said Indians, and in such manner and for such purposes as in the judgment of said Secretary shall, from time to time, most contribute to the advancement of said Indians in civilization and self-support, and the other half shall be paid to them in annual installments on a per capita basis: Provided, That after ten years from the time this agreement shall take effect any adult member of any one of said tribes who shall have become self-supporting shall be entitled to receive 5 per cent. of his or her proportionate share of said sum of $11,000,000 annually, in addition to his or her share of interest, until he or she shall have received the whole of the said share of $11,000,000.

Mr. PEEL. I only desire to say, Mr. Speaker, as I did the other evening, that as far as the Government is concerned it does not make whether you undertake to adopt a provision of this character involving quite a large sum, for it will cost the Government $40,000,000 to carry out the policy entered upon, any way. I simply desire to have a vote in order to proceed with the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker was tempore (Mr. Speakers).

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER) decided that it was rejected.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask a division on that question.
Mr. PERKINS. It is too late; the Chair has decided.
Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi demands a division on the vote just taken.

Mr. MORRILL. The gentleman demanded a division as soon as the vote was announced.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will again submit the ques-

So the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the next amendment, offered to section 17 by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL].

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 17 after the word "effect," in the seventh line, and insert: "When an Indian who has taken an allotment under this section proceeds to build a house and shows a desire to adopt civilized, industrial habits, he or she shall be entitled to receive from the United States two milch cows, a yoke of oxen, one wagon, and $100 worth of agricultural implements and seeds, and for three years thereafter seeds and implements to the value of $25 per year; also instruction from farmers, etc., as provided for in the treaty of 1868 between the United States and the Sioux Indians."

Mr. PERKINS. I desire to suggest that it will not do, in my judgment, to adopt the amendment now, and strike out all that remains of section 17, since the other amendment was rejected. When that amendment was prepared it was prepared. I presume, in contemplation of the other amendment which was voted down by the House, hence it will never do to accept this amendment.

Mr. MORRILL. I will withdraw that amendment now since the action just taken by the House on this section.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will now report the amendment sent up a few moments ago by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "cash," in line 23, page 20, section 17 of the bill, insert:
"Provided, That no sales, barters, or bargains shall be made by any person other than said Indians with each other of any of the personal property herein, provided for, and any violation of this provision shall be deemed a misdemeanor and punished by a fine of not exceeding $100, or by imprisonment of not exceeding one year, or both, in the discretion of the court."

The amendment was adopted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Are there any other amendments to the

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. Speaker, we were to be permitted to recur to section 16, to which section I had an amendment to offer.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will send his amendment to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 17 of the bill, in line 53, strike out the words "stock-yards, warehouses, elevators," and in lines from 54 to 59, inclusive, strike out the words "but nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent any such railroad company from building upon such lands houses for the accommodation or residence of their employes, or leasing grounds contiguous to its tracks for warehouse or elevator purposes connected with said railways."

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to say that at the time this bill was under consideration before the Committee on Indian Affairs I was not present or else I should have offered the amendment there.

Mr. ADAMS. This amendment does not affect the grant of any of the lands to the railroads; it only affects the use of the lands which they get; and when the gentleman provides by his amendment that the railroads shall not use the lands for certain purposes, I wish he would explain what public injury will ensue from their using the lands for such purposes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I will endeavor to explain to the gentleman.

The House will observe, Mr. Speaker, that the amendment does not interfere with the use of any of the lands which the railroad takes solely for railroad purposes. Any lands which the railroad companies get under the provisions of this bill for right of way, depot grounds, sta-tion privileges, or terminal facilities, every inch and foot of land which they are given the exclusive right to purchase under the provisions of this bill for such purposes only, I am heartily in favor of their having. But, sir, I am opposed to any railroad company's being given the exclusive right to purchase any part of the public domain to be used for any other purposes. My amendment takes from them the exclusive right to buy and lease this land to favored elevator companies and thus control all of the warehouses and elevators along their railroad lines. I may say to the gentleman from Illinois I am informed that along some of the lines of railroad in this country, where the railroad companies have had the privilege of renting or leasing to elevator companies. panies these privileges, there is but one such company for hundreds and hundreds of miles along the line of such roads buying grain and produce from the farmers, who must sell without any competition what-

And it is for the purpose of opening to everybody, to every individual or company desiring to buy grain and to erect warehouses or elevators along the line of these roads an equal privilege with every other man or company, and so that when we open that country there will be some competition in the buying of grain and other produce.

Mr. PEEL. It is in perfect accordance with the last bill, is it not? Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is in perfect accord with the bill as we reported it, but this proposition was incorporated by the Senate when it got there.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PAYSON. I ask the adoption of the following order:

Ordered. That the previous question be ordered on the engrossment, third reading, and passage of the bill, and upon the pending amendments offered by the gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Illinois, respectively, to section 21, and that as to these two amendments a yea-and-nay vote shall be taken; forty minutes for debate, the time to be equally divided.

I understand that if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky be adopted the other will be withdrawn.

Mr. PAYSON. I will agree to that.
Mr. BUCHANAN. But there seems to be another difficulty. The order provides, as I understand it, that the House to-morrow shall act upon all the amendments that have been adopted.

DEAD AND FALLEN TIMBER ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

Mr. PEEL. I call up the bill (S. 3858) in relation to dead and fallen timber on Indian lands, which is a bill that we report from the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I desire to offer the following as an amendment or substitute for the bill.

The substitute was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the President of the United States may from year to year, in his discretion, under such regulations as he may prescribe, authorize Irdians residing on reservations or allotments the fee to which remains in the United States to fell, cut, remove, sell, or otherwise dispose of dead timber, standing or fallen, on such reservations or allotments, for the sole behefit of such Indian or Indians; but whenever there is reasonable cause to believe that such timber has been killed, burned, girdled, or otherwise injured for the purpose of securing its sale under this act, then in that case such authority shall not be granted.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH WHITE EARTH RESERVATION.

Mr. PEEL. The next bill I will call up is one which we had up the evening before last, and was a long bill; but here is one which is a substitute that can be disposed of readily. It is a bill the gentleman from Minnesota is interested in.

Mr. NELSON. I call up the bill (H. R. 12443) granting to the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railroad a right of way through the White Earth reservation, in the State of Minnesota.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This bill is in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. NELSON. I move that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PEEL. To save time, as there is another bill that we desire to pass, and the time is short, I will say that this is a regular right-of-way bill, such as is usually passed for rights of way through the Territories of the Northwest. We have passed a great many of them.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to know the provisions as to the AGREEMENT WITH SHOSHONES AND OTHER INDIANS.

Mr. PEEL. I now call up the bill (S. 2992) to accept and ratify the agreement submitted by the Shoshones, Bannocks, and Sheepeaters of the Fort Hall and Lemhi reservations in Idaho, May 14, 1880, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

the third time, and passed.

Mr. PEEL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

POTTAWATOMIE INDIANS OF MICHIGAN AND INDIANA.

I now call up the bill (S. 2176) for the ascertainment of the amount due the Pottawatomie Indians of Michigan and Indiana. This bill is in charge of my colleague on the committee from Michigan [Mr. ALLEN].

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas the "Business Committee" of the Pottawatomie Indians, of Michigan and Indiana, for themselves, and in behalf of all other Pottawatomie Indians, of said States, make claim against the United States on account of various treaty provisions which, it is alleged, have not been complied with: There

Sec. 2. That said action shall be commenced by a petition stating the facts on which said Pottawatomie Indians claim to recover, and the amount of their claims, and said petition may be verified by any member of said "Business Committee," or their authorized attorney, as to the existence of such facts, and no other statements need be contained in said petition or verification.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. Speaker, from the reading of that bill as I caught it I understand that its object is to reopen a business transaction between these Indians and the Government which has been heretofore settled and closed. I will ask the gentleman from Michigan if my understanding is correct.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I will explain the facts to the gentleman. This bill does propose to have a resettlement of this transaction regardless of a certain receipt which was given by some of these Indians. The question has been under investigation by the Department almost since 1880, and Secretary Teller and Commissioner Atkins have both recommended the passage of this bill.

The Senate passed the bill upon the report of Senator DANIEL, of Virginia, and it was passed there, I believe, without a dissenting voice, Its object is to provide that claims which the Indians say have not been settled shall be again heard upon their merits, and that the Indians shall not be estopped because some of them have given what is called a receipt in full. The bill simply proposes to do what is done in court every day; that is, to go behind a receipt to correct errors and mistakes. It refers the whole matter to the Court of Claims for adjudication.

Mr. KILGORE. And it provides that the Court of Claims may render a final judgment.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. No, sir; there is an appeal to the Supreme Court.

Mr. KILGORE. But if the decision of the Court of Claims is confirmed, that is final. The bill does not merely authorize a simple finding by the court?

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. No, sir; it authorizes a judgment if there is anything found due.

Mr. KILGORE. How much is claimed by these parties?
Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Secretary Vilas and Commissioner Atkins say, first, that this bill should be passed as a matter of justice; and, secondly, that if the Indians should recover all that they claim it would amount to about $181,000. The amount, however, has nothing to do with the question, provided the money belongs to the Indians.

Mr. KILGORE. Do those Government officers say that we ought to reopen this matter and have a new overhauling of the entire transaction?

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. That is what they are on record as saying. I will read to my friend what they say, if he desires.

Mr. KILGORE. Well, I will say to my friend from Michigan that would not be willing that that bill should go through here to-night. I do not care about consuming time, but I can not consent that this bill shall pass to-night. There are too many complications about it, and there is too much involved in it for me to consent to let it go through under the circumstances

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Would not the gentleman allow it to go through if I could satisfy him that it is right?

Mr. KILGORE. That would take too long. Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. No, sir; it would not take five min-

Mr. PERKINS. Will not the gentleman from Texas permit the bill to be voted on in a full House if it be amended so as to compel the Attorney-General to appeal the case if the decision should be against the Government?

Mr. KILGORE. I think we had better let this bill be passed over for to-night.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Before my friend finally determines this matter let me tell him something. I am acquainted with these Indians. I know them personally, for I was an Indian agent in Michi-

Mr. KILGORE. The effect of the bill is to give these Indians a right of action which they have not now, and I am opposed to it.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. It has been found by officers of the Government, including those of the present Administration, that these Indians, by chicanery on the part of a few, have been cheated out of what is their due; and hence the officers of the Government are not only willing but recommend that the whole case be reopened in order that justice may be done to these people. I know them, and I speak for them, because they are not only deserving but needy. If the money is theirs, whether it be $1 or $100,000, we should not stand here and ask ourselves whether we will give it to them. That is not the question with an honest man such as my friend from Texas is.

Mr. KILGORE. I understand that is not the question; but there being a large amount involved here, and as we propose to give these parties a standing in court which they have not now under the law, to give them a right of action which they do not now possess, and as there are a great many complications about the matter, I say we ought not to undertake to pass this measure to-night or to put it in such an attitude as to give it a preference on some subsequent occasion.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Allow me just a moment further. The only advantage which this bill will give these Indians is that the court will inquire into this matter, regardless of the fact that a receipt in full has been passed. In every court in this country the practice prevails of allowing litigants to go behind receipts.

Mr. KILGORE. If the question of fraud arises these parties can

Mr. KILCORE. If the question of fraud arises these parties can go behind the receipt anyhow without this legislation.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. But this question has not been settled. We simply propose to send these parties to a court suitable for the trial of this class of cases, and if it appears after investigation that the Government owes them anything, let them have it.

I know that if my friend knew these people as well as I do he would not for a moment heritate to allow them the grant court and if they

I know that if my friend knew these people as well as I do he would not for a moment hesitate to allow them to go into court, and if they have any rights establish them; and then I know he would gladly ask the Government to pay them. But my friend does not know these people, and I ask him to take my word in their behalf, for I have been familiar with them for years; and I say to him that it is unjust to postpone further this hearing; it is not only unjust, but it is uncalled for.

Mr. KILGORE. I can not agree with my friend from Michigan. I have a great deal of regard for his opinion, but then I have a little higher regard for my own. [Laughter.]

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. If the gentleman for this once will put my opinion in place of his it will be an advantage to the cause of justice.

justice.

Mr. KILGORE. I would like very much to do so, but I do not see how I can to-night.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that I have said all that I could in behalf of this measure, though I would not say any less; yet in the few moments we have here to-night, and with the great interests intrusted to the keeping of this committee, I do not feel like arguing this question further, for I do not wish to place myself in the way of other meritorious bills. But I exceedingly regret that these men, who have no voice here, are not permitted to go into court and, if the Government owes them this money, establish that fact by a legal decision.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the Chair understands, the bill is

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The preceding section will be read. The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That when the charge of desertion shall be removed under the provisions of this act from the record of any soldier, such soldier, or, in case of his death, the heirs or legal representatives of such soldier, shall receive the pay and bounty due to such soldier: Provided, however, That this act shall not be so construed as to give to any such soldier, any pay, bounty, or allowance for any time during which such soldier was absent from his command without proper authority, nor shall it be so construed as to give any pay, bounty, or allowance to any soldier, his heirs or legal representatives, who served in the Army a period of less than six months.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President—
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? The Chair hears none, and it is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to inquire of the Senator who reports this bill whether he thinks the provision that in no case shall any bounty be allowed unless the soldier had served six months is exactly I should like an explanation of it.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the soldier served six months he received, if he was entitled to a bounty, the proportionate share of the bounty. I do not think that the cases which would be excluded by this provision would be at all the meritorious cases

This is a general bill. It is intended to cover the soldiers of the Mexican war in the volunteer and regular Army and the soldiers of the late war in the volunteer and regular Army. We have tried to provide in the bill for all classes of worthy and deserving soldiers, at the same time not breaking down the distinction between deserters and skulkers, those who evaded duty continuously, and the true soldiers.

In the Mexican war it is estimated that there were some 13,000 men in the volunteer and regular Army who were charged with deser-I find upon an examination of some of the rolls that a large number of the desertions in the Mexican war were after enrollment, and before the soldiers had gone to the seat of war. Therefore we put in a clause providing that nobody shall be relieved under this proposed law who deserted prior to reaching the seat of war.

In regard to the late war, we have passed the act of 1882, then the act of 1884, and then the act of 1887 for the relief of soldiers charged with desertion. This is a continuance of all those acts, and provides for the relief of all the worthy and deserving classes that can be provided for by a general law. There will doubtless be some exceptional cases which can not be provided for under a general law without breaking down all distinction between soldiers and deserters.

in the regular Army for a fixed period of five years shall not take advantage of having left the service after the 1st day of May, 1865.

We also provide in the substitute for the future relief of those who left one command in the Army and joined another command in the Army. It is already provided under the general law that if a man left one company and joined another in ninety days he can be relieved, but under this proposed law we extend it to four months, and also extend the provision to those who left the Army and joined the Navy or the Marine Corps, which is an extension of the provision, and will relieve all those who in the Mississippi Valley in 1862—and there are many such cases—left the Army and joined what was called the gunboat flotilla, to which they were authorized to be transferred, but in most cases the officers refused to consent or did not forward the papers, and the soldiers went immediately and joined the flotilla. This will relieve them.

We think now with this law and the law which was passed last summer for the relief of those who were in the naval service, which is similar to this, all of the classes of worthy and deserving soldiers, sailors, and marines can be by the Department relieved of the charge of desertion

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri if this is the unanimous report of the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is the unanimous report, and has the sanction of the officer in the War Department who is the most thoroughly posted and who has had charge of these cases and knows the meritorious cases that ought to be relieved.

Mr. HAWLEY. I desire to observe that it is the unanimous and cordial report of the whole committee. And it is not out of place to observe that the substitute has been most laboriously prepared by the Senator from Missouri, an ex-Confederate officer, and is entirely satisfactory to all men of all beliefs and parties.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. MANDERSON, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

RAILWAY POSTAL CLERKS.

Mr. CHACE. I offer the following resolution and ask for its present consideration:

We make certain provisions applicable to the regular Army as well as to the volunteer. The distinction is drawn so that those who enlisted changes of railway postal clerks, by quarterly periods, occurring from January 1, 1885, to December 31, 1888, with the reasons for such changes; the said statement to be in tabular form similar to that hereto annexed.

FREDERICK N. KRESS.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask the Senate to consider the bill (S. 3779) for the relief of Frederick N. Kress.

The PRESIDENT protempore. The Calendar under Rule VIII being in order, the Senator from Pennsylvania asks that the bill named by him may be now considered.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the bill be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read for information subject to objection.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

The Chief Ciefk read the bill, as follows:

Whereas Frederick N. Kress, late a naval cadet in the United States Navy, having passed with distinction his final examination for graduation, and being found mentally, morally, and professionally qualified for promotion to the rank of ensign, has been, however, found physically disqualified for promotion by reason of a disease contracted from exposure in the line of duty at sea, which entirely disables him and because of which he was honorably discharged: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint the said Frederick N. Kress an ensign in the United States Navy on the retired-list.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Court of Claims is hereby given original jurisdiction to hear and adjudicate according to justice and right the case of Warren Hall, as originally tried and reported in the minth Court of Claims Reports, page 170, and known as "Hall and Roche's case," notwithstanding the former trial; and the bar of limitation is hereby removed. And for this purpose the court shall hear and consider the new testimony and any other proper testimony which may be offered at the trial by the claimant or on the part of the defendant Government; and the testimony considered by the court in the original trial, so far as the same may be applicable to the new trial, shall also be available.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. HOAR. I move an amendment to add to the bill:

If it shall appear to said court that said Hall was born free, the fact that he had been reduced to a state of slavery de facto shall not be held to be a bar to his recovery or to have prevented him from acquiring property.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order.
Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, I wish to state, in connection with the demand of the Senator from New Hampshire, that on Monday last I gave notice that at the close of the formal morning business tolast I gave notice that at the close of the formal morning business to-day I would ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1067) relating to imported liquors. I wish to say now that I de-sire, instead of following up that notice, to give way to the Senator from Kansas, who makes the request he has for the consideration of House bill 1368, at the same time renewing my notice for to-morrow, that then, after the close of the formal morning business, I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1067, for the purpose of presenting same observations in connection therewith the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1067, for the purpose of presenting some observations in connection therewith.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire coming over from a previous day, the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLEEK. A resolution in relation to naval officers' claims. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question upon agreeing to the resolution?

Mr. ALLISON. I set the Senator from New Hampshire to allow

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to allow may get up the bill he has referred to.

Mr. PLUMB. My motion is pending.

Mr. CHANDLER. One or two Senators intend to speak upon the resolution, and I desire that the morning hour be not entirely consumed to-day. If this bill will not take too much time I shall yield to the Senator with pleasure.

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire yields to the Senator from Kansas, who asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1368) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and will be read at length if there be no objection.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. CULLOM. Is this bill up for consideration?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair announced that it was before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole by unanimous consent, having called for objections.

Mr. HISCOCK. I certainly did not understand that the motion to take up the bill had been agreed to or consented to. It is a measure on which my colleague from New York [Mr. EVARTS] desires to be heard. He is not here this morning, and I certainly desire that he heard. He is not here this morning, and I certainly desire that he may have an opportunity to be present.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator that this bill, it was understood, would come up this morning. I notified the colleague of the Senator from New York, who is not yet in the Chamber or in the Capitol, as I understand, that it would be called up. Of course for myself I would not be willing to have any advantage taken improperly in the consideration of this bill. It is one that affects a great many people who are very poor people. Now if we can have an understanding that it may be taken up to-morrow morning, I shall be very glad to waive the question of his absence now so far as I am concerned.

Mr. HISCOCK. I certainly have no desire to postpone action on the bill. All that I desire is that my colleague may be present when it is bill. All that I desire is that my colleague may be present when it is taken up.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. With the consent of the Senator from Kansas I will ask unanimous consent that to-morrow morning, with the consent of my colleague, at the conclusion of the morning business, it may be taken up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the bill may resume its place on the Calendar, to be taken up to-morrow morning at the close of the morning business. Is there objection?

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to say that if it transpires that my colleague is out of town at the time indicated (not with a view of postponing action upon the bill for any time, but simply to avoid having the bill considered in his absence), I trust there may be an opportunity for him to be heard.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears

Mr. HISCOCK. I will object.

Mr. ALLISON. If we can not have some understanding respecting this bill-

Mr. HISCOCK. I would suggest that the request for unanimous consent lie over for a short time and possibly my colleague may come into the Chamber, when doubtless a satisfactory arrangement can be

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me I will agree that this may be done, with the understanding that if the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] is not here to-morrow morning the bill shall be again postponed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks—Mr. HISCOCK. Or postponed if from any unavoidable cause my colleague can not be present.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is in doubt what request to submit to the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow morning this bill which has been called up may be taken up.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suggest to the Senator to put in connection with that that if for any reason my colleague [Mr. EVARTS] can not be here, he will consent that it be deferred until he can be here. Certainly there will be no attempt, no disposition to postpone it unreasonably.

My colleague may be seen.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the bill now under consideration, resuming its place on the Calendar, may be considered to-morrow at the close of the formal morning business. The Chair hears no objection. It is so ordered.

DAVID MERIWETHER.

Mr. SPOONER submitted the following report:

Mr. SPOONER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 331) for the relief of David Meriwether, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out all after the word "appropriated," in line 3, down to and including the word "all," in line 10, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"Three thousand six hundred and thirty-two dollars and thirty-eight cents, being the amount due him as disbursing agent of public moneys; also $525 for loss of public moneys sustained without fault on his part; amounting in all to the sum of $4,157.38."

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOHN C. SPOONER, GEORGE F. HOAR, JAMES K. JONES, Managers on the part of the Senate. W. P. TAULBEE, FRANK T. SHAW, WM. E. MASON, Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

NAVAL OFFICERS' CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the resolution offered by the Senator from New Hampshire in regard to naval officers' claims, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be instructed to make inquiry and ascertain the amount of the claims of officers of the Navy which have been already presented and paid and the amount which will probably hereafter be presented for payment for arrears of pay for allowances due such officers, known as longevity, mileage, and training-ship and receiving-ship claims; and to report said amounts to the Senate with the opinion of the committee whether any fegislation is advisable in order to prevent any further allowance of such claims; and also to inquire and report whether or not unusual and improper facilities have recently been allowed in the office of the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury to attorneys or claim agents engaged in presenting training-ship and receiving-ship claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on agreeing to the resolution?

Mr. VEST. My colleague [Mr. COCKRELL] desired to be heard upon this resolution, and is absent from the Chamber. I have sent for him and he will be here in a moment.

Mr. GEORGE. Would it be in order now to ask unanimous consent to take up a bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question before the Senate is upon agreeing to the resolution of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire to make some explanation of the reasons for the resolution.

Mr. CHANDLER. There has been a pretty full discussion of this resolution. I see the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] is not now in his seat, and I will yield to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill.

Mr. GEORGE. It is Order of Business 2549, being Senate bill 3865.

WRITS OF ERROR AND APPEALS.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole. proceeded to consider the bill (S. 3865) to provide for writs of error or appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States in all cases involving the question of the jurisdiction of the courts below.

The first section provides, in all cases where a final judgment or decree shall be rendered in a circuit court of the United States in which there shall have been a question involving the jurisdiction of the court, the party against whom the judgment or decree is rendered shall be entitled to an appeal or writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States to review such judgment or decree without reference to the amount of the same; but in cases where the decree or judgment does not exceed the sum of $5,000 the Supreme Court shall not review any question raised upon the record except such question of jurisdiction; such writ of error or appeal shall be taken and allowed under the same provisions of law as apply to other writs of error or appeals except as provided in the next following section.

Under section 2, in cases of judgments or decrees mentioned in the first section, and heretofore rendered, where the period of limitation for taking writs of error or appeals in other cases has not expired, appeals or writs of error may be sued out at any time within one year hereafter.

Mr. SHERMAN. Is that bill reported from the Judiciary Committea?

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, sir; unanimously. Mr. SHERMAN. That bill goes in a contrary direction to what the Senate has hitherto gone; that is, it extends the juri-diction of the Supreme Court of the United States in many cases, and in all questions of jurisdiction extends the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to a great multitude of cases that now can not be carried to the court. We are told the court is already overloaded.

Mr. GEORGE. It is only where the question of the jurisdiction of the court below is involved.

Mr. SHERMAN. That may add a great multitude of cases. Every case that is removed is taken up on the ground of a question of jurisdiction being raised. I am rather surprised that such a bill has received the favorable report of the Judiciary Committee. I do not care to oppose it. I have no special objection to it myself.

Mr. GEORGE. It has been very carefully considered by the committee. The report is unanimous.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will not stand in the way, but I think it is running in the wrong direction.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GEORGIA JUDICIAL DISTRICTS.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I desire to call up and have considered now the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (H. R. 3312) to transfer certain counties from the southern judicial district to the northern district in the State of Georgia, and to divide the northern district in said State into two, to be known as the western and eastern divisions of said district, and for other purposes. motion to reconsider was entered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHER-MAN] a few days ago with a view to having a reconsideration of the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading, with a view to offer some amendments adopted to the bill by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The message from the House of Representatives will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

In the House of Representatives, January 29, 1889. Ordered, That the Clerk be directed to return to the Senate, in compliance with its request, the bill H. R. 3312.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent at this time for a reconsideration-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is moved that the vote by which the bill was passed and also the vote by which it was ordered to a third reading may be reconsidered. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Now, I desire, on behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary, to present certain amendments to the former amendment, which are indicated on the margin.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1 of the amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary it is proposed to strike out the word "Federal;" so as to read:

That the northeastern division of the southern judicial district of Georgia is hereby established, etc.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is a mere formal amendment. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The next amendment is in line 13 of section 2.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 12, after the word "appointed," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "same," in line 21, as follows:

And as the judge of said district now holds court in Savannah and Macon, and Augusta would be the third place of holding, making his expense heavy, it shall be the duty of the marshal, and he is hereby authorized, to pay, out of any money of the United States in his hands not otherwise disposed of, all hotel bills and other necessary expenses incurred by the judge of said district in holding said courts, said marshal taking and rendering proper vouchers for the

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. There is another amendment in section 3.

The PRESIDENT protempore. The amendment will be stated.
The CHIEF CLERK. In line 11 of section 3, after the word "may' it is proposed to insert "if the plaintiff is a citizen of the district."

The amendment was agreed to. The amendment of the Committee on the Judiciary as amended was

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I now move that the Senate insist on its amendment and ask for a conference thereon.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. WILSON of Iowa, Mr. Brown, and Mr. FRYE were appointed.

NAVAL OFFICERS' CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the resolution submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire

[Mr. CHANDLER] in relation to naval officers' claims.

Mr. ALLISON. I am in sympathy with the general intent and purse of this resolution, but I want to submit to the Senator from New Hampshire that it will be rather difficult for the Committee on Appropriations to make this contemplated investigation during this s of Congress, as it implies an amount of work that it is impossible for the Committee on Appropriations to take up now. I suggest to the Senator to insert, instead of the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on Naval Affairs, and if he will consent to that I will offer that

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa proposes to amend the resolution in the manner that will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the first line of the resolution, it is proposed to strike out the word "Appropriations" and insert "Naval Affairs;" so as to read:

That the Committee on Naval Affairs, etc.

Mr. VOORHEES. Is that amendment subject to an amendment? If so, I would move that the matter be referred to the Judiciary Committee. These are legal questions that ought to be inquired into by the law committee, if at all. I have not much choice about it, except that the proprieties seem to me that way.

Mr. ALLISON. These matters as proposed to be submitted to the Committee on Appropriations seem to require that the committee should take action of an important nature. At present it is the duty of that committee to present amendments appropriating money where the courts have decided that the money is due; and in order to get rid of this natural obligation that is implied as being the duty of the Committee on Appropriations the resolution appears to make it necessary to report a change of the law. If the law is to be changed the Committee on Appropriations have no jurisdiction, because the moment we bring in here an appropriation bill in which we propose to change the law we shall find a point of order made.

Of course I do not shrink from the investigation of this question if it is thought wise on the whole that the Committee on Appropriations should undertake it, but I submit to the Senator from New Hampshire that the Committee on Naval Affairs, that is familiar with all the details of the statutes respecting pay, mileage, etc., could better undertake this investigation.

Mr. CHANDLER. In reference to the suggestion of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I have to say that I hope he will withdraw his amendment, and that the Committee on Appropriations will commence this inquiry. If they find themselves unable to proceed with it, then some other method of investigation may be appropriate. But the resolution was presented by me in the face of the transmission by the Secretary of the Treasury of estimates to cover a million and a quarter of audited and allowed claims from the War Department and the Navy Department. The character of the claims making up that sum of a million and a quarter of dollars is mixed. I do not know how many of those claims are objectionable. I do not know that any of them ought to be allowed; but I do know that there is a very serious question in the minds of some members of the Senate, and I think in the minds of some members of the Committee on Appropriations, of which the Senator from Iowa is chairman, as to whether these claims should be allowed; and therefore I felt that the Committee on Appropriations would necessarily be obliged to make inquiry substantially as proposed by the resolution of instruction. Therefore it was that I made the resolution one of direction to that committee. The Committee on Appropriations is confronted with that estimate of a million and a quarter dollars, and must make some investigation.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he thinks the Committee on Appropriations can from time to time change existing law, because the resolution involves the idea that we shall propose or recommend legislation on this subject, and also that we shall inquire into the conduct of the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury. I have no objection to intrusting that duty to the Committee on Appropriations. I only want to give the Senate fair notice that with the press of business that we are likely to have between now and the 4th of March it will be impossible to conclude the inquiry involved in this resolution.

So far as the question of appropriating money is concerned, I have no doubt the Committee on Appropriations will give it full investigation, and will not ask the Senate to appropriate money on any billthese claims will naturally come in the deficiency bill-for any doubtful purpose or any other purpose that is not clearly required by existing law.

Mr. CHANDLER. In order to ascertain that fact I believe the Committee on Appropriations will find it expedient to make all the inquiries that are suggested by the resolution. Therefore I think they should undertake the investigation in the first instance. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Cockrell] is more familiar with the details of these claims than I am, and he can state to the Senate whether it will embarrass them in the performance of the remaining work of the session, and whether it will not be necessary for the committee to make substantially the inquiry proposed in order to pass upon the estimates that have been submitted in connection with the deficiency bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I dwelt specially upon the last proposition in this resolution, which is:

And also to inquire and report whether or not unusual and improper facilities have recently been allowed in the office of the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury to attorneys or claim agents engaged in presenting training-ship and receiving-ship claims.

That, of course, is a pretty delicate inquiry, because it involves the integrity, practically, or at least the capacity, of the Fourth Auditor. I will withdraw my amendment. I do not care especially about this, except that I desire to give notice to the Senate that in my judgment it will not be practicable for the Committee on Appropriations to enter upon an investigation of the Fourth Auditor's Office between now and the 4th of March.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have not the slightest disposition to obstruct any investigation in regard to this matter. There are some purposes entertained by this resolution that I think are commendable, but I know very well that the Committee on Appropriations can not make the investigation which is desired, nor do I think it falls within their As, I think, I showed conclusively yesterday, every payment that has been made and every claim that has been adjusted for which payment and appropriation is now right and proper has been made not only under existing law, but existing law interpreted over and over again eight or ten times by the Supreme Court of the United States, the decisions of which I cited here yesterday. It was for that reason that I suggested that the question as to a statute of limitations and a change of law in these matters should go to the Committee on the Ju-

If, however, the Senator from Iowa withdraws his amendment to refer to the Committee on Naval Affairs because of any embarrassment which my amendment causes him, I am willing to withdraw the amendment looking to the Judiciary Committee and aid him in the purpose he has in view, not that I have any objection to the Committee on Appropriations taking charge of the subject other than he has stated, but if he desires to place this matter in the hands of the Committee on Naval Affairs I have not the slightest objection to doing so.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment being withdrawn the question recurs on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I regretted very much to hear the reading yesterday (but I have not had time to look at the RECORD) of the letter of some attorney or claim agent referring to the Fourth Auditor. I find the reference now in the RECORD before me, page 1654, a letter written by Tallmadge & Tallmadge, which was presented by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Cullom]. I see now that it was a circular, I presume a printed circular, sent broadcast throughout the land to all persons supposed to have claims, and in that the signers "refer by permission to Hon. Charles M. Shelley, Fourth Auditor United States Treasury; Hon. James W. Hyatt, Treasurer of United States." States.

All I have to say is that if these two officers gave permission for claim agents or attorneys prosecuting claims before the Treasury Department to refer to them, in my judgment they committed a very grievous blunder, an error to say the least. I think it places them in a very false attitude, and I regret exceedingly to see that it is stated there that the reference is "by permission." I do not think that accounting officers of the Treasury ought to permit any claim agent or attorney to refer to them and to refer claimants to them as to their character and standing and efficiency, because if they do the impression will be created and held out to claimants that the attorneys who have this permission have special influence with the accounting officers and can press claims through which other honorable and respectable attorneys who have not that permission can not do. I regretted exceedingly to see it, and I hope that if it were given it will be withdrawn and that hereafter no accounting officer of the Treasury Department will ever place himself in that unenviable position. I feel quite sure that if the permission was given it was given unadvisedly and without any improper motive or desire on the part of those officers, but it is unfortunate that they did it.

Now, Mr. President, referring to the circulars which are sent out by the claim agents of this city, I hold in my hand one which I desire to read and spread upon the RECORD. It is headed:

WM. CONARD & CO.,
ATTORNEYS-AT-LAW AND SOLICITORS OF PATENTS AND CLAIMS, OFFICES, 1106 F STREET,
Washington, D.C., November, 1886.

I will ask the Secretary to read this letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

I will ask the Secretary to read this letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

We respectfully call your attention to this circular, and all we request of you is to read it carefully and decide whether or not it is to your best interest to comply with it. We will make no misrepresentations to you, as while we would be subject to disbarment under the act of July 4, 1884, if we did, we do not propose to do it in any event, as we have too large a business and think too much of the good reputation we have obtained in the conduct of our business to jeopardize it by making false and delusive statements to our clients. We have been your attorney in your claim for pension which has been rejected, and we now advise you to let us present the same to Congress and apply for a "special act" pension. We do not send this circular to all of our rejected cases, but we carefully examine all of them and our record in each case, and only select such as we believe fit for Congressional action. We believe your case to be of such a character, and we have every reason to believe we could get a "special act" passed for your benefit, as we have been very successful in this class of business, having secured "special act" pensions for a number of our clients, all of whose cases had been rejected by the Pension office.

The Commissioner of Pensions by law must have certain evidence, and if this is not supplied he has no alternative but to reject the case. A large number of cases which are meritorious are rejected by the Pension office on the ground "that there is no record evidence of the disability, and claimant is unable to furnish any." Congress is not bound by these rules of evidence. Many of the "special acts" we have secured for our clients, their cases have been again and again rejected by the Pension Office, but their names are now on the pension-rolls and they are in the enjoyment of a good pension for life.

Our fees are $10 cash and $15 additional when you receive your first payment of pension. Upon the receipt of the $10 we wil

Mr. COCKRELL. That is a remarkable document. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Pensions or some member of that committee if they permit any attorney to appear before them in regard to any private pension bill pending. It is my understanding that the Committee on Pensions do not allow attorneys to appear before them. Probably some Senator may be familiar with the practice. I think it was stated here once before that the committee did not allow attorneys to come before them and make arguments in these cases

Mr. FAULKNER. I will state to the Senator that I know of no instance since I have been a member of the committee in which any claim agent has been before the Committee on Pensions to make an argument in favor of any private claim. Persons have appeared before the committee in reference to general legislation, but not in reference to any private claim.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire also to state, as a member of the Committee on Pensions, on which I have had the honor to serve for two years, that I have never seen a special pension agent before that committee looking after a special claim, nor has one ever called upon me on the subject of special pension bills.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me-Mr. COCKRELL. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. HOAR. I rose to make a statement which the Senator from Missouri himself is quite as well qualified to make as I am, and which I have no doubt he will assent to. I have been a member of the Committee on Claims ever since I have been a member of the Senate, now for twelve years, and the practice of that committee is to receive printed briefs from anybody who makes them up in behalf of a claimant, then to refer the claim to a single member of the committee as a subcommittee. That is done usually by the clerk of committee to the Senators in order. He takes the first order in which they come in, and the cases are distributed to the members of the committee in order. Once in a while that order is interrupted by reason of the fact that a particular Senator has had the case once before in a former Congress, or there is some special reason why it should go to a particular member; but that is the rule; and hearings are not given unless the Senator to whom a matter is referred considers the public question or the private question of so much importance that he asks the committee to hear somebody representing the parties. I should think of the weekly meetings of the committee, of which there may, be probably forty or fifty in a year, perhaps there may be from five to ten where such hearings are given, certainly not more. I suppose that would correspond with the Senator's own recollection when he was chairman of the committee himself.

Mr. COCKRELL. Before the Committee on Claims very important questions arise—legal questions involving the laws of the United States, and in some cases international law—and there attorneys might be of service to a claimant; and yet, as the Senator from Massachusetts has well said, the cases in which they appear before the committee are very few.

Mr. HOAR. Of course they make briefs, I suppose.

Mr. COCKRELL. They make briefs, as a matter of course, and briefs are always received. But in pension cases it is entirely different. They are referred, as I understand, to different members of the Committee on Pensions as subcommittees, and I will venture the assertion that the records of the Pension Committee and of the different subcommittees will not show twenty printed briefs filed before them or with them in private pension bills.

This is simply, in my judgment, a taking of $10 by holding out an inducement that some equivalent can be rendered and then simply having a bill presented to the Senate and referred to the Committee on Pensions, and the Committee on Pensions then applies to the Pension Office to obtain the papers, and the subcommittees look at the papers and make their report; and these gentlemen who profess to be prose-cuting claims here before Congress are of no more use to their clients than the man who is said to be burning brush in the moon.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The Senator from Missouri will allow me to state an instance which has just occurred in confirmation of what he has said. I think it will throw light on this.

I have this morning received a letter from a friend at home, a gen-tleman who was marshal some thirty-five years ago, and when a reso-lution was adopted by the Senate three or four years ago directing the Secretary of the Treasury to settle the balances for and against people in the Treasury Department it appeared in the publication that there was standing, and had been for more than thirty years, to the credit of this gentleman about $399—a small balance. He thought the Treasury Department was very considerably in debt to him, but he had abandoned the hope of getting the claim. They of course kept from him the fact that there was any balance to his credit. I introduced a bill here, and it was passed through this body without any trouble, because the books of the Treasury Department showed this balance to his credit.

The bill was sent to the House and is now pending, as I understand, favorably reported, on the Calendar of the House of Representatives. This morning I received a note from him stating that he had just received a letter from a claim agent, saying, "If you will give me one-half of this claim I will put it through at once." He can not possibly render any service in such a case. It is a plain effort on the part of this claim agent to rob that man of one-half the money that is due him, and doubtless he has made statements to him about the influence that he can bring to bear upon the House of Representatives that are an insult to every honest man in the House and have not one word of truth in them. Such instances are coming up all the time. If there is any way to put an end to this infamous practice I should be, above all things, gratified to see it done.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is only on a line with this circular in regard to obtaining pension legislation. I have in my hand another of these circulars from a different institution. This is:

OFFICE OF SOULÉ & Co., SOLICITORS OF PATENTS AND CLAIMS, 719 Pennsylvania Avenue, Washington, D. C., November 16, 1885.

Dear Madam: We have reason to believe that there is due you from the Government, on account of your deceased husband, a sum of money (not in the nature of a pension) amounting to between four and five hundred dollars, which sum we think can be collected if the matter is properly presented.

That is in larger type.

We propose, with your consent, to undertake the collection of this money at our own expense, our fee to be contingent upon success. If we fail there will be no cost to you beyond what is required for postage. We intend to use every effort to secure this money for you, and as it may be necessary to take the claim to the courts, the expense to us will be very great. The fee of 25 per cent., which we ask, is the least sum that would compensate us for the expenditure of money and time required on our part.

We have all the facilities for carrying on the business; have been for years established; our standing and reputation can easily be ascertained, and as our fee is entirely contingent you run no risk.

As it is important that the matter should have immediate attention, please read the instructions below and execute and return the inclosed power of attorney at once, if the soldier was killed in battle or died of wounds. We hope to get your claim in shape to secure payment before Congress adjourns. This can not be done unless you act promptly as requested.

Very respectfully,

Now here are the instructions:

INSTRUCTIONS.

If the deceased soldier was killed in battle, or died of wounds, execute and return the power of attorney with as little delay as possible. If he died from other causes, then do not execute the paper, but give us the full particulars of his death, showing when, where, and of what disease or injury he died, and we will examine the case and send you a report as to your rights.

Under existing regulations all drafts are made payable to the order of the claimant. This power of attorney gives us no right to draw any money that may be due you.

Be sure and fill out and return the question blank on the other side, sending stepping for postage.

stamps for postage.

Please give us the names and addresses of the widows of soldiers known to you, in order that we may correspond with them.

It will be observed, Mr. President, that these attorneys tell this lady that they know that there is a certain amount of money due her, and now they give instructions showing that they do not know anything on earth about it. It is a perfect drag-net to get at information upon which they may possibly base a claim. Here is this statement on the back of it:

This statement should be filled out and returned to Soulé & Co., Washington, D. C.

1. Name of widow or heir, ——. Present age, ——. [Be sure and give full name, and state whether widow or mother.]

2. Give your post-office address in full, town, county, and State, ——, —,

3. Name of soldier and full service, ——. Rank, —— Company ——, Regiment, ——. State Volunteers.
4. Date of his enlistment, ——. How long did he enlist for? ——.
5. How much bounty did he receive from the Government? $——.
6. Did he serve more than one enlistment? ——. If so, give full particulars,

7. Give date of soldier's death and state where died,

8. What was the cause of his death? — [Was he killed in battle, did he die of the result of wounds, or was his death caused by disease or injuries?]

9. Have you the soldier's discharge papers? — If not, state where the discharge is,

10. Give the number of your pension certificate, and agency where paid,

11. Was the soldier ever in a rebel prison, and if so, have you received the money due you for his ration? —

12. Date of marriage, — When, where, and by whom married? —

13. If widow is dead or remarried, give date of death or remarriage, —

14. Give the full name, and date of birth of each legitimate child of soldier under sixteen years of age at date of soldier's death.

Name, — —; born — 18—.

Inclose three 2-cent stamps for return of papers.

That was sent to a lady who had a claim, I believe, for bounty, and that was sent to a lady who had a chain, I believe, for bounty, and it was sent to me and I immediately applied to the proper Department of the Government and received a reply that there was no bounty or any claim of any kind due to this lady. I thought I could ascertain the facts as well as these pension agents could for this poor widow, who was one of my constituents. This simply shows that the letter was a drag-net to get information from this widow to ascertain whether there was any claim or not there was any claim or not.

I simply desired to bring to the attention of the Senate these circulars with which the whole country is flooded. In my judgment there has never been so much imposition upon any class of American citizens since the foundation of this Government as has been imposed upon the soldiers, their widows and orphans, of the late war. It stands, in my judgment, without a parallel.

Now, Mr. President, what is the cause of this?

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator will permit me, I would say that I received from a constituent of mine, an old soldier, a day or two since, a letter inclosing a printed contract or circular sent from Washington by a pension attorney demanding a $25 fee for obtaining an increase of

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly. For every act in the way of an increase and all these things they ask $25, and they have flooded the country with these circulars, they have flooded the Departments with claims for which there is no foundation and which exhaust the time of the accounting officers and others in their examination.

The question is, what is the remedy? What has caused all this to come up here? We ought to look at this matter squarely and not try to evade the issue. In my judgment the cause of this is the accumulation of undisposed-of business in the various Executive Departments and the inability of claimants and persons who imagine they have claims to get a prompt answer from the Departments when they write there. Now I think the Senate has the whole matter. The Senator from Arkansas referred to a claim of how much—three or four hundred

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. About $400.

Mr. COCKRELL. If Senators will take the pains to examine House Executive Document 140, Forty-first Congress, third session, entitled "Balances due from collectors of internal revenue, transmitted to the House by the Secretary of the Treasury, February 18, 1871," they will find that balances are there shown due to the United States aggregating $20,700,983.33. In addition to that will be found Senate Executive Document No. 97, Forty-fifth Congress, second session, in regard to these same balances due from officers, showing the amount of aggregate balances against collectors not in office July 1, 1875, amounting to $11,000,000, and balances at that date, May 31, 1878, of $3,760, 249.44, after deducting unadjusted credits; and House Executive Document No. 363, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, entitled "Balances due to and from the United States, transmitted to the House by the Secretary of the Treasury July 28, 1886," shows, according to the books of the Register of the Treasury, balances due the United States amounting to $25,809,194.40, and due from the United States to sundry persons $382,104.50. The annual report of the Secretary of the Treasury for the fiscal year 1887 treats of the same matter.

By examination of these documents you will find that there are thousands of little claims shown by the books of the Register of the Treasury to be due to various claimants. I have had some personal experience in regard to some of them.

There was a land officer in Wisconsin who removed to Missouri and died, and according to one of these documents there was a balance of over $2,000 due to him whilst he was a land officer in 1844, 1845, and 1846, if my memory serves me correctly, and his heirs were living in Missouri. They got a letter from a claim agent stating that there were certain sums of money due which he could collect for a certain percentage—whether it was 50 per cent. or 25 per cent. I do not now remember. These parties spoke to a friend. It was the first they had heard of it. The man was dead and his children were living there, and this gentleman wrote to me and I immediately turned to this document, having had occasion previously to examine it, and there I found the man's name and the two different sure that the man's name and the two different sums that were reported to be due him.

I wrote back to the parties that they had no earthly use for an attorney, that he could do no possible benefit, and thereupon I introduced a bill and had it referred to the Committee on Public Lands, as it was a matter pertaining to that committee, and after thinking the matter over we concluded not to report a bill directing the payment of this sum, but to report a bill directing the Secretary of the Treasury to research and record it the ships and record it to be a support to the secretary of the Treasury to research and record it the ships and record it to be a support to the secretary of the Treasury to research the support to the secretary of the Treasury to the secretary of the secretary of the Treasury to the secretary of the secretary of the Treasury to the secretary of the secretary of the Treasury to the secretary of the secretary of the Treasury to the secretary of the secretary of the Treasury to the secretary of the secretary of the Treasury to the secretary of the secretary of the Treasury to the secretary of the secretary of the Treasury to the secretary of the s to re-examine and reaudit the claim and to pay any sum that might be found due. I did that out of abundant caution. I believe the books will show that this sum is due; but I had had some experience in another case, where there was probably some $1,500 or $2,000 shown to be due to a deceased land officer in Missouri, and it happened that when his accounts were finally closed, as was supposed, his sureties had a small sum to pay for him, and it was considered a God-send for them to get back what they had paid and for his heirs to get the remainder. The application was made to the Treasury Department for the payment of this balance, but when the account was finally adjusted they found that the estate was still in debt to the United States instead of the United States being in debt to the officer. There the matter was left to rest, and, as a matter of course, nobody had any special interest in pressing it any further than that.

Now, Mr. President, how do these discrepancies come in the Treasury Department? They come because there is no place, no one record; where you can find the entire transaction; and that should be provided by law if the Treasury Department has not the authority to institute such a division to keep the books of the Treasury and all the accounts so that you can go to one book and ascertain the entire status of a case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 3401, in relation to the Pacific railroads, on which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] is entitled to the

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be informally postponed until the Senator from Missouri concludes his remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to examine this question of the cause of delay in the transaction of the public business and the grounds that these claim agents get for imposing upon claimants throughout the country. I lay it down as a proposition that-country. I lay it down as a proposition that—

The States and the people having business transactions with the Government of the United States, to be considered and disposed of in the various Executive Departments in their sundry bureaus and divisions, have a right to demand and require that such business matters shall be considered and disposed of in the same careful, faithful, fair, and prompt manner by the officers and employés of the Government in which good business men, and the officers and employés of business firms, corporations, associations, bank institutions, clearing-houses, etc., consider and dispose of their business.

It is the duty of the Government officers and employés to consider, adjust, and finally dispose of every class of business matters coming before them fairly, justly, promptly, and finally. In all cases where the Government officers and employés have kept the vouchers and records of the business matters had and transacted with individuals and with States, corporations, firms, associations, officers and employés, it is their duty to consider, adjust, audit, and finally dispose of all such business matters with promptness, celerity, and dispatch. And if, upon such auditing and final disposition, any sum of money is found to be due and owing from the United States to any person, on any account whatever, such creditor should be promptly notified and paid without the concealment or suppression in any manner of the fact of such indebtedness, and without waiting for the presentation of any claim therefor by such creditor; and if, on the contrary, upon such auditing and final disposition, any sum of money is found to be due and owing to the United States from any person whomsoever, on any account, such debtor, and any and all persons who may be liable for such indebtedness to the United States as surety, bondsman, or otherwise, should be promptly notified and payment thereof promptly and vigorously enforced without waiting for the death of the debtor or his sureties, or the lapse of the lifetime of a generation or two.

In all cases wherein the Government officers and employés have not kept all the vouchers and records of such business matters in such manner as to enable them to adjust, audit, and finally dispose of such matters, then they should examine and adjust such matters as fully as they can, and ascertain and determine the additional information, evidence, and data requisite and necessary to enable them to make a final audit and disposition of such matters, and at once and promptly notify the party or person in interest of such additional information, evidence, and data requisite and necessary to enable them to make a final audit and disposition of such matters, and at once and promptly notify the party or person in interest of such additional information, evidence, and data requisite and necessary to enable them to make a final audit and disposition of such matters, and at once and promptly notify the party or person in interest of such additional information, evidence, and data requisite and necessary to enable time to present and furnish the same promptly, and give him a rea

LAXITY AND DELAYS IN DISPOSING OF BUSINESS.

That these plain common-sense principles have not been observed in the methods of transacting the public business in the various Departments is made only too manifest in the accumulations and pendency of business matters arising in ages past and now undisposed of.

For a long series of years in the past there have been laxity and delay in making final settlements and adjustments of claims and balances due from the United States to official, employé, soldier, and sailor, and other creditors, and apparently a concealment of the fact of such indebtedness by the United States, as shown by the vouchers and records kept in the possession of their own departments and awaiting for the presentation of a claim therefor by the claimant or some claim agent, and the creation of a suspicion of collusion between Government officers and employés and such claim agents, and not only such laxity and delay in the final adjustment and payment of claims due from the United States to creditors of various classes, but also in the adjustment of claims and balances due to the United States from accounting officers, agents, employés, and others, and in the prompt and vigorous enforcement of the collection of such balances.

The remarks I have just submitted are falson from the apport of the

The remarks I have just submitted are taken from the report of the Senate Select Committee to Inquire into and Examine the Methods of Business and Work in the Executive Departments, and the causes of delays in transacting the public business, etc.
Mr. HAWLEY. What is the number of that report?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is Senate report No. 507 of the first session iffield Congress. It is the report of the Select Committee to Inquire Fiftieth Congress. into the Methods of Business in the Executive Departments.

Mr. President, when we made this inquiry we found a mass of business pending in the Departments, 276,000 individual cases pending in the General Land Office undisposed of, and some of them nearly as old as the Land Office itself, pigeon-holed for generation after generation. Why, Mr. President, only in the last Congress we passed a bill to confirm an entry of land made under a New Madrid certificate of location which had been located for over sixty-four years, the land had been absolutely occupied for sixty-three years, and yet the Land Office after that great length of time was about to cancel the original location. To-day there are nearly eight hundred entries in Missouri under the graduation law passed in 1854, and which was repealed in 1862 or 1863, pending in the Land Office undisposed of, pigeon-holed, and liable at any time to be called up by a clerk or some person there and canceled.

Mr. President, go into the Third Auditor's Office and you will find claims of soldiers of the Mexican war still pending undisposed of. The Auditor does not want to take up these claims and reject them. They have been filed there in a generation that is gone; there may be very little evidence; it may be impossible at this late day to find the claimant or any of his witnesses; and the Auditor out of kindness has permitted these claims to remain there undisposed of. Now and then some old soldier of the Mexican war revives the memory he once had in his youthful days of a claim for a horse lost in the service, and he makes inquiry, furnishes additional proof, and the claim is adjudicated; and for years and years the reports of the Treasury Department of the claims adjusted by the different accounting officers show that so-and-so is allowed for a horse lost in the Mexican war. The claim agents, in many instances, find these things out and notify the parties.

Now, I say that there are not millions of dollars, but there are many thousands of dollars in small sums, in my judgment, due and unpaid to the soldiers of the late war, their widows and their orphans. is the prolific source of ignorance, I may say, on the part of the claimants themselves; that is, their inability to find out what is due them; and that gives the claim agents an opportunity of presenting these fascinating circulars to them and getting claims filed. In my judgment, that state of affairs ought not to be allowed to continue. It is a disgrace to our civilization; it is a disgrace to our Government and our people that we do not adjust these balances which remain, in many instances shown by our records kept by our own sworn officers, and I was told only recently of an instance that occurred in Germany, where officers upon a certain kind of duty were entitled only to certain pay, and upon a different duty, when put in the field, I believe it was, there was increased pay, and one officer had receipted for his account, for his monthly pay at the peace rate, the lower rate, while he had been nine or ten days of that month on the higher rate of pay. Without noticing the distinction he had made out his account and receipted for it. He had immediately gone to the seat of war in the Franco-German war, and whilst he was around Sedan a German officer hunted him up with a blank receipt and the money and paid him the balance that was due him.

What has been the system in the United States? And I may say it has been the system almost from the foundation of the Government. The system has been to conceal and suppress, as it were, the various little sums due to persons connected with the Government in any capacity, or claims of any kind, and every man who gets a dollar has to make a claim for it; and unless you make a claim the claim is not adjusted, and you are not paid.

I will give an instance of this. There was a colored woman whose husband was in the Army and died, and she was entitled to a pension. She resided as an employé in my house at home. She claimed that she was entitled to bounty.

After a long time she was notified that a paymaster would be at Jefferson City and would pay her the amount of the bounty. She went there, and, if I recollect aright, was paid $90, and $10 was retained for attorney's fees. She came home and complained bitterly that she had been swindled out of $100. She claimed that she was entitled to $200 bounty. This was about 1875 or 1876. For years she claimed that she had been practically swindled out of $100 of bounty which was due her. Finally, in 1884—I think it was in the fall of 1884, or more probably in the fall of 1885—she had a letter written to me, and I determined to ascertain whether she had been unjustly dealt with. So I wrote to get a copy of the receipt she had given and the names of the witnesses to her signature, for I knew she could not write, and the name of the pay-master, so that I could ascertain whether any improper practices had been used. I received a copy of the receipt and the names of the witnesses to it, showing that only $90 had been paid her, and that was the amount she said had been paid her, and that $10 had been retained. I found a little pencil slip in this letter stating, "It is believed $100 additional bounty is due to this woman."

They were not allowed to give that information officially; and some honest, deserving, and worthy clerk who saw the record and saw that $100 was due to this poor, ignorant colored woman, had the kindness of heart to write on a little piece of loose paper, in pencil, so that the handwriting, etc., could not be identified, that it was believed there was $100 due to this woman. I immediately sent her a form of application for arrears of pay and bounty, and had it presented, and after the lapse of about four months the claim was adjudicated and the $100 was paid to her.

Now, mark you, she had already made one application for bounty and one-half of the bounty had been paid to her. I say this is not the The Government has not been doing right. right policy. tem is wrong; it is morally wrong, it is legally wrong, and I say that the accounting officers should be required regardless of the lapse of time or anything else, whenever they find that our own records kept by ourselves show that we owe any person who has been connected with the public service in an official capacity by contractor otherwise a particular sum of money, it should be audited, and that man should be hunted up and should be paid.

But, Mr. President, there is another class of claims that should be dealt with differently, and that is where the man who has a claim against the Government keeps his own account and has his own means of presenting the evidence to substantiate it. In that case there should be a limitation and the Government should not be compelled to hear a claim twenty or thirty or fifty years after it has passed or ten years after the officers and employés of the Government who transacted the business have died or moved away and the Government can have no opportunity of testing the correctness of the claimant's account.

This is a matter that must be dealt with. Our Departments are deluged with these arrears of business, and there is but one way, in my judgment, the right way, and that is to take up the pay-rolls of the Army, to commence with the Army accounts and the pay-rolls kept in the office of the Second Auditor in good condition, sent there by the Paymaster-General as vouchers for the payments made thereon in bulk by the paymasters. They have not been worn out. They have not been mutilated. Those rolls should be used, and in connection with them there should be made out an indexed record of every soldier connected with the service during the late war. It is an easy matter to make it. The whole information can be placed upon one index card, and then you can transcribe from the pay-rolls the entire military history of a soldier and all amounts that may be due to or from him. In that way, in one method of adjustment, you close all the accounts of the soldiers of the late war. Whenever it is found that any sum is due to them, then they should be hunted up and paid. If that were done the ground that the sharks have for robbing the soldiers, their widows, and orphans would not exist. The Government is to some extent to blame.

This system can be easily applied. You can apply the card-indexrecord system to the pay-rolls, and wherever there was not a payment made and a muster was made, then go to the Adjutant-General's Office and take the muster-rolls, and there you have the complete record of the soldier as to his service, as to his pay, as to his bounty, and as to everything connected with him, and all kinds of liabilities for and against him.

This is not any stupendous work. It can be easily done if it can be entered upon. The same system has been applied to the pension and record division of the Surgeon-General's Office, where there were 19,000 hospital records, and they have been practically transcribed, over half or two-thirds of the work being done on these card-index records, so that in a few minutes any soldier whose name is borne there can obtain a statement of his hospital record almost as quickly as you would go to a library and take down a dictionary and ascertain the meaning of a word, because it is all condensed on one card.

In the examination that the Senate select committee made we were satisfied that we could not devise and recommend the proper remedies for all these delays, for all this duplicate work in the Departments; and therefore the select committee recommended the appointment of a commission or committee in both the War Department and the Treasury Department to consider the methods of business there and to shorten them, abbreviate them, reduce them to order and to form, and dispense with all the useless labor. Those two committees have made their reports, which were very recently submitted to me as chairman of the Senate select committee, and I hope to be able to submit them to the Senate before the close of the present session. Very many great and important changes have been made in both the Treasury and War Departments in simplifying the methods of business and facilitating its transaction, and in dispensing with useless and unnecessary formalities.

I do not desire to detain the Senate any longer. I simply wish to say in reference to the pension cases what I understand to be the rule of the Committee on Pensions. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER], who, I believe, is the chairman of that committee, is now present, and I make the statement in his presence. I understand that it is a rule of the Pension Committee only to consider such cases of soldiers' pensions as have been rejected by the Pension Office.

Mr. SAWYER. Yes; that is the rule.

Mr. COCKRELL. They must have made their application to the Pension Office, and the pension claim also must have been rejected.

Mr. SAWYER. Yes. Mr. COCKRELL. When a bill is introduced and referred to the Committee on Pensions, as I understand (and I want to be correct in this matter, for I want it to go on record), the committee sends to the Pension Office for the papers there filed.

Mr. SAWYER. That is correct.
Mr. COCKRELL. The papers there filed and any additional papers that may be filed when the bill or petition is introduced to accompany it are considered, and upon them the report is made; and these pre-tended attorneys and claim agents who tell about the wonderful number of bills that have been passed by Congress have nothing in the world to do with them.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to make a suggestion there. That question bothers me. In many a case of that sort the poor soldier is not a lawyer, not a business man, and he does not know anything about that additional evidence. He does not know how to get it up at all. Why should not he, as anybody else does, employ somebody to do it?
The attorney, if he be an honest one, whom he employs, knows just what blanks to fill out; he knows what additional evidence is necessary, and he can advise and assist the soldier in doing it. I do not see why that is not as legitimate as any other legal business.

Mr. COCKRELL. If he had an attorney at home to assist in the preparation of any affidavits that might be required, it is presumed that if the pension attorney has done his duty he has required him to present to the Pension Office all the obtainable evidence. If he has not done that he is not worthy of being retained in the case, and will be of no further service to the pensioner before Congress. He ought to tell him what kind of evidence to present to the Pension Office and the evidence ought to be presented there.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator will pardon me there

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly, it is no interruption.

Mr. HAWLEY. A good pension lawyer-the better he is the more certain he is to know it—does not present certain evidence in the mat-ter, because he knows it will be of no use under the law, but it may be at the same time evidence that goes strongly to the equity of the case when presented to Congress, which has full jurisdiction. Is not that quite conceivable? What is the use of a person sending a class of secondary evidence or evidence still further removed, when he knows the Pension Office by the terms of the law can not use it?

Mr. COCKRELL. I ask the chairman of the Committee on Pensions if there are many cases where any additional evidence is filed? Mr. SAWYER. I am not chairman of the committee, but I will answer the question. What is the question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Are there many cases where additional evidence is filed outside of the Pension Office?

Mr. SAWYER. There are quite a number of cases where evidence comes to the committee through the Senate, and that is always considered with the papers that come from the Pension Office.

Mr. COCKRELL. But the great bulk of the cases are considered on evidence which had been filed in the Pension Office?

Mr. SAWYER. Oh, yes, the great bulk of the cases.

Mr. COCKRELL. So my statement is absolutely correct upon that question. These attorneys practically do no service so far as that is concerned. I know I have had frequent cases where soldiers have said that they found they were not entitled to pensions under the law; and I have always advised them to make application to the Pension Office and have the case rejected, so that the evidence would be on file and could be sent for by the committee when a bill for a special pension should be introduced.

The question of limitation is a very important one. I would dislike very much for the Appropriations Committee to be instructed to report legislation on that question at this time. I do not think we should have time to mature any legislation at this session, and besides, the legislation does not belong to the Appropriations Committee.

I have stated simply what I think ought to be done. I think we ought to require the Departments to adjudicate all claims which their own records show to be complete, and where sums are due to parties we ought to hunt them up and pay them. I do not think there ought to be any requirement that the party should present a claim before he could receive payment. I think where parties themselves have claims we ought to require those claimants to present them and the evidence within a certain time, and if they do not present them I think after the lapse of that time the claim should be disallowed and should be forever barred, and no accounting officer should be permitted to recon-

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask a question, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. TELLER. The people who have these claims allowed very frequently do not know it. A great many land officers who sent up their claims to be adjudicated when they went out of the land office have had their claims allowed and have never been notified, and have gone on year after year without notice from the Department.

Mr. COCKRELL. There is no doubt of that. I say it has been the policy of the Government, so far as I can learn, from time immemorial, instead of hunting up a claimant and paying him or making known to him that there is a sum of money due him, to conceal that fact.

Mr. TELLER. May I say another word?
Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.
Mr. TELLER. I think not only what the Senator says is true, but it has been regarded as a great breach of public morals for a clerk in any of the Departments to suggest to anybody that there was a claim in his favor. I have no doubt if a clerk upon the record of which he speaks, where there appears to be due a woman $100, should give information which that woman had sent here, he would have been dismissed from office.

Mr. COCKRELL. That may be.

Mr. TELLER. That is the rule.

Mr. COCKRELL, I say the system is vicious and wrong, and it ought not to be permitted to continue. We ought to compel the Departments to bring up their business. Where a claimant has a claim partments to bring up their business. against the Government and has the evidence in his own hands he ought to be required to present it, so that the Government could pass upon it.

As to another class of cases, the Second Auditor in his report com-ments at length upon the fact that on the examination of the claims of soldiers and officers during the late war, in many instances little balances are found to be due to the officers and the soldiers, and for the first time, twenty-odd years after the war is closed, they are notified of the fact. This is wrong. The Departments have no right to wait for that lapse of time. We had a case here in which Congress afforded relier where $2,000 was paid in 1861, in the beginning of the war, to General Thomas L. Price, of Jefferson City, Mo., as a secret-service fund, and that never had been credited to him, and it came up against his estate. A suit was instituted against him twenty-odd years after the occurrence and long after he was in his grave. In the examination of the claims in that matter I discovered the fact that a certain little sum of money had been paid in 1861 to a regularly commissioned officer whose salary was not then fixed by law, stationed at Jefferson City, and when the accounts were reached in the course of three or four years the amount of this payment was suspended and charged up against General Price because he was commanding at the time.

We have no right to keep balances due to the United States con-cealed for so long a time and then come in after the party is dead and has no means of meeting the account. If we have a claim against an individual we, having the records, should present it within a reasonable time or be barred, just as we require a claimant who has a claim and has the evidence within his own possession to present it within a reasonable time. In other words, there should be an equality between the United States enforcing its claim against an individual and an individual enforcing his claim against the United States

I hope that Congress will take this matter up and will adjust it.

How we can do it in the Committee on Appropriations I can not possibly see. I do not believe that committee would have the time to adjust it; but it is a great question, it is an important one, and it should be disposed of, and disposed of, as I think, in the manner I have indi-

Mr. CHANDLER. There is to be no further debate upon it, I understand.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to a vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. HAWLEY. I had told the Senator from New Hampshire that I wanted to say a few words on this matter.

Mr. HARRIS. Is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was withdrawn.

Mr. HARRIS. Then there is no amendment pending?
The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no amendment pending.
Mr. FRYE. If the resolution of the Senator from New Hampshire is to take up any length of time I shall have to demand the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut rises to debate the resolution. Does the Senator from Maine object?

Mr. FRYE. If the resolution is to occupy time. I understood the Senator from New Hampshire, when he asked that it might be considered now, to state that a vote would be taken.

Mr. CHANDLER. I made that statement in good faith. The Senator from Connecticut had stated that he wished to say a few words.

Subsequently he informed me that he did not know whether he would do so or not. Therefore I thought that perhaps the vote could be taken without further debate. I do not know whether any other Senator wishes to speak besides the Senator from Connecticut.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine is entitled to call for the regular order. Does he object to the further consideration of the resolution of the Senator from Maine?

Mr. FRYE. I shall be obliged to object.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not propose to speak at any length. I shall be out of the way in four or five minutes.

Mr. FRYE. If only for four or five minutes I shall not of course in-

Mr. TELLER. I think the resolution might as well go over until to-

R. 11795) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other

R. 11795) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. HAWLEY, under the head of "Civil Service Commission," on page 20, line 19, to strike out "two" and insert "three;" so as to read:

Three clerks of class 2.

Three clerks of class 2.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER] is entitled to the floor on the pending amendment.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President, when I was interrupted yesterday by the motion to adjourn I was stating to the Senate the fact that the civil-service law of itself classified the bulk of the clerks in the various Departments, and that there was no need of departmental action to make the classification which would bring those clerks under the operation of the civil-service act, which requires appointments to be made from persons who have passed competitive examinations. The fourth report of the Civil Service Commission, on page 105, states that—

The clerks of each of the following Departments: State, War, Treasury, Justice, Post-Office, Navy, and Interior, were divided into the following classes: First class, salary $1,200 per annum; second class, salary $1,400 per annum; third class, salary $1,600 per annum; and fourth class, salary $1,800 per annum.

Upon these classes of clerks, in the Departments named, the civil-service act, by virtue of its seventh section, became operative on July 16, 1883.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is the Senator reading from?
Mr. CHANDLER. I am reading from the fourth report of the United States Civil Service Commission, introduced into the debate yesterday by the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. On what page?

Mr. CHANDLER. On page 105. The report then proceeds to recite section 7 of that act, which excludes from appointment to the civil service any person into any "of the said classes now existing or that may be arranged hereafter pursuant to said rules," until he has passed an examination, etc. As stated yesterday, the only affirmative action required by the heads of Departments in the way of classification was to classify clerks whose salaries might be above $1,800 a year and not exempt by the statute from civil-service examination and clerks whose salaries might be less than $1,200.

As I understand, in all the Departments of the Government as it appears from this very report of the Civil Service Commission from which the Senator has read, a classification had been recognized under which all appointments to clerical positions in the Departments were to be made only after competitive examinations in pursuance of the act.

I make the statement broadly that as a matter of fact the statute was obeyed by the Departments, not only in reference to appointment to the four classes of clerks who are specified, but with reference to clerks whose salaries were more than $1,800, and also with reference to clerks whose salaries were less than $1,200, and no classification was made in 1884 after the Presidential election by which there were included in the classes of clerks who could only be appointed after competitive examination any clerks who as a matter of fact had been eligible to appointment only as the result of competitive examinations before the election in 1884.

If this be correct, what becomes of the Senator's claim that the action of the present President of the United States in putting 5,320 employés in the postal service under the protection of the civil-service act after the election in November last was justified by anything of the same kind which had been done by the previous administration?

It seems to me that the whole of the Senator's claim is groundless.

I admit that he has been misled into making his claim naturally enough by the language used by the Civil Service Commission in their report. But there certainly was no change in the practice of the last administration which justifies the action of this Administration. I ask the Senator to inform the Senate whether prior to November, 1884, and after this act went into operation, he can point out a single appointment made to a clerical position in any one of the Departments without a civil-service examination which could not have been made without a civil-service examination after November, 1884. I believe that he will be unable to point out a single case of that sort. I am certain that as to the Navy Department he will not be able to point out a single case of that kind, and I believe he will not be able to find it in any other of the Departments.

In the face of this fact how can the Senator justify by any precedent the action of the present President of the United States, who, after he the action of the present President of the United States, who, after he had appointed, as I find by the report of the Postmaster-General, in 1887, 3,633 employés in the postal service, having never thought, so far as the public knew or as appears of record anywhere, of including the 5,320 employés of such service within the operation of the civil-service rules, yet on the 5th day of December, after he had been defeated for re-election, and when it had become apparent that the administration was to go out of power and be succeeded by a Republican administration, proceeded to attempt to put these 5,320 employés under the supposed protection of the civil-service act?

Mr. President, there was no justification for it in anything that had taken place in any previous administration. There was no justification taken place in any previous administration. There was no justification for it in anything that had gone before in the action of President Cleveland himself. It was not a bona fide execution of the civil-service law in my judgment; and I trust that one of the first acts of the incoming administration will be to defeat this attempt to protect the swarm of disreputable and incompetent postal clerks who were put into the service, all the appointees numbering 3,633 prior to December, 1887, and I do not know how many since, not all of whom were incompetent, but a large number of whom were incompetent.

I hope that the order will be revoked as not having been a legitimate execution of the civil-service act which the President had been undertaking to administer for three years and a half, as not having been an attempt in good faith to carry out the principles of that act; and that the postal service of the United States will start in March next exactly where President Cleveland had it in the month of November, 1888, before he knew he had been defeated for re-election.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I am astonished that my good friend from New Hampshire should quibble so much on the word "revise," and attempt to make it appear that there was no actual revision of the classified list in the Navy Department after the election of 1884. I did not make the statement I made yesterday, nor read the documents I read, unadvisedly. The Senator is himself simply mistaken in believing that I am the one mistaken.

The act entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States" brought within its terms and provisions certain classes of officers in the Departments without any act on the part of the head of a Department. The law itself placed under its provisions and protection the classified departmental prvice, the clerks receiving salaries of $1,200, $1,400, $1,600, and $1,800, being clerks of classes 1, 2, 3, and 4. The third subdivision of section 6 of the civil-service act

That from time to time said Secretary-

Referring to the Secretary of the Treasury-the Postmaster-General, and each of the heads of Departments mentioned in the one hundred and fifty-eighth section of the Revised Statutes, and each head of an office, shall, on the direction of the President, and for facilitating the execution of this act, respectively revise any then existing classification or arrangement of those in their respective Departments and offices, and shall, for the purposes of the examination herein provided for, include in one or more of such classes, so far as practicable, subordinate places, clerks, and officers in the public service pertaining to their respective Departments not before classified for examination.

As I understand (and I shall thank the Senator from New Hampshire to correct me if I am incorrect), the clerks of classes 1, 2, 3, and 4 in the Navy Department, immediately after the passage of this civilservice act, became subject to the civil-service law and regulations, and, as he says, no appointments were thereafter made to those classified places except under the civil-service law and regulations. That was the classification of his Department. I said that he revised and reclassified the Department. I quoted the language of the Civil Service Commission in their report stating the fact that a revision of the classification had been made. The Senator puts that point in dispute. If he did not do that he violated the law. The section of the law which I have read required him from time to time, under the direction of the President, to revise the classification of his Department, and if under the requirements of the President he failed to do that he violated the letter as well as the spirit of the civil-service law. I say he did it. I say he was compelled to do it under the law, and that it was a revision of the classification existing by operation of law in his Department, and that revision of the classification was in obedience to the requirements of law, and was made after the election in 1884.

Now, let us examine that point. What does the Civil Service Commission say on page 107?

On November 25, 1884, the commission received from the Secretary of the Navy, in a communication dated November 22, 1884, a revision of the classification of that Department, dated November 1, 1884.

Was that true? It was emphatically, legally, and equitably true, and it was only the delayed performance of a duty which had devolved upon the Secretary of the Navy immediately upon the passage of that act. It was delayed until after the election in November, 1884.

I say the Civil Service Commission were correct in their report. The law says that the heads of Departments shall revise the classification. The .aw made the classification and it was to be revised from time to time. I did not say that the Secretary of the Navy had revised a revision of the classification, as some of the other heads of Departments did, but I said that he had revised the classification, and the law and the report show that I was exactly correct in that statement.

Did the Secretary extend the classification made by the civil-service law? I believe we have agreed that under the law clerks of classes 1, 2, 3, and 4 alone were embraced and classified and became subject to that law. The Secretary in his order of November 22, 1884, to which I have referred, brought within the purview of the civil-service law and regulations and under them clerks of $1,000 per annum, $900 copyists, and $720 copyists. That seems to me an extension of the provisions of the civil-service law by this revision to classes not previously embraced within its terms, and this revision was made on the 22d day of November, 1884. I yesterday had read to the Senate the letter of the Secretary of November 22, 1884, signed by him, which I will not quote to-day.

Yesterday I showed that the entire Agricultural Department had clerks it covered?

Mr. COCKRELL. No, I did not.
Mr. DAWES. Could the Senator do so conveniently?
Mr. COCKRELL. I could not. I should be very glad if the Senator from Massachusetts, who doubtless carries in his head the number of all the clerks in the different Departments, would state it, so that it may go on record.

Mr. DAWES. I inquire in good faith for information. It seems to me that as compared with fifty-five hundred it is somewhere less than one hundred.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, no; it was more than that in the Agricultural Department; but there were not over a thousand, and probably not over five hundred, who were brought within the civil-service law. There were a great many there who were brought within the civil-service law who were not clerks.

Mr. DAWES. Is the Senator confident that the number would be seventy-five in the Agricultural Department?

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, yes. All, as I understand, were brought under it whose salary was over $55 per month.

Mr. DAWES. I know the limitation, but I do not know how many. Mr. CHANDLER. If the Senator from Missouri will allow the statement to be made of how many clerks there were in the Agricultural Department, it appears on page 495 of this same report. Five clerks of class 4; nine clerks of class 3; nine clerks of class 2; seventeen clerks of class 1; twenty-three clerks at $1,000 each; twenty clerks at $840 each, and seven clerks at $720 each.

Mr. DAWES. What is the aggregate?
Mr. CHANDLER. I have not footed it up. Those are all the clerks in the Department of Agriculture who were put under the civil-serv-

Mr. DAWES. It would be interesting to have the aggregate stated for the benefit of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. COCKRELL. Does not the Senator from New Hampshire understand that there were also brought within the classified list or under the civil-service law clerks at $720 per annum, clerks in the Bureau of Animal Industry, the disbursing officer, etc.?

Mr. CHANDLER. I do not. I understand that those I have read were all of the clerks who were classified in the-Department of Agri-

Mr. COCKRELL. I have not had time to read the entire list of names of those who were classified. I will get it in a moment.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]

informs me that it makes ninety clerks in the Department of Agriculture, which the Senator from Missouri makes an excuse for appointing 3,630 clerks in the railway mail service and placing them under the civil-service act.

Mr. HAWLEY. It ought to be said that in the paragraph following those the Senator from New Hampshire has referred to the report proceeds to name the disbursing officer at $1,800, an assistant to the disbursing officer at $1,400, Mrs. Shepherd at $1,000; librarian, superintendent of the folding room, and several other employés whose salaries were none of them more than a thousand dollars, making perhaps fifteen more

Mr. TELLER, They were excepted?
Mr. CHANDLER. They were not included.
Mr. HAWLEY. Then there are ninety of the ordinary classifications

Mr. COCKRELL. I will make the statement mathematically accurate and exact, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] desires to know it.

GEO, B. LORING, missioner of Agriculture. Commiss

That is signed by "George B. Loring, Commissioner of Agriculture," and those are the persons brought under the civil-service law and regulations in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. DAWES. Then the Senator from New Hampshire is not correct, is he?

Mr. COCKRELL. What does the Senator say?
Mr. DAWES. The Senator from New Hampshire says that those who were read under the head of "Miscellaneous" by the Senator from Missouri were not included.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not if George B. Loring, the Commissioner of Agriculture, was correct in making the report. The Senator from New Hampshire can settle with him as to whether these persons were brought within the law or not. The Commissioner of Agriculture says they were, and the Civil Service Commission say they were.

Mr. CHANDLER. They make thirty more, if that is true, but I understand that only the ninety clerks were included within the provisions of the law.

visions of the law.

Mr. COCKRELL. I can not see how the Senator so understands it, when the Civil Service Commission, on page 110, give the list of those who were brought within the civil-service law and regulations just as I have read it, and include these "miscellaneous" employés in it; and then George B. Loring, the Commissioner, reports the name, salary, and everything, of those who were brought within the law, and it makes the number I have read.

Mr. DAWES. How many? Does it state?

Mr. COCKRELL. I have not counted it up.
Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator whether he thinks the Commissioner of Agriculture himself would have his disbursing officer and the assistant to the disbursing officer appointed in pursuance of civil-service examinations?

Mr. COCKRELL. I do not know what he would have. I am not interpreting what he wanted, or anything about it. I am reading now on page 110 of the fourth annual report of the Civil Service Commission, and I find there:

in a written communication, bearing no date, addressed to the commission, and received November 24, 1884, the Commissioner of Agriculture submitted a "list of clerks in the United States Department of Agriculture classified in accordance with the act entitled 'An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States,' approved January 16, 1883." By this list the employés of the Department of Agriculture were arranged into the following classes.

Here they are given:

Clerks of class 1, $1,200 per annum.

Clerks of class 2, $1,400 per annum.

Clerks of class 3, $1,600 per annum.

Clerks of class 4, $1,500 per annum.

Clerks of class 4, $1,500 per annum.

Clerks at $1,000 per annum each.

Clerks at $740 per annum each.

Clerks at $770 per annum each.

Clerks to Bureau of Animal Industry.

Disbursing officer.

Assistant to disbursing officer.

Librarian.

Superintendent of folding-room.

11. Librarian.
12. Superintendent of folding-room.
13. Employés in the chemical bureau.
14. Employés in the laboratory.
15. Employés in the botanical bureau.
16. Employés in the bureau of entomology.
17. Employés in the museum.
18. Foreman in the grounds.

That was confirmed, and the list was made out by the Commissioner of Agriculture, and is inserted on pages 495 and 496, and headed "List of clerks in the United States Department of Agriculture, classified in accordance with the act entitled 'An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States,' approved January 16, 1883," and is signed "George B. Loring, Commissioner of Agriculture." In this list is given the name of each clerk and the amount of his salary; and these are the persons who were classified under that law after the election in November, 1884.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to ask the Senator if he understands that all the persons appointed in any one of these eighteen classes, the first four being the four statutory classes and the last one being the foreman in the grounds, have been since that date appointed only after examinations under the civil-service law?

Mr. COCKRELL. That I do not know.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will ask the Senator if he is familiar with the exceptions which are given on page 153 of this report?

RULE XIX.

There are excepted from examination the following.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know of that exception.
Mr. CHANDLER. Giving the exceptions under the rules. Then I would ask him whether it is not apparent that the Commissioner of Agriculture gave a full list of all his clerks and employés?

Mr. COCKEELL. Oh, no.

Mr. CHANDLER. Not only those properly classified under the law if the Department was subject to the civil-service law, which is doubtful, as the commissioners say, but also those who were exempt from examination, and who were not bound to be appointed under civil-service examinations. Is not that apparent?

Mr. COCKRELL. I think not. I think it is apparent that there are a good many employés in the Agricultural Department who are not mentioned here at all-quite a large number-and I think it was apparent that those who were not mentioned here are quite numerous. I do not know how many, but quite a number are not mentioned here

Mr. CHANDLER. Then we give the Senator one hundred and thirty in the Department of Agriculture, and now I ask the Senator, for the purposes of the comparison which he instituted between the action of President Arthur's administration and the action of the present Administration, this question: Does the Senator know a single case where prior to November, 1884, a clerk of any grade was appointed in any Department, except the Agricultural Department, without a civil-service examination, who, by reason of any reclassification or any other action taken between November, 1884, and March 4, 1885, could not be appointed without civil-service examination?

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, I do not know what appointments were made in the various Departments here. It would be impossible for any one man to know it. The Secretary does not know what was done in his own Department so far as that is concerned. There is no head of a bureau who could tell about every appointment that was made in his

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator desires to be fair. I point out to him that up to December, 1887, 3,633 persons had been appointed under President Cleveland's administration in the postal service without civil-service examination, and now I ask the Senator to point out one person who prior to November, 1884, had been appointed without civil-service examination, who, by any action taken after November, 1884, would have had to have been appointed with civil-service examina-tion. I say that is the issue which the Senator makes. I want to hold him to the issue if I can.

Mr. COCKRELL. Here are clerks in the Senator's own Department, the Navy Department, that he took in who did not belong to the classified service. He took in copyists, as I have read, and clerks at $1,000

Mr. CHANDLER. No, Mr. President— Mr. COCKRELL. Copyists at $900 per annum and $720 per an-

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.
Mr. CHANDLER. Not one of them. I stated yesterday that after six months from the date of the passage of the civil-service act there was not a single person appointed to any clerical position in the Navy Department, not to any position except that of workman or laborer, which is the exception of the statute, except as the result of a civil-service examination. I want to ask the Senator whether he is prepared to name a single appointee or to point out a single appointee of that kind there in the Navy Department or in any other Department.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no doubt that I could do it if I had time to search the records and examine them. I have not a particle of doubt about it.

Mr. CHANDLER. Now, that is just the issue.
Mr. COCKRELL. But I have not examined the records, and the Senator knows well enough that no living being has ever undertaken such a job as that would be.

Mr. CHANDLER. The Senator is certainly mistaken. He has full access to the books of the Departments, and all he has to do is to ask the heads of Departments whether after the act went into operation and before November, 1884, any clerks were appointed without a civilservice examination. I undertake to say there were none, and that the Senator can not find any. I say that he can not find any as to the Navy Department, and I believe he can find none in any of the other Departments

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President—
Mr. CHANDLER. Notwithstanding the books have been opened and the heads of the Departments have been searching for four years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BERRY in the chair). Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. COCKRELL. With infinite pleasure, just as long as he wants

Mr. CHANDLER. I beg pardon of the Chair. I had been speaking some time before the Chair interrupted me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rules require that permission shall be obtained.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Senator can go on.
Mr. CHANDLER. I am through; only I do not understand the reason why the Chair interrupted me, because I had been speaking for some time, as I supposed with the consent of the Senator from Mis-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair interrupted the Senator from New Hampshire in compliance with the rules. The rules require that when a Senator rises to interrupt another Senator, permission shall be obtained. The conversation seemed to be general between the two Senators and the Chair thought it his duty to call attention to the fact.

Mr. COCKRELL. The Chair knew I had been recognized as entitled to the floor, and therefore made the remark when I was interrupting the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. CHANDLER. I certainly supposed I was interrupting the Senator with his permission.

Mr. COCKRELL. Go on. Mr. CHANDLER. That i

Mr. CHANDLER. That is all, Mr. President.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri will proceed.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I have not been searching the private entries made in the different Departments from the passage of the civil-service law on the 16th of January, 1883, to the 4th day of March, 1885. It would be an exceedingly voluminous record. I am examining the public official acts and not the individual appointments that may have been made during that time.

I say that the Senator from New Hampshire himself, as Secretary of the Navy in 1884, extended by revision of the legal existing classification of his Department the civil-service law and regulations to clerks receiving $1,000 per annum and copyists receiving $900 and $720 per annum. I have read all the other orders in regard to the matter. It is immaterial whether it was one hundred who were brought within the civil-service law and regulations after the election in November, 1884, or three thousand. The principle is the same. I suppose the Senator would undertake to call one petty larceny and the other grand larceny, simply because one was a larger amount.

The Senator says that there were thirty-eight hundred persons, I believe that was the number, appointed in the railway mail service without examination. The Senator certainly understands how the examinations of railway postal clerks are made and were made before there was any civil-service law and since. The method of the Department, as shown by the report of the general superintendent of the railway mail service, is to appoint the railway postal clerks on a probation of six months. During that period they are examined from time to time in regard to their efficiency and progress. These examinations have been made in over half the cases referred to by Republican chief clerks and Republican clerks in the office in charge of the railway mail em-

If at the expiration of the six months they are found efficient, proficient, and promising, they are then given permanent appointments. All of these employes have passed their six months' probation, have stood the test of the examination made largely by Republican clerks, and have been retained in the service in the higher positions, and they have been found qualified. I read from the record yesterday showing that their grading stands above the record of 1883 and 1884 made by those whose places they took in the public service.

I repeat that the President and heads of Departments in extending the classification of those who come within the terms and provisions of the civil-service law and regulations only did a duty which a Republican Congress enjoined upon every President and head of a Department in the provision which I have read. Clause third of section 6 provides—

That from time to time said Secretary, the Postmaster-General, and each of the heads of Departments mentioned in the one hundred and fifty-eighth section of the Revised Statutes, and each head of an office shall, on the direction of the President, and for facilitating the execution of this act, respectively revise any then existing classification or arrangement of those in their respective Departments and offices, and shall, for the purposes of the examination herein provided for, include in one or more of such classes, so far as practicable, subordinate places, clerks, and officers in the public service pertaining to their respective Departments not before classified for examination.

The President and the head of the Post-Office Department pursued strictly, farthury, of a Republican Congress.

FDMUNDS. When did they begin? strictly, faithfully, and honestly a Republican law and the requirement

They began immediately after the inauguration of the present incumbent, and continued the extension of the service from that day up to the last extension that was made in the Post-Office Department, and the rules and regulations show it. Mr. EDMUNDS. When was the last extension?

When was the last extension?

The last extension was in the railway mail serv-Mr. COCKRELL. ice so far as I know.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But when?

Mr. COCKRELL. It was made in December. The date of it and all has been read here before in the discussion. Now, I say that a Republican President and Republican heads of Departments did precisely the same thing. They did it under the same law. If they were justified in doing it, a Democratic President and Democratic heads of Departments are equally justified under the same law and in pursuance of the same law, and it does not lie in the mouths of former Republican Secretaries now upon this floor to come in and attempt to censure a Democratic administration for doing what they did them-

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, two days ago I undertook to forward the wishes of the Civil Service Commission by moving an amendment giving them three additional clerks. They had asked for them, and the Secretary of the Treasury had approved their estimate. The motion to put in the first passed without any controversy. For two days debate has been nominally upon my second motion, to appoint a clerk whose compensation is $1,600 or $1,400 a year. The debate has taken the widest possible range, covering the fidelity or infidelity of the Arthur and Cleveland administrations, covering the wisdom or unwisdom of the general service, of civil-service retorm, etc. By way of diversion after two days I will speak directly to the motion to amend. The work of the commission has been extraordinarily enlarged, much more so than I think the Senate is aware of. In 1883 the employés engaged in this work were three commissioners, a chief examiner, a secretary, a stenographer, and a messenger; seven persons to organize the great civil service of the United States. Not a clerk was named among them, though the secretary and stenographer, of course, served in that capacity.

In 1883 the classified civil service consisted of seven Executive Departments at Washington, of eleven customs districts, and twenty-three post-offices, in each of which there were as many as fifty employés. Since 1883 the classified service has been extended by the addition of the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Labor, seventeen post-offices, and the railway mail service.

These figures are interesting. In 1883 the numbers embraced in the classified service and subject to examination were, in the Departments at Washington, 5,652; in the eleven customs districts, 2,573, and in the twenty-three post-offices, 5,699; making the total 13,897.

Five years have passed, and now the numbers are as follows: In the Departments at Washington, nearly 9,000; in the eleven customs districts, 2,298; in the forty post-offices, about 11,000, and in the railway mail service, 5,320; in all, 27,618, being an increase from 13,897 to 27,618, almost exactly doubling the number of persons subject to examination. Excluding the postal railway service, of which so much has been said, the increase has been, in round numbers, from 14,000 to 22, 000, an increase of 8,000, omitting this branch of the service, of which so much has been said. That gives but a very imperfect idea of the increased labor in conducting the work of the commission.

In 1883 the number of boards of examiners composed of persons in the public service and acting under the direction of the commission was 37. The number at present is 147, as follows: 11 for customs; 40 for postal service; 82 local, established at various points throughout the country to assist the examiners sent out by the commission to conduct examinations for the departmental service, and 24 special and supplemental boards at Washington.

In the beginning the examinations were of thirteen classes or kinds for so many special employés, and these were of a comparatively simple and non-technical character. I will not read much further from this paper, but I wish to give an illustration of the character of examinations that are required.

Among the most important of these examinations are the following: Among the most important of these examinations are the following: For the departmental service, clerk, copyist, book-keeping, stenography, type-writing, law, telegraphy, photography, proof-reading, medical science, and the languages, French, German, Spanish, Italian, Swedish, Danish, Chinese, and Japanese, for all the Departments; and special examinations when needful, as follows: Architectural, mechanical, topographical, and ordnance draughting, editor and proof-reader, meteorology and kindred sciences, librarian and bibliographer, craniological and anthropometrical measurements, histology and microscopy, nautical science, computer for Nautical Almanac office and Naval Observatory (very high-grade mathematics and astronomy), hydrography, civil engineer and assistant civil engineer, etc. Compliance with the law requires that there shall be special examinations for men of these classes named and many others besides.

Therefore it did not seem to me to be unreasonable that, judged by the number of persons subject to the work of the Civil Service Commis sion more than doubled, and judged by an increase of labor probably quadrupled, they should have something more of clerical service.

There is, of course, a temptation to enter into a general discussion as to the merits of this system. A temptation arises in a considerable measure from the remarks of our friend from Kansas [Mr. Plumb] and the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], but I shall not go on with it.

wish to make a single observation, however. The Senator from Virginia kindly observed that he did not desire to embarrass the incoming administration by in any way strengthening, as I understand him, or putting in better order the work of the com-mission, for he hoped the Republican party would distinguish itself by abandoning the attempt altogether. It will be no embarrassment to have that office kept in perfect order for its full labors, for it is, without doubt, the purpose of the Republican party to go on with that work.

The Senator from Virginia spoke with a good deal of contempt of appointments proceeding upon examinations instead of appointments resulting in the old-fashioned way from recommendations merely. the moment he overlooked the fact that the present system of appointments has also the recommendations as well as the examinations. There is nothing to forbid any quantity of testimony as to the excellent moral character, mental capacity, fidelity, and everything that makes usefulness. That testimony is required by the commission. It enters into the estimate of the capacity of the candidate just as much as his technical book examination, as it is called; and if the examination be at all wisely conducted it is not a mere school examination, but such an inquiry as a sagacious employer gives to the young men who desire to be employed.

I just wish to put upon record the declaration of the Republican party at the national convention. I do that for the edification of those who believe the Republican party is right, and, it may be, for the amusement of those who look with incredulity upon this whole business, after an election at any rate. These were not merely pre-elec-tion promises. It was not the first Presidential campaign in which the party declared itself, and declared itself, as it had no doubt, in obedience to the most enlightened public sentiment of the country. Republican platform of the last campaign contains this statement or resolution:

resolution:

The men who abandoned the Republican party in 1834 and continued to adhere to the Democratic party have deserted not only the cause of honest government, of sound finance, of freedom, of purity of the ballot, but especially have deserted the cause of reform in the civil service. We will not fail to keep our pledges because they have broken theirs or because their candidate has broken his. We therefore repeat our declaration of 1834, to wit: "The reform of the civil service, auspiciously begun under the Republican administration, should be completed by the further extension of the reform system already established by law to all the grades of the service to which it is applicable. The spirit and purpose of the reform should be observed in all the Executive Departments, and all laws at variance with the object of existing reform legislation should be repealed, to the end that the dangers to free institutions which lurk in the power of official patronage may be wisely and effectively avoided."

If I were called upon to advise any volune rising statesmen as to what

If I were called upon to advise any young rising statesman as to what was his wisest course in this matter I should tell him he had better take that for an honest assertion; and I think that the party, whatever party, has the management of the Government had better so consider it

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations, as I understand it, had no design or purpose to in any way cripple or impair the civil service by refusing to report amendments increasing the clerical force of the Civil Service Commission. The Committee on Appropriations find from nearly all the Departments requests for increase of clerical force, and these requests we are often compelled to

This is not the only department or branch of the service which has asked for an increase of clerical force this year. That request has been made by several other departments.

The question that we have to consider is whether on the whole the ersons now in the service are sufficient to perform the necessary duties. I think the committee were practically unanimous in the belief that at most one or two clerks added to the force there now would be amply sufficient to conduct all the business of the commission.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator pardons me, if he will add two I will stop talking. One is added already.

Mr. ALLISON. Some of the committee believed that the commis-

Mr. ALLISON. Some of the committee believed that the commission have already an ample force. So far as I am concerned, whilst his law is upon our statute-books I believe it should be fairly executed. I have had no occasion to indulge in the debate or criticisms of either side of the Chamber as respects what President Arthur did at the close of his administration. He simply carried out the law as he was required to do, from time to time. Nor do I find fault with President Cleveland for enlarging the operation of the law from time to time. But I do find fault with and I think we have a right to criticise the conduct of President Cleveland and the conduct of these Departments as respects the last enlargement of the civil-service rules and regulations.

In the first place, this enlargement is not an enlargement by the commission. It is a well-known fact that since last October, or perhaps for a period prior to that time, there has been really no Civil Service Commission. One member of the commission retired from it early in Oc-He was confirmed on the 8th day of October by the Senate as Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and he never has entered the Civil Service Commission from that day to this, so far as I know. Another member of that commission, so far as I have been advised, has given no attention whatever to the subject since last October, or if he has, very little. So the Civil Service Commission, in contemplation of law, since October or November last has been no commission.

I do not criticise that fact except to state it; but if it is wise to include the railway mail service, consisting now of over five thousand employés, scattered over this entire country, not in the cities and towns where there are great populations, but scattered over every State of this Union—if it is a wise thing to gather in these railway mail clerks and bring them within the supervision of this commission, it seems to me that we ought to have the advice and judgment of the commission before it is done.

So far as I am concerned, as respects the inclusion of these railway mail clerks, I do not think that inclusion comes here with the sanction of the Civil Service Commission in a sense which ought to be authorita-tive to us. Therefore it is that I think the new administration, when we have a Civil Service Commission to act upon this subject, should make proper rules for the inclusion of the railway mail clerks. This Civil Service Commission has made no such rules. There are no rules Civil Service Commission has made no such rules. There are no rules in the sense of the law of 1883 as respects the railway mail clerks. do not know but that it is a wise thing to bring them within the purview of this law, although I believe that the railway mail service up to March, 1885, was an efficient and effective service under the system that had grown up in the Post-Office Department prior to that time, and I say that in the presence of what was read here by the Senator from Missouri yesterday as respects that service in his own State.

The practice of the Post-Office Department prior to 1885 was to have an absolute examination of all the railway mail clerks before they entered the service, and after six months' service experimentally, and so far as I know, with many years' experience in the public service, I never knew an instance of a railway mail clerk to be dismissed except for cause. There grew up in the railway mail service a large body of men who were well qualitied for that service, and who discharged their duties in the main with fidelity, thus giving us as good a mail service as perhaps was found in any country on the globe.

I do not stop to criticise that service during the administration of President Cleveland. I only say that the injecting into it of more than three-fourths of its entire list of employés, in the nature of things has had a tendency to disrupt and disorganize that service, and everybody knows that that was done.

What needs to be done under the new administration, in my belief, what needs to be done under the new administration, in my belief, is to restore the railway mail service to its former effectiveness by, in a large degree, drawing from the discharged force the men who showed themselves to be efficient and active in that service. If it shall be found that these new employes have been efficient and faithful in the discharge of their duties, for one I should not be willing to see a wholesale removal of them when they are discharging their duty properly, but to my knowledge, in some portions of the Northwest at least, the men who have been appointed to that service have been totally inefficient. Therefore it seems to me that this Civil Service Commission. Therefore it seems to me that this Civil Service Commission when it becomes a commission should take up the question of the re-organization of the railway mail service, and if it is wise to provide rules for the conduct of that service so as to draw the railway mail clerks within the purview of the law of 1883, so be it.

What I object to is an order issued by the President of the United States on the 5th day of December to this Civil Service Commission to make rules and regulations when there was no Civil Service Commission in the contemplation of the act of 1883. And now when we are asked to largely increase the service because of contemplated changes in it, do not think we are called upon to make that large increase. lieve that the force we have provided here, including the fourth-class clerk, which is a high-class clerk, is a sufficient clerical force for this Civil Service Commission, and, therefore, it seems to me that as the Civil Service Commission is now organized it should rest on the clerical force that is provided for in this bill.

But I will say to the Senator from Connecticut that if I had supposed that this question would have led to a debate such as we have had here would myself rather have taken the additional clerk than to have had the discussion.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss the ques-tion whether we want an additional clerk for this commission or not. I will follow the Appropriations Committee on that and take their judgment; but I want to say a word in reference to what the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] has stated and has again repeated to-day. The charge made, not in so many words, is that after the 4th of November, 1884, the Republican administration adopted a different plan in the description of its clerks from what it had before. I take positive issue with that statement. I deny it and assert that there is not a thing that can be brought to prove that that is true. In the first place when the Civil Service Commission got together they adopted certain rules, which, by the very terms of the statute, became binding on the heads of Departments. They classified the public service into three classes, departments. They classified the public service into three classes, departmental, customs, and postal, the departmental including all the employes of the various Departments at Washington. Then they swept in under the influence of that law all persons employed in the Departments at Washington who were not specially excepted by a provision that they prepared and put in their rules. That provision excepted a certain class, and I will read it. I would say they had the authority, as suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHANDLER], to make that exception. The exception might have been broader, or it might have been less, according to their judgment, acting with the approval of the President. Rule XIX says:

There are excepted from examination the following: 1. The confidential clerk In the first place when the Civil Service Commission got together

There are excepted from examination the following: 1. The confidential clerk or secretary of any head of a Department or office. 2. Cashiers of collectors. 3. Cashiers of postmasters. 4. Superintendents of money-order divisions in post-offices. 5. The direct custodians of money for whose fidelity another officer is under official bond; but these exceptions shall not extend to any official below the grade of assistant cashier or teller. 6. Persons employed exclusively in the secret service of the Government, or as translators, or interpreters, or stenographers.

So strictly was that rule applied in the Interior Department that, although clerks were used as stenographers, no person was appointed without an examination, unless he had been designated in the act making the appropriation as a stenographer.

7. Persons whose employment is exclusively professional, 8. Chief clerks, deputy collectors and superintendents, or chiefs of division or bureaus. But no person so excepted shall be either transferred, appointed, or promoted, unless to some excepted place, without an examination under the commission. Promotions may be made without examination in offices where examinations for promotions are not now held, until rules on the subject shall be promulgated.

Every person who was appointed in the several Departments of the Government during that administration who did not come within the exceptions laid down in Rule XIX of the regulations, came through the Civil Service Commission.

Some time in July, 1884, the Interior Department made a second classification, which classification was made at the direct request of the commission and at their suggestion, which was more nominal than real, but included in terms one single class of clerks that had not been included in the terms of the previous classification, but were included within the provisions and rules laid down by the commission and had always been considered as within the classified service, to wit, those getting $2,000 and upwards and designated as clerks.

Whatever may be the propriety of putting under the influence of this commission five thousand railway postal clerks, the number that was included by the order, even if there had been no inclusion before in the Interior Department, was so small that the Interior Department since that day have only appointed three people to office who fell since that day have only appointed three people to office who fell within the amendment, as was said, that was made by the order of the 6th of December, 1884. So it is inconsequential. I repeat again, that nobody came into the Interior Department, and I believe I may say it for every one of the Departments, nobody came in from the outside that did not come through a civil-service examination, unless he was excepted by the very words of section 19 of the regulations.

If Senators will look at the list of appointments in the report of the Civil Service Commission they will discover that the Interior Department appointed no clerks practically for a long time after the civil-service law went into effect. In a letter that I addressed to the President, which was published in the first Civil Service Commission report, the reason will be seen. The Census Bureau was then about being closed. Originally the Census Bureau contained eighteen hundred clerks. I need not say to Senators that those clerks were selected without the slightest reference to their political standing, that lected without the slightest reference to their political standing, that there never was a clerk who went into that office of the whole eighteen hundred where the question of his political affiliations was for a mo-ment considered.

Mr. Walker, who was at the head of that bureau, attempted, and I think succeeded, in the attempt to ignore, so far as his bureau was concerned, not only politics, but favors to any class of men. I believe he appointed the whole eighteen hundred clerks for the express purpose of getting good clerks, and as the work of that bureau decreased clerks were either transferred to some other place in the Department, as they could be by the one hundred and sixty-sixth section of the Revised Statutes, or they were dismissed, and thus, as the bureau closed, there was left in the employ of the Government the most perfect and complete corps of public clerks that ever were congregated in my opinion, and from that corps the Secretary of the Interior from time to time filled up the vacancies as he could. Whenever there was a vacancy he drew upon a corps of clerks that he knew must soon be dismissed. Nobody could question his right to do that. So the Civil Service Commission were not called upon by the Secretary of the Interior because of the special and peculiar condition of things at that time.

Mr. President, the head of the commission then was Mr. Dorman B. Eaton, than whom no man in the United States has given as much attention to this question, and no man brought to it more zeal and more earnestness than Mr. Eaton, and I guaranty that no member of that commission, including even the Democratic member, will ever question the good faith and the absolute adherence to the law of every member of that administration up to the time that the administration closed its

So it will not do for the Senator from Missouri to come here and assert that before this time, before the election, there was a rule applied that was not applied afterwards, because there is nothing in the documents that he has read, nothing in the history of the transactions of the Departments which will justify that statement. Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I can not permit the statement made by my friend from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] to pass without some little notice. I understood the Senator from Iowa to say that the action on the part of the President and the Civil Service Commission, or without a Civil Service Commission, bringing within the classified service the entire railway mail service, the clerks and officers employed in the Supervising Architect's office of the Treasury Department, and others included under that general order, was made without the sanction of a full Civil Service Commission. I think in that the Senator from Iowa is entirely mistaken. I have not the document before me, but my recollection is very clear that that matter had been considered by the full commission long before the appointment of Mr. Oberly as Commissioner of Indian Affairs and had the approval of Mr. Oberly and the Republican member of that commission, but not the full approval of the other Democratic member.

Mr. ALLISON. The point I make, if the Senator will allow me, is that the President of the United States, on the 5th day of December last, directed the Civil Service Commission to provide rules and regulations whereby the railway mail service employés should be brought within the control of this law, and I merely stated that after that time there had not been within the contemplation of the law a Civil Service Commission to act, and therefore that no rules and regulations in contemplation of law had been made.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I think the Senator when he examines the matter further will ascertain the fact that it was considered by the commission as a whole as it was constituted prior to the appointment of Mr. Oberly as Indian Commissioner.

I desire to say, sir, that while I have no doubt it was put under the civil service in the proper way and after consideration by the commission, there has not been an hour from the day the commission was created until now when every member of it, except one, so far as I have seen the published statements, that has not labored day and night to increase the force in their own office, to increase their own importance, to bring within the scope of this law every place that was possible under the Government, from a skilled mechanic to the highest clerk in any Department. Mr. CHACE. W Mr. GORMAN. Will the Senator allow me a question right there?

Certainly.

Mr. CHACE. I understood the Senator to say that there had not been an hour since this commission was organized that every member of the commission had not been laboring to promote its efficiency. I should like to know if the Senator can tell me where Mr. Edgerton is and has been for the last three or four weeks.

Mr. GORMAN. Of course I have no special knowledge of him, as I have not of hundreds of officers in the Departments, but I take it for granted that he is performing his duties either here or elsewhere, as he is required to do under the law. I do know this of Mr. Edgerton—and I only know him slightly personally—that he is a man of as good repute as there is in the United States. He is an old-fashioned Democrat and an old-fashioned thinker, and he is the only man who has been connected with the commission who by a public expression ever showed that he thought the people of this country had any rights outside of the Civil Service Commission. He has my entire respect and confidence.

As to the commission, standing as it is to-day, not complete and not full, whose fault is that, Mr. President? You have only to go to the public prints of the country, you have only to look around outside and ascertain what is said by intelligent people; it is not necessary to inquire in the secret places why these positions are not filled. There seems to be an intention on the other side, and it is the first time probably in the history of this Government that the majority have considered when the election is over and a change of administration is to occur, that the wheels of government must be stoned and the to occur, that the wheels of government must be stopped and the offices not permitted to be filled. That responsibility does not belong on this side of the Chamber; and if there is not a full commission, if the offices are not filled by men appointed and commissioned by the President of the United States, it is no fault of his or of the Demo-cratic party. While the time has not arrived yet for a full discussion cratic party. While the time has not a of that question, it must come later on.

So far as the Civil Service Commission is concerned, and holding the Democratic party up, as my friend from Iowa and other Senators on that side have done, let me remark that there never has been such a scramble for office and such a determination to prevent the usual and orderly filling of the offices from the very first Congress until now. Mr. President, I am no civil-service reformer. I do not believe in the system. I say now that in this matter of the railway mail service the Senator from Iowa does the present incumbent of the Post-Office Department great injustice and he misstates the facts, as I think and believe, when he says that system is demoralized. I do not believe it I do not believe it was demoralized under the Republican administra-

The rule that obtained in the railway mail service was the one that is applied by every business man in the country, the one that is applied by every corporation in the land for the ascertainment of the fitness of the men in its service, by a practical examination on the duties that they are to perform. The rule has been, and it was when you had possession of the Government, to appoint any man in that service who might be represented as a man of character and intelligence under thirty-He had an appointment for six months; he was on probation for that time, and weekly he was examined as to the duties that he was to perform. His memory was tested as to the offices to which he had to distribute mail, his expertness in handling letters was tested by the handling of cards, upon which he was given a percentage of accuracy or inaccuracy, and that was as correct and as fair a test as ever was made in any business institution in the land, and under it you had a superb class of men in the railway mail service. There can be no question about it.

When the Democrats came in you by your orders between the elec-tion of November, 1884, and the 4th day of March, 1885, placed nearly all the small offices of the country within the classified service, and you did it in pursuance of the provisions of the law and in accordance with it, as you had the right to do, and as President Cleveland had the right to issue this order. But everybody knows that, while the claim was that it was for the purpose of improving the public service, you could not take the human nature out of your party, and you can not take it out of ours, and the only intention was to keep your men in place.

Mr. President, the railway mail service was not included, and Democrats were recommended to take the places of Republicans who had gone in upon the examinations which I have stated. Every department of that service below the chief officer, every division superintend-ent, every chief clerk, every examiner of the qualifications of men who were appointed, was one of the old Republicans who had been in from five to ten years. So every Democrat who passed that examination passed it at the hands of a political opponent, and I will not here say how much Democrats were discriminated against, how severe the test was made by their Republican superiors, but those who passed passed because they were efficient.

Mr. HOAR. Of what time is the Senator now speaking?

Mr. GORMAN. I am speaking of the time from the advent of this administration to within a year.

Mr. HOAR. Was not the Republican who examined his Democratic opponent doing it with an ax over his own neck?

Mr. GORMAN. With an ax over his neck! Why, Mr. President, there is not a man of intelligence who has examined into the question of the removals and non-removals who is not aware that the ax was not held, as the Senator expresses it, over the neck of every man whether he be in or outside of the classified service. But I say, without the slightest hesitation, that there has been discrimination, natural and inevitable discrimination. It was simply human nature. But the fact is that these Democrats that you complain of had to pass the scrutiny of these old Republican officers.

Now, sir, take the city of Washington and the departmental service What I have complained of and what I think the country has a right to complain of, and what I am sure the Senator from Massachusetts, if he were at liberty to speak out, would complain of, is that under the operation of this law hundreds and thousands of men have been kept in office who from their long service and who from their inefficiency ought to have been removed in the interest of good government.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator inform me how the law operates to keep them in?

Mr. GORMAN. I will tell the Senator a fact that he ought to know. Of the ten or twelve thousand men who are employed in the classified service in the Government Departments in Washington not over twelve hundred of them have been removed and others put in their places.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will allow me to ask him a question, I should like to understand this matter. Do I understand the Senator correctly as saying that the Democratic administration has kept in men by the hundred and thousand that it ought to have turned out on account of their unfitness for the service, merely because their successors were to be chosen by competitive examination and not chosen simply by selecting Democrats?

Mr. GORMAN. That is very easily answered. The fault comes from the system. It is un-American. It can not be enforced properly. I will take two or three illustrations to satisfy the Senator from Mas-

Mr. HOAR. My question was whether I had correctly understood the Senator as affirming certain facts, not now as to the extension. I asked the Senator if what he has just stated to the Senate was this in sub-stance: That there were hundreds and thousands of unfit and incompetent officials in the service, known to the appointing and removing power to be unfit, that the Democratic administration kept in office, because if they were removed their successors would have to be appointed by competitive examination instead of being appointed by Democratic selection?

Mr. GORMAN. Oh, no.

I understood the Senator to say exactly that.

Mr. GORMAN. Oh, no; I did not say that.

Then there was a misunderstanding.

Mr. GORMAN. But I say that with one party in power for twentyfive years, as you were, with your officers all appointed from the lowest to the highest without any examination or any test except the departmental test, there had grown up in that party hundreds and thousands of men who had become barnacles and who ought to have been removed, who were not efficient men, and better men could have been put in their places; but they were not removed, and under the civil-service law they could not very well be removed and their places bettered.

I will illustrate to my friend what I mean. But a few days since the office of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury was under examination-every officer under it from the charwomen, as I understand, to the draughtsmen of the office. When he came to appoint draughtsmen, the Secretary of the Treasury or the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, who is himself a believer in this system, was compelled to admit that it was impossible under the civil-service system to get proper men to discharge those duties, and the result was they put out work upon the contract system, and then followed an investigation suggested by this civil-service association.

Mr. MORRILL. If the Senator will permit me, I will say that we have had one of the commissioners of the civil service before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and according to his testimony and other testimony we received, the failure to find men who could pass an examination was in consequence of a predetermination that the examination should be such a one as could not be passed.

Mr. GORMAN. A predetermination on the part of the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. MORRILL. No, sir; not on the part of the Civil Service Commission, but on the part of the parties in office.

Mr. GORMAN. Well. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee, is it not a matter of fact, and was it not in proof, that there are quite a number of draughtsmen in the office who could have passed that examination?

Mr. MORRILL. I think if the Senator from Maryland will read the testimony when it is printed he will be satisfied that the questions which were asked were such as could not be answered in one day or a week or a fortnight.

Mr. GORMAN. I heard the late Comptroller of the Currency-not Mr. Trenholm, but his immediate predecessor-describe a case to me in his office of a lady, the most expert accountant, as he said, in the United States, if not in the world, in handling mutilated currency, a lady whom they had sent abroad, and they found nobody abroad, in the case of the burning of some of our money, who could go over and count it and preserve it as could she. She was the very best, as he said, in the United States, if not in the world, and he wanted to promote her in his office, and if she had been examined by anybody upon the duties that were to be performed, if the examination had had any relation in the world to what she was to do, nobody in the United States or in the world would have been able to compete with her; and yet under the technical examination upon subjects foreign to the duties that she was to perform she failed to pass the examination, and a young grad-uate of the Johns Hopkins University, who knew nothing whatever about the affairs of the Treasury Department, passed the examination and was appointed to the place.
So it is with this list. You may take it from the beginning to the end and the examination does not show anything as to the qualifications and the honesty or the integrity of the people who are appli-

What is the result? It has been so under this Administration and it will be so under yours, if you observe the law as strictly as the present Administration has done, and you will not feel inclined to remove people already in office who are performing their duties reasonably well, that you can get along with, and take the chances upon an unknown quantity, upon an unknown man.

Mr. MITCHELL. In view of the suggestion made by the Senator from Maryland, I should like to ask him whether he thinks it was a judicious, wise, or proper thing in the interest of the Government to extend the civil-service rules to the employés of the railway mail service?

Mr. GORMAN. I have just answered that, and said no. I think that the test formerly applied to those employes was the test that any sensible business man would apply, and I do not believe you have a better service to-day or can have under any system than you had under the one that obtained with regard to the railway mail service. It is one that the business men of the world would apply, and so I think as to the remainder of these officers.

as to the remainder of these officers,

Why should the Civil Service Commission come to this body and ask for an increase of its force? What earthly necessity is there for it except to build up another huge department? Within the past two or three years they have examined for departmental service fifteen or sixteen thousand persons, two-thirds of whom have passed, and there have been during the entire four years not more than twelve hundred of them appointed. It is an annoyance to the people of the country who come here and pass these examinations. They come here supposing that when they are fresh from college and from the public schools they will pass the examinations and obtain places, and yet not one in two thousand of those who apply and pass can ever enter the departmental service, and I think for these young men, just entering upon life and fresh from school, it is a God-send that they can not get these places. But you bring them here the moment they leave the school-room, and because of this apparent opening you teach them to look to the Government for place, and the result is bad and can not be good under any condition of affairs.

I assert, after looking into their management to some extent, that they have now a larger force employed in this office than is necessary, and they can have from any other Department of the Government when there is a special necessity for it a detail, a larger force, if necessary, to honestly conduct the duties with which they are charged. Therefore there is no earthly necessity for the increase which the Senator from Connecticut proposes.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Maryland to a statement made by him and to the statute on the sub-ject. The Senator stated that the examinations of the Civil Service Commission had no reference as a test of the qualifications of the party examined to discharge the duties of the office for which he was applying, and he alluded to a pointed and very remarkable instance of that sort, the lady referred to by him. I want to call his attention now to the statute on that subject. I read from chapter 27 of the acts of the Forty-seventh Congress, page 403, part of the second section:

Such examinations

Civil-service examinations-shall be practical in their character, and so far as may be shall relate to those matters which will fairly test the relative capacity and fitness of the persons examined to discharge the duties of the service into which they seek to be appointed.

Under that statute I submit to the honorable Senator that the case which he specified to the Senate could not have happened, except by a gross misinterpretation of the law and a gross misapplication of it. I know noting of the practical operations of the Civil Service Commission, but if they have prescribed a course of examination purely scholastic and have omitted to make examination practical, so as to test the capacity of the person examined to discharge the duties of the particular office which he seeks to fill, then I say the Civil Service Commission act not only without authority of law, but expressly in windston of its plain provisions.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President—

Mr. COKE. If the Senator from Maryland will allow me, I simply desire to say that, in point of fact, I believe applicants for positions are examined under the Civil Service Commission without reference to any particular place. They are simply general applicants for a place. They go before the commission to be examined, and they are appointed at the will of the commission afterwards to any place that may become vacant.

Mr. GEORGE. Then that is a maladministration of the office.

Mr. GORMAN. I will say to the Senator from Mississippi that that has been so from the beginning. The Senator from Indiana who sits next me [Mr. VOORHEES], I remember some years ago, during the last administration, brought to the attention of the Senate some most extraordinary questions that were propounded for the most humble places in the Government, and after the country's attention was brought to it by the Senator from Indiana it was modified to some extent.

But who is to determine what the examination shall be and whether it is within the letter of the law which the Senator has read but the commission itself? I wish I had here to read to the Senate a letter I received three years ago from a bright young man in the city of Bal-timore—I can repeat it now almost word for word—who was an applicant for the position of letter-carrier. He went before the board, as he wrote to me, with the recommendation of the pastor of his church, of every reputable man of the neighborhood in which he resided in Baltimore. He was the son of a mechanic in the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad shops and had attended school until he was seven or eight years of age, and then began to work with his father in the shop and attended night school.

He had the certificate of everybody who knew him that he was a Sunday-school scholar and a young man of excellent reputation; his integrity was beyond question, and his health was good, for physically He was above the ordinary intelligence. He said his ability as a pedestrian to walk the streets was equal to that of any man in Baltimore. There was not a lane or an alley or the number of a house in Baltimore that he could not go to. He had every qualification for the place; and yet when he went before the board he was examined upon geography.

They wanted him to tell them what was the most direct route from Baltimore to Japan, and, as he said, he never intended to go to Japan, he had never looked into that question, and he failed to make the proper answer. They then wanted to know the number of lines of steamers plying between the United States and Liverpool and London, and he said that he was not up on such questions as that. They then tried him in arithmetic, and, finally, branched him off into geometry, and would have taken him into astronomy, as he said, but he thought the examiners did not understand that matter themselves; and, pass ing over everything that looked to his qualifications, he was rejected.

After I received that letter, I gave a copy of it to one of the most in-telligent and best men in the State of Maryland, and he examined the young man, and fortunately for him his rejection by the civil-service board has given him a position where he will become a man of mark in this country, in his trade, for he bids fair, as I understand, to be the brightest machinist that was ever turned out of those great shops in Baltimore. The civil service in that case did a good thing, but it was an outrage upon the young man and it was an outrage upon all like him. It shows that the system is not right in itself, and can never take root upon American soil and with Americans unless it is modified.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not wish to enter into the debate at this time of the general question which has been discussed so often; but I do not think what has been said ought to pass by without my putting on record my own opinion upon this question.

I am glad that the present Administration, whether late or early, has extended this system to another branch of the civil service. Pres ident Cleveland, or the Department officer on whose advice he acted, does not secure the retention in office of any unworthy or unfit Demoerat by so doing, unless the appointing power is to be administered hereafter by some unworthy or some unfit Republican. He simply provides for taking away the political motive for turning these men out. If they are unfit either in character or attainments or special capacity for the particular service, or if for any other reason that can be conceived of they should be removed, that power will remain as here-

The only thing that is to happen is that when a successor is to be appointed his fitness is to be ascertained by an examination which is open to all mankind, and not to depend upon the question whether he is a man important to the political fortunes of some important politician; and that is all that has happened.

The people very largely had come to the conclusion that the old fashion was a bad one, that the using the executive offices of the country as a reward for services to a political party, in the first place, held out a corrupt motive instead of the honorable ambition for useful service that ought to exist, and a man went into politics to get office for himself and not in consequence of any political principle in very many cases.

In the next place, it degenerated, and instead of becoming a temptation to the service of a political party it became a temptation to serve a political chieftain in the party, and its process of turning men out and putting them in and compelling the Departments of the Government to do the bidding of leading politicians here in the Senate became a scandal and a shame to republican administration in this country. Why, it was perfectly notorious that there were men who sat in these seats, there were men who sat in the seats of the other House, whose assent was necessary to the accession to office and to the retention in office of the humblest officer in the States where their influence extended; and it became absolutely intolerable. It became intolerable to the Republican majority in my own State. It is not necessary to re-peat that history of shame and indignation which we had to go through. Now we hear the statement which the Senator from Maryland [Mr.

GORMAN] makes as to a particular case. Of course I know nothing about it. If it be true—the Senator undoubtedly has reason to believe it to be true when he states it—it shows a great unfitness on the part of the examining board for their functions, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. George] has shown.

I understand that the examination in the particular work of the railway mail service will go on as now, and as heretofore, in spite of the civil-service examination. These examinations are intended, by inquiring of the applicants in regard to what ordinarily decently educated persons know, to test the quickness of their wits and the extent of their information, and I think the Senator from Maryland must be very much misled, even if the question about Japan was put to this applicant, if he has been led to believe that the answer, right or wrong, had much to do with seriously affecting the question of his selection.

But I think that while neither of the two rules is tolerable, it would be as well for the public service that the applicant for such a position should be able to answer ordinary questions in geography as that he should be compelled to get, as is the case under the present administration in the New England States, the certificate of the keeper of some unlicensed liquor shop who has afforded important service to the Democratic party in the campaign and made important contributions to its treasury

Mr. GEORGE. Or the Republican party.

Mr. HOAR. Or the Republican party. The Senator from Mississippi will remember, if he has done me the honor to listen to me, that I have not failed to state the truth about the Republican conduct in my own State in the past under Republican administrations formerly.

Mr. GEORGE. I heard the Senator's remarks.

Mr. HOAR. And I was told in this very connection by a high official, one of the officers whom the Senator from Maryland has alluded to, that for the past year or two when he has asked the persons who were sent to him to be inducted into the railway mail service what their occupation had been, in a very large proportion of cases they told him it had been that of a bar-tender.

Mr. EUSTIS. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me? The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir. Mr. EUSTIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he will state to what officials he would apply this statutory civil-service reform and to what officials he would not apply it?

Mr. HOAR. I would apply it, if I had my way, to every official in the country in an executive office whose duties were not of a political or a confidential nature and whom it was not expedient to have in sympathy with the administration when that administration was carrysympathy with the administration when that administration was carrying out its political theories and policies in regard to which its opponents would be expected not to be in sympathy, and I would have it then apply to all the class of offices to which men of ordinary and average intelligence are competent. If there be a case like that of counting money, which the Senator from Maryland spoke of, or one which involves the detection of counterfeits, and a thousand cases can be supposed—there are some such cases in every large custom-house—of course there should be authority lodged in the President of the United States to make an exception in such cases, but in those cases all the appointing power has to do is to wait until somebody has passed the examination who possesses the particular qualities required. It is very easy to make the rule flexible with regard to that matter.

But, as I said, Mr. President, I did not rise for the purpose of a general discussion or defense of the civil-service reform policy. I roes simply to state that my opinion is unchanged.

Mr. EUSTIS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him another question?

Mr. HOAR.

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.
Mr. EUSTIS. I am not asking these questions to try to embarrass at all the Senator from Massachusetts. Mr. HOAR. I did not make my answers to embarrass the Senator from Louisiana.

I know the Senator is honestly in favor of civil-serv-Mr. EUSTIS. ice reform, and it is because I am anxious to get some light on this subject that I ask him these questions. His answer is a little indefinite, I think, in regard to political offices. I would ask him, for instance, whether he would think that the Presidential postmasters ought to come within the civil-service rules or not?

Mr. HOAR. Well, Mr. President, I confess I am not prepared to answer that question at this moment. I have not reflected with regard to that particular office. I should be very glad to remove the office of Presidential postmaster from the class of political offices if some way to do it could be devised. I think it would be for the interest of this country.

Mr. EUSTIS. I mention that case because it occurs to me that the Presidential postmaster has not very much to do in shaping the policy of an administration.

Mr. HOAR. But there are a great many considerations that come in. The postmaster is an officer of importance in the community. He is an officer who in the first place ordinarily has to furnish the place where he carries on his business, has to be convenient of access to the people, and that is always taken into consideration in the appointment.

In the next place, he has got to be a man who has to deal with a large number of persons. The postmaster has to make explanations the country postmaster especially—to business men, to people of feeble minds, to those who are confused, to women and children, and there are a thousand things which make that political officer a person who very likely should be selected under a more careful examination by somebody on whom the appointing power relies. His personal qualities, the element of popularity with the people whom he serves, enter into his service. So that there are a great many considerations which have to be weighed before the Senator's question can be answered.

Mr. President, I do not think there is much to be gained by the two political parties taunting each other in regard to their performances in this respect. This is a reform. It is something in regard to which the opinions and practices of the whole American people are expected to be changed by those who advocate this reform. Talleyrand declared that the American people were a nation of drunkards when he was over here, and a temperance reform was instituted, and I have was over here, and a temperance reform was instituted, and I have never heard that the gentlemen who went into it and led it made a great deal by each taunting the other as to how much liquor he drank before he became a temperance man.

This has gone on gradually. The first civil-service reformers were very much in the condition of the man described in the parable of the sower. I think the reform has, as all reforms have in this country, found its most congenial soil in the Republican party, and the Republican party were undoubtedly the first converts, though there were some very eminent gentlemen on the other side of the Chamber, notably the present Secretary of State, notably the present minister to Berlin, and, if I am not mistaken, the successor in this Chamber of the present Secretary of State—I am not sure about it—at any rate very eminent persons on that side of the Chamber in that party have accepted this polsons on that side of the Chamber in that party have accepted this policy as a wise one. But the Senator from Maryland can repeat without looking at the Book a little parable which I am obliged to read, and that is this:

Behold, there went out a sower to sow:

And it came to pass, as he sowed, some fell by the way side, and the fowls of the air came and devoured it up—

Those were Democratic birds which did that.

And some fell on stony ground, where it had not much earth; and immediately it sprang up, because it had no depth of earth:

But when the sun was up, it was scorched; and because it had no root, it withered away.

Those were the Mugwumps.

And other fell on good ground, and did yield fruit that sprang up and increased, and brought forth, some thirty, and some sixty, and some a hundred.

Those were the Republicans in this reform.

Mr. GORMAN. I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts one question. I have no doubt that he is a complete civil-service reformer, that is to say, he believes in this system; and now that he has taken to reading his Bible I have no doubt he will be converted later

Aside from that, I should like to ask the Senator from Massachusetts, believing, as he does, that the system under which the appointments under this Government have been made from its foundation up to the time of the passage of this law was so corrupt and so bad that the saloons and the saloon-keepers and the bad men made the appointments

Mr. HOAR. Oh, no; I did not say that. Mr. GORMAN. Practically, as I understood the Senator, it was, I think, as strong as that. He said that it was so bad under Republican rule that his own party revolted and overthrew it in Massachusetts and elsewhere. Now, I ask him under that system and under those influences, if it be true—and I do not subscribe to it—whether he is in favor of keeping in office the men who were so appointed and under such influences, or is he in favor of removing them all, and making the test uniform and complete under this civil-service act.

Mr. HOAR. I should answer that I should be in favor of acting in regard to each particular case. If the Senator means to ask me whether I am in favor of turning out, root and branch, all the Democrats who are now in these non-political offices, who were not appointed after competitive examinations, and substituting men who were, I answer most emphatically in the negative. I do not think President Harrison could do any greater public wrong, or anything more suicidal for himself, or anything more in conflict with his own record and avowed opinions, than to undertake to do such a thing.

Mr. GORMAN. Now, I should like to ask my friend from Massachusetts one other question. Why is it that he and his friends on that side of the Chamber who believe with him in this theory are denouncing the President and the present Administration for extending the civil-service system to the railway mail service?

Mr. HOAR. I thought when the Senator put his other question to me and when he made the statement of what he understood me to say of the corruption of the service from the foundation of the Government he misunderstood me, for I had said nothing of the kind. If he had listened to me, I began my remarks by saying that I did not regret the President had done so, making such defense of the act as I was capable

Mr. GORMAN. Then I misunderstood the Senator from Massachutts. Some of his friends on that side of the Chamber have given expression during the past two days, notably my friend from Iowa [Mr. Allison], to denunciations of the President of the United States and those in authority for extending this system, and I supposed the Senator was in harmony with his party.

Mr. HOAR. Whether the President of the United States is a just subject of criticism for not having done it sconer, if he were to do it at all, I did not even say or suggest; he does it now for the first time. What I did say was that I did not regret that he had done it, that I thought it was a step forward in the right direction, and that the President by doing it only took away from his successors not the perfect right to remove all the incompetent men they found there, but simply the temptation to remove for the mere sake of putting Republican politicians in their places.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). The question recurs on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut

[Mr. HAWLEY]. Mr. GORMAN.

Mr. GORMAN. Let the amendment be read. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The SECRETARY. Under the head of "Civil Service Commission," on page 20, at the end of line 19, strike out the word "two" and insert "three;" so as to read:

Three clerks of class 2.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to understand what is the object of that amendment. Is it to give this Civil Service Commission three clerks instead of two?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That seems to be the amendment. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

[Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.
Several SENATORS. Let us have a division.
Mr. ALLISON. I trust Senators will allow it to stand. The Senate is rather thin, and I should like to have the bill passed to-night.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will again put the question on agreeing to the amendment,

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. On pages 30 and 31 the Committee on Appropriations recommended some amendments to those provisions, notably an amendment in line 12, confining the work of the examination of accounts of the Soldiers' Home to a period subsequent to 1887, in anticipation that the clerical service required under the provision as it originally stood would not be needed, and reduced the number of clerks. On a further examination the committee find that these clerks will be needed. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment reducing the number of clerks and the corresponding amendment as to amount be reconsidered, so that the clerks may stand, leaving the important part of the amendment in line 12 to remain. That is on page 30, and the same on page 31.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Iowa suggest again the action he desires?

Mr. ALLISON. On page 30, line 8, the committee recommended and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "five clerks" and inserted "one clerk." I ask that the "five clerks" stand, and also that the figures may stand as originally reported in line 12.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 8, it is proposed to strike out the word each."

Mr. ALLISON. That may remain in. I desire the paragraph to stand as it is in the original text, with the exception of the insertion of "1887," in line 12.

The SECRETARY. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "five clerks at" and inserted "one clerk," and in line 9 struck out "$3,300."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the vote by which the amendments were agreed to be reconsidered and the amendments rejected, except the amendment in line 12.

Mr. GEORGE. On what page?

Mr. ALLISON. On page 30. It relates to clerks who are engaged in adjusting the accounts of the Soldiers' Home.

Mr. GORMAN. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the same thing on page 31, in line 21 and line 23, in the clause making appropriations for additional force for continuing the adjustment of the accounts of the Soldiers' Home in the office of the Second Auditor.

The Secretary. On page 31, line 21, before the word "clerks," the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "seven" and inserted "two;" so as to read:

Two clerks, at $840 each.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that that may be disagreed to, and also the amendment as to the amount.

The SECRETARY. Also, in line 23, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "$6,600" and inserted "$2,400."

Mr. ALLISON. Let that also be disagreed to.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the vote by which these amendments was adopted shall be reconsidered, and the paragraph stand as it came from the House of Representatives.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to hear the Senator's views upon that subject.

Mr. ALLISON. I will state to the Senator that these clerks have been engaged in adjusting the accounts of the Soldiers' Home. The Senator will recollect that last year when we had this question up I called the attention of the Military Committee to the necessity of some new legislation on that subject, so that instead of utilizing these clerks for the purposes of making examinations of the fines and forfeitures running back to 1851, there should be some different adjustment whereby this office should be maintained.

Nothing was done by the Military Committee, and this year the Committee on Appropriations recommend that these investigations and examinations shall be confined to the period since 1887, and then having settled that question it was supposed by the committee that a less number of clerks would be required; but on further examination I am told by the officers having charge of this matter that these clerks will still be required, notwithstanding the amendments we proposed. That is all there is of it

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Iowa? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRIS. On page 4, and as the bill amended by the committee stands, in line 11, after the word "Commerce," I am directed by the Committee on Epidemic Diseases to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated. The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, line 11, in the appropriations for clerks and messengers to committees of the Senate, after the word "Commerce," it is proposed to insert:

Clerk to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to attract the attention of Senators and of the Committee on Appropriations to page 80, line 25, where I find that the House of Representatives has reduced the number of the members of the board of pension appeals from six to three, and the Senate committee has reported the bill to the Senate in that form.

I find in the act passed on the 31st of July, 1886, it was provided that there should be

Three members of a board of pension appeals, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, at $2,000 each; six additional persons to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior to aid him in determining appeals from the Commissioner of Pensions, and from whom he may constitute two additional boards of pension appeals, whose term of service shall expire at the close of the fiscal year 1887, at $2,000 each.

Then again, by the act of March 3, 1887, provision was made for-Then again, by the act of march 1, 1807, provision was made to —
Three members of a board of pension appeals, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, at $2,000 each; nine additional persons to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior to aid him in determining appeals from the Commissioner of Pensions, and from whom he may constitute three additional boards of pension appeals, whose opinion shall be filed in the case, whose term of service shall expire at the close of the fiscal year 1888.

Again, by the act of July 11, 1888, which was the last legislation upon the subject, the number of the board of pension appeals " manently" was fixed at six members at $2,000 a year each. That seems to be the law now, that six members should constitute this

Here the proposition by the other House and by the Appropriations Committee of the Senate is to reduce the number to three-just onehalf. I do not know whether the Secretary of the Interior has recommended this or how it is, but I should like to know as to that.

Mr. ALLISON. I would say to the Senator from Oregon that this additional board is not necessary for bringing up the arrears, as the Secretary of the Interior in his annual report states that the arrears are all brought up and that one board is sufficient to conduct the current business. In view of that, the committee of course did not feel that they could retain the two boards.

Mr. MITCHELL. I inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether he or his committee have inquired into the manner in which pension appeals from the Commissioner of Pensions have been considered in the office of the Secretary of the Interior in past years? The point is, whether the appeals which have come up from time to time-and there are a great many of them from the Commissioner of Pensions-have been referred to this board of pension appeals, considered by the board, and then acted upon by the Secretary, or whether they have been considered by clerks drawn from time to time from the office of the Commissioner of Pensions, and then passed upon by the Secretary in innumerable cases which never went before the board of pension appeals at all?

Mr. ALLISON. The committee did not examine that question with any detail. We heard some suggestions that in some cases perhaps the matter had been considered by the Secretary of the Interior outside of the board of pension appeals, but there was no information which led us to believe that an additional board of appeals was required.

fore we did not propose it.

Mr. MITCHELL. In that connection my information is that in many instances the cases which have been appealed from the decision of the Commissioner of Pensions have been reviewed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior by the very same men who passed upon the cases originally in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions and who have been called by the Secretary of the Interior from the office of the Commissioner of Pensions to pass upon these cases.

I understand furthermore—I may be wrong about it, and, of course, if I am I shall be glad to be corrected—that there are some four thousand cases that have been appealed from the Commissioner of Pensions, and there have been reversals in only about one hundred of them. That may all be right, and perhaps none of the other cases ought to have been reversed; but if it be true, as has been reported to me, that some of the clerks employed in giving decisions in these cases in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions have been called up into the office of the Secretary of the Interior for the purpose of reviewing their own decisions, then it is a practice that ought not to be permitted. That may account, if true, for the fact that the docket has been cleared in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, and it may also go very far to account for the fact that there have been so few reversals in proportion to the great number of cases appealed.

Mr. ALLISON. As far as I know the committee had no information to the effect stated by the Senator from Oregon. If what he states be true, it is very bad administration of the Interior Department, and we hope to correct any trouble that may arise on that account in a very

Mr. MITCHELL. I would suggest to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether, perhaps, it would not be wise, in order to have this matter still an open question in conference, to amend this bill by striking out the word "three," in this line, and inserting the word "six," and then when the committees get into conference, if it is deemed advisable under all the circumstances to reduce the board from six, as it is now under the law, to three, it can be done; but if it should seem to be advisable after looking into the matter to keep the board at the original number, six, then the committee would be in a position to do it. As the matter stands now—unless of course this amendment is made—the board is reduced from six to three members. I shall make no motion myself to amend. I simply desire to attract the attention of the chairman of the committee and the committee and the Senate to this matter.

Mr. ALLISON. If it shall turn out next year that there are arrears in these pension appeal cases it will be very easy to ask for additional force. If the current work of this board is now up, I see no difficulty in a single board of appeals taking care of all the cases that may come before it.

Mr. TELLER. This board of appeals was established under my administration of the office of Secretary of the Interior. There had been no such thing before. I induced the Appropriations Committee to establish it because there was a necessity in these appeals for the employment of old examiners. The work ran behind with three men, as stated by the Senator from Oregon. We have had some of the time nine men and sometimes six, and they have brought up the work. I am satisfied myself that no three men can keep up that work and do justice to the Government and do justice to the people who claim the attention of the Government in appealing to the Secretary of the Interior. The Secretary of the Interior himself can not look at these cases, and the old practice of leaving them to one clerk is simply a denial of justice to the parties appealing. I think myself there should be at least five men on that board, if not six.

Mr. COCKRELL. I desire to say to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that the incoming administration, which he proposes to use in rectifying certain things, will have a very branch of the public service; and the reflection which that language casts upon the present administration I denounce.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Missouri-if he will allow me a moment-had taken a little more pains to listen to what I said, he would have discovered that my remarks were kased upon the allegations of the Senator from Oregon, of which I had no I simply stated that if appeals were considered under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior by clerks who had made the original decision, I thought it was very bad administration and would undoubtedly be corrected. I have no knowledge whatever that the present Secretary of the Interior has done that thing, and I would not believe without pretty full information that he would do it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have no personal knowledge on that point, and

I think I stated that substantially. At the same time it has been reported to me from a source that is worthy of consideration at least, that such has been the practice; that is to say, that clerks from the of-fice of the Commissioner of Pensions have been called to the aid of the Secretary of the Interior or the Assistant Secretary, because I believe the Assistant Secretary generally attends to this--in reviewing cases that have come up on appeal from the decision of the Commissioner, and that very many cases, according to this report, have been passed upon by the Secretary and affirmed without those cases ever having gone before this board of pension appeals at all.

I do not know that that is so. It may be entirely misinformation, but that is my information, and I say, as the chairman of the committee says, if that is so, then it is a very bad practice and it ought to be corrected; and if it is so, that may go very far, as I said before, to account for the clearing of the docket, and if any such suggestion has been made from the Interior Department, to the effect that a board composed of three members is sufficient to do this work, whereas heretofore the board has been composed of six and sometimes of nine-

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like the Senator from Oregon, in making such a reflection as that is, to state his authority. I do not think that Senators should come here on the floor of the Senate and make statements reflecting upon the character of officers of high standing and high official position, and then say they do not know whether the statements are true or not.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not know that it is any reflection upon the character of any one. I do not understand that any statement I have made reflects upon the character of the Secretary of the Interior or the character of anybody else, and I certainly mean to make no such reflection. The Secretary of the Interior in his judgment may feel that he is fully authorized in calling to his aid, in addition to this board of appeals, any clerk within his Department,

Mr. COCKRELL. For what purpose?

Mr. MITCHELL. For the purpose of aiding him in the examination of appeals from the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL. How will he examine them? Did not your informant undertake to make the impression on your mind that these people practically decided the cases, and that the Secretary only followed after this pension clerk in his ruling? Was not that the object of his coming to you?

Mr. MITCHELL. Well, Mr. iPresident, I have not said that any-body came to me, as far as that s concerned, and I do not know that I am bound to state what impression anything made upon my mind. I simply have stated, and I repeat it, that I have information to the effect that the Secretary of the Interior, or the Assistant Secretary, rather, whose province, I believe, it is under the practice of the Department to take up and pass upon these cases, had called in to his aid not alone and only this board of pension appeals provided by law, but that he had called to his aid clerks employed in the office of the Commissioner of Pensions, and that in many instances these appeal cases have been taken up, passed upon, and decided by the Secretary of the Interior, or the Assistant Secretary, if you please, without the cases ever having gone before the board of pension appeals.

The Secretary of the Interior may have felt that he had ample authority as Secretary of the Interior to do that thing. I am making no charges against the integrity of the Secretary of the Interior or the Assistant Secretary of the Interior or against anybody else, as the Senator from Missouri would seem to imply. I am assuming, and have assumed in all that I have said, that the Secretary of the Interior perhaps felt that he had ample authority and full power to call to bis aid anybody in connection with his Department to assist in this business. That is all I have said, and I repeat that square fact.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me? Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. Has the Secretary, or has he not, power to call these clerks to his assistance?

Mr. MITCHELL. I think probably he has. I think, perhaps without any doubt, he has power to do that thing. But inasmuch as the legislature of the country has stepped in and provided a board of pension appeals to aid him in this matter, it seems to me that all these cases ought to go before that board.

That is all I meant to say. The Senator from Missouri has misunderstood me entirely if he supposes for one moment that I am making any charges against anybody. I simply mean to say if that thing has been done, it is a bad practice and one that ought not to be allowed in the future, and if the Secretary of the Interior is not able to get along with these cases with a board of pension appeals composed of six members, without calling in aid from other sources, then the board ought not to be retained. That is all I meant to say.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, the information received by the Senator from Oregon in regard to the action in this matter is incorrect:

For fifteen years prior to January 1, 1881, the average number of appeals taken annually from the action of the Pension Office to the Secretary of the Interior was 285.

Mr. MITCHELL. How many? Mr. COCKRELL. Two hundred and eighty-five annually on an average for fifteen years prior to January 1, 1881. Since January 1, 1881, the number of appeals taken from the Commissioner of Pensions to the Secretary of the Interior, is as follow	YS.

1881	479
1882	513 1,079
	2,148
1997	1 940

Mr. MITCHELL. I wish to ask the Senator a question there.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL. Can the Senator tell me what proportion of those were reversed and what proportion affirmed?

Mr. COCKRELL. I have that statement somewhere, but I am not able to lay my hand on it now. I have not been able, since the Senator raised the point, to get at it.

umber of appeal cases—

Disposed of in 1887	5, 457
Pending January 1, 1888	377

Mr. MITCHELL. About five thousand cases, then, were disposed of in 1887.

Mr. COCKRELL. Five thousand four hundred and fifty-seven. Before that, if I am not mistaken, we instituted this board of pension appeals simply to assist the Secretary of the Interior in his decision. It is not the board that makes the decision. We first made, I believe, the number three. Then we increased it to six. Then we increased it to nine, and, if I am not mistaken, in the appropriation act of 1886-'87 we increased it still more, but I do not remember exactly the number.

Mr. MITCHELL. There was no further increase. Nine was the highest it ever reached, and then in the last appropriation bill it was reduced to six, and that is the law to-day.

Mr. COCKRELL. In regard to the methods of business there, I will read a letter from the Assistant Secretary to the chairman of the Senate Select Committee to Investigate the Methods of Business in the Departments:

Department of the Interior, Washington, January 5, 1888.

Dear Sir: Inclosed I transmit for your information report of the work of the board of pension appeals for the week ending December 31, 1887, showing appeals pending, 377.

I desire to state in this connection that, while this number of cases is on our docket as pending, as a matter of fact we are now disposing of current appeals. The practice in the Pension Bureau is that, when a case is appealed by reason of the rejection of the soldier's claim for pension, before the papers are forwarded to this Department by the Commissioner of Pensions they are submitted to a board, known as the board of re-review, who are required to re-examine the whole record in the case with a view to the correction of errors and mistakes that may have been committed in the original examination of such claim; and to-day the 377 cases that appear as pending upon the Department docket are now before the different boards for re-examination by the Pension Bureau for the purposes above stated. After the board of re-review has acted, if the former rejection is adhered to, or reversed, the Department is notified by the Pension Bureau of its action in this behalf. So that there are to-day no accumulation of cases ready for final action by this Department.

As soon as I can have a few decisions in the Brockman case printed I will take great pleasure in forwarding the same to you for distribution, as requested. I may also state as a matter of information that from the commencement of the year 1888 there will be many changes with a view to improved methods in the transaction of the duties assigned me by the Secretary of the Interior, all tending to a greater promptness in the disposition of these matters as well as a great saving in expense.

Very respectfully, yours,

D. L. HAWKINS, Assistant Secretary.

Hon. F. M. COCKERLL, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask whether the Senator has any knowledge that all the cases that come up from the decision of the Commissioner of Pensions are submitted to this board or not?

Mr. COCKRELL. I am going on to state that. My understanding is, and I think I can not be mistaken in it, that the rule is in the Department when these cases come up by appeal from the Pension Office they go to the Assistant Secretary, and then go to the members of the pension appeal board. Now, they have clerks there making out briefs and abstracts for them to help them in doing their work. never have gotten up with the work if they had to do all the writing with their own hands. They have their decisions written out and they are all subject to the review of the Assistant Secretary.

As a matter of course, the Assistant Secretary acts under and for the Secretary, and if it were an important case that counsel demanded that the Secretary should pass upon he would have to do so, regard-less of whether the Assistant Secretary had passed upon it or anybody else. There might be a case in which the Secretary would give the formal decision and have the case briefed and the statement of facts in it presented to him.

They have had in the employ of this board persons detailed from different offices. I presume they have had some from the Pension Office. I think they have had some from the Patent Office, and they have had other clerks doing mere clerical work; but that the cases are passed upon or practically decided by the clerks in the Pension Office who had the first adjudication of them is incorrect. That class of clerks has not been detailed there to assist the pension appeal board in their work. It has been a different class of clerks.

As this report shows, in the Pension Office the cases pass through a large number of hands. They are briefed and prepared. Then they go to the chief of division, then they go to the board of review, and they are sent occasionally to a medical board, if there is any reference requiring it. If there is any question of law, they are sent to the board of lawyers in the Interior Department. After a decision is made and the Secretary has confirmed it, if there is any dissatisfaction and that case is appealed, then the case goes to the board of re-review, and frequently errors that may have escaped observation before are corrected there and the case is not appealed any further. Sometimes before the case is decided there is additional evidence upon a weak point sub-mitted, so that in all cases the largest possible latitude is given to the applicant to present any and all kinds of evidence that he may have, and even after the case comes before the board of appeals you can send evidence to the Pension Office and it will be sent up to the board of appeals having the case. I have a case of that kind now pending.

Mr. MITCHELL. I presume the Senator from Missouri will agree with me that, in view of this legislation from time to time, all the cases that are appealed from the decision of the Commissioner of Pensions ought to pass through this board before being decided.

Mr. COCKRELL. That depends on circumstances.

Mr. MITCHELL. What circumstances?

Mr. COCKRELL. As I say, in an important case parties might want the Secretary to pass upon it himself, and they have a right to force him to pass upon it if necessary, because the board are only acting as and for him, and if you were prosecuting cases there might be a principle or a question involved on which you would not be satisfied to take the opinion of the board. I have got cases now pending that I expect to take directly before the Secretary, and to take his decision and construction on legal points. That may occur in the great bulk of the cases going before these persons. Now I will go further and

Mr. MITCHELL. I understand the Senator to concede, then— Mr. COCKRELL. I do not know that there has ever been such a case, but I can readily see that there might be cases, and I have one or two that I have attempted to prepare that I expect to ask the Secretary of the Interior to pass upon himself.

Mr. MITCHELL. And probably there are a number of cases that have gone up that the board of appeals never knew anything about.

Mr. COCKRELL. I doubt that very seriously. I doubt very seriously whether there has been a solitary such case; but I say there might be cases, in my judgment, that might occur, where a lawyer or a claimant would have a perfect right to ask the Secretary to pass upon it, and, as I said, I have a case in point where the decision has been given against the pensioning of soldiers of a certain class enlisted at a certain time under a certain law, and I do not believe that con-struction of the law is right, and it is the case referred to in the book before me. I think they have misinterpreted the law, and I expect to place that in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior himself to pass upon that question, as I have a right to do.

Mr. MITCHELL. Has the Senator any information as to the number of cases that are now before the Secretary?

Mr. COCKRELL. I will come to that in a minute. My judgment is that the cases, if any have ever been taken directly to the Secretary, are very few. I have never heard of one being so taken. They publish all these decisions; they are all printed and they are being bound. After this board got this great bulk of cases before them and had these decisions prepared, and they have been reviewed by the Secretary, there is scarcely now a case coming before them that is not covered by some of the previously decided cases, so that they can dispose of twice as many cases as they could before. When the board was organized, while the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Teller] was Secretary of the Interior, they did not have the decisions in the pension cases published, did they?

Mr. TELLER. I think they commenced publishing them when I

Mr. TELLER. I think they commenced publishing them when I was Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. COCKRELL. They had not been originally published.

Mr. TELLER. Not originally.

Mr. COCKRELL. So that the Secretary did not have the benefit of the precedents; but now that they have been printed, and are being printed regularly, the Assistant Secretary told me only a day or two ago that there were very few cases that came up now which had not practically been decided before cally been decided before.

As to whether three members of the board of appeals can keep up the current business depends upon whether they are good workers or not. That is all there is about it. I say to the Senator frankly, knowing as I do the amount of business and the character of the business, that three men on that board of appeals, if they keep the business up to date and dispose of the business currently, will have to work industriously.

Whether the incoming administration will be able to secure three men who will work industriously and faithfully and keep the business up or not, is, in my judgment, doubtful. I say it very frankly, they will have to work very industriously. There are now on that pension appeal board some men who are very expert in this business, because they have been there; they have gone all over these cases; they are familiar with them; they are lawyers; they have studied these decisions, and they may dispose of a great many cases just as the Senator could, familiar as he is with the law; and the more cases he decides the more he can decide, because he becomes more familiar with them.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think there are some very competent men on that board.

Mr. COCKRELL. I thought I had the Senate select committee report here, but it is so voluminous that I may have omitted to put it in; but I had during the investigation of the Senate select committee reports made monthly by this board as to the number of cases they disposed of, and my recollection is that they reversed a great many. I do not think they probably reversed as many as before, but they reversed quite a considerable number of cases that were brought before them, and the Appropriations Committee, when they made that last increase—and I believe it was done at the instance of the Senator from Connecticut—did it temporarily for the express purpose of bringing the business up to date. That was the object of it. It was not to make the large number permanent. It was put on there expecting the business to be brought up within the time of that appropriation.

the business to be brought up within the time of that appropriation.

Mr. Mr. COCKRELL. Two years were provided for it.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was the object of it. They worked faithfully; they worked hard. More men being added, as a matter of course they disposed of the business more rapidly.

As to whether the number ought to be reduced to three or not, I say frankly I am in very grave doubts. My judgment, after all the facts I can ascertain, is that three active, competent lawyers can keep the business up. If you put three men on, or if you retain three men who are slow and not diligent and not faithful, the chances are that there will be another accumulation of pension appeal cases. will be another accumulation of pension appeal cases.

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator let me suggest to him that the number of appeals was nineteen hundred and forty last year, and there will be as many next year undoubtedly, and probably more. Each officer would have to decide twelve more a month, or one hundred and forty-four in a year more than the present board have been able to deal with, and I doubt whether they could do it.

Mr. COCKRELL. I did not know this point was coming up and I have not the last Pension Office report before me. I do not know the number of appeals taken in 1888. Those are up to the 1st of January, 1888. How many were taken during the year just passed I do not know, but my impression is that after these decisions had been printed, and I think that was one of the immediate benefits of it, and when they were accessible, the number of appeals diminished, because pension claimants and pension agents and attorneys could see that a par-ticular case had already been decided. Before that time they could not not tell whether it had ever been decided, and each claimant would take his case up by appeal.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say to the Senator that 90 per cent. of them, and probably 95 per cent. go up, not on questions of law, but on questions of fact.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know that.

Mr. TELLER. Each case stands by itself.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know, but frequently questions of law are involved as well as questions of fact.

Mr. TELLER. Of course, if a question of law is presented that has been already adjudicated they would dispose of the case promptly. I do not believe myself that three men can do that work and do it prop-

Mr. COCKRELL. It can only be done in the way I have stated. I assure the Senator of that fact. The number may either remain as fixed by the other House, at three, or you may put it at six; it depends on the fact whether they are active, quick working men, as to whether they will not fall behind.

Mr. SPOONER. I move to amend by striking out the word "three," where it occurs in the twenty-fifth line on page 80, and inserting in lieu thereof "six;" so as to read:

Six members of a board of pension appeals.

Mr. ALLISON. I will not object to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin for the reason that the Senator from Colorado, who has had experience with this pension business, and the Senator from Missouri say that probably three members of the board can not do the work. important that the work should be kept up currently, and therefore I shall not interpose, if I can interpose, a point of order on the amendment, but I should like to look into it further. If five are sufficient, as suggested by the Senator from Colorado, I should be glad to have it modified so as to make the number five.

Mr. COCKRELL. I will say to the Senator from Iowa that I looked into this matter, and I am perfectly satisfied that if the same number of appeals are taken up it will require three active, faithful, diligent men to keep up, and they will have to work hard. I myself think that probably there would be no objection to having six and two boards. Five could not make two boards.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. If this amendment has been disposed of

I should like to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair). The amendment is not disposed of.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to inquire of the Senator from Iowa or the Senator from Missouri, or any one who knows, whether there is any recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior in respect to the number of members of this appeal board.

Mr. COCKRELL. He recommends three.

Mr. ALLISON. I have already stated to the Senate that the Secretary of the Interior recommends but three.

Mr. HARRIS. I did not chance to hear the statement of the Senator. I desired to know what his recommendation was. I shall follow tor. I desired to know what his recommendation was. I shall follow it so far as I am concerned.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa if he knows, if not I ask the Senator from Colorado, whether these three clerks who are called appeal clerks act as a board, or do they act separately in the transaction of this business?

Mr. ALLISON. They act as a board.

Mr. GRAY. How will the six act?

Mr. ALLISON. The six make two boards.

Mr. MTCHELLL. Two boards of three each.

Mr. MITCHELLE. That is the way they are doing; they are dividing.
Mr. MITCHELLE. I hope the amendment moved by the Senator from Wisconsin will carry; I want to get the matter into conference, and the conference can fix whatever number is proper, five, four, or

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Spooner]. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 25, on page 80, I move to amend by making the clause read:

Six members, who shall constitute two boards of pension appeals.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Iowa will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 25, on page 80, it is proposed to strike out the words "of a board" and insert the words "to constitute two boards;" so as to read:

Six members to constitute two boards of pension appeals.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent that the clerks may correct the totals corresponding with this increase in lines 9 and 10, on page 82. "In all, $176,990" should be increased by $6,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The correction will be made. It is suggested that there are one or two other places where similar corrections in totals will have to be made.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the clerks, by unanimous consent, will do

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to call attention to the amendment inserted in line 11, on page 4, where the total should also be corrected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that that will be done under the present order.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. On page 105, in line 9, in the appropriations for the Department of Justice, I move to strike out "two" and insert "five" before the word "hundred;" so as to read:

Chief clerk and ex officio superintendent of the building $2,500.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order on that amendment. It is not an amendment from a committee.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. It is estimated for, and the Senate has passed a bill providing for this increase, both of which points bring the amendment within the rule.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the point of order insisted upon by the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ALLISON. I insist upon it if I have any right to do so. It is not reported from any committee that I know of.

Mr. HARRIS. Still, being estimated for in the regular estimates offered more than one day before, presented in the Senate, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and now offered, I think it falls clearly within the rule. The amendment is, I think, in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I was not aware of that having been done.

Mr. HARRIS. Oh, yes; it is a printed amendment; it was offered

Mr. PADDO
two or three days ago.
Mr. ALLISON. Very well; let us take a vote on it.
Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I hope there will be no objection to the adoption of the amendment. The Attorney-General has in two or amendment?

three annual reports recommended this increase in the salary of the

Mr. ALLISQN. I understand that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the point of order to be withdrawn. The question is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Jones].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GORMAN. I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate to offer an amendment to which I am sure there will not be any objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, line 2, in the appropriations for the office of Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

And $500 additional while the office of assistant doorkeeper is held by the present incumbent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. GORMAN. It is not necessary to say more than that at this time, while we are talking of reform in the civil service, we have a case here in the Senate, the most remarkable probably in any department of the Government, of a gentleman who was appointed in 1831, fifty-eight years ago, appointed before many of us were born, who has been here to welcome every Senator from that day until now to his seat and to assist in no ordinary way in contributing to the comfort of all of us, who has grown old in the service, and who is as modest as he is faithful. While a point of order weeks he was a service of the comfort of the comfo ful. While a point of order probably would reach the amendment, I trust it will not be made.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the amendment may be read again.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the amendment may be read again. The Chief Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I suggest to the Senator from Maryland to put in the name, so as to read, "is held by Isaac Bassett, the present incumbent." The honor which the Senator proposes is one which the whole Senate would desire to join in paying to this very excellent, faithful, and honored public servant; and it is an embalming of his name in the public statutes of the country which I think he deserves.

Mr. GORMAN. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for the suggestion.

suggestion.

Mr. HARRIS. The suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts is eminently proper, and I hope the name will be inserted before the words "the present incumbent."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Maryland to accept the suggestion of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. GORMAN. I do so with great pleasure. I am glad the Senator made the suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be read as modified. The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, after the word "dollars," in line

2, it is proposed to insert: And $500 additional while the office of assistant doorkeeper is held by Isaac Bassett, the present incumbent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as modified. The amendment as modified was agreed to unanimously.

Mr. SAWYER. In the items for the office of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, on page 98, line 19, after the word "dollars," I move to insert:

Chief of division of correspondence, $2,000.

And in line 22, on the same page, to strike out "twenty-two" and insert "twenty-one;" so as to read:

Twenty-one clerks of class 3.

Mr. ALLISON. I regret to be obliged to make the point of order on the amendment of my friend from Wisconsin.

Mr. SAWYER. I hope the Senator will not do that. This is a very

Mr. SAWYER. I hope the Senator will not do that. This is a very faithful officer and a good man.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt he is a good man.

Mr. SAWYER. He is a man for whom this increase was recommended, not at this session but at this Congress, by Postmaster-General Vilas. He has been put at the head of that division and detailed there at $1,600. I propose to make his salary $2,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the point of order to be invisted upon order to be insisted upon.

Mr. ALLISON. I insist on the point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is subject to the point of order raised by the Senator from Iowa. If there be no further amendments to the bill as in Committee of the Whole, it will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations if the amendment proposing to increase the number of clerks for the Civil Service Commission is a committee

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir; it is not.
Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to inquire if the amendment is made to increase this force because the railway postal service has been brought within the jurisdiction of the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. ALLISON. That is one of the reasons given.
Mr. PADDOCK. Is that the essential reason?
Mr. ALLISON. It may not be the essential reason, but it is one of the reasons

Mr. PADDOCK. I ask that that amendment may be reserved for a separate vote in the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Nebraska desires a separate vote upon concurring in the last amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. As the Senate is somewhat thin, I ask that the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole be con-curred in with the exception of this amendment, unless some other Senator desires to reserve an amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. Two amendments were offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposition is to concur in all the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole except the one reserved by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Paddock] for a separate

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment reserved by the Senator from Nebraska is the amendment increasing the number of clerks for the Civil Service Commission to three?

Mr. PADDOCK. Yes; increasing the number of clerks to three.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That amendment is reserved. The question is on concurring in all the other amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in the Senate and still open to amendment.

Mr. STEWART. I do not wish to have the amendment acted upon to night, but I desire to move to insert, in line 11, on page 4, after the word "Commerce," the words:

Clerk to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. HARRIS. An amendment has been already inserted at that point.

Mr. ALLISON. I must make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. STEWART. I say I give notice of the amendment. I will call it up to-morrow.

Mr. ALLISON. I will make the point of order on it.

Mr. STEWART. I have looked over the list of committees on page 4 of the bill, and I am sure that the clerk of my committee has as much work to do as almost any of the clerks of the other committees. I know something about what the clerks do. I am a pretty active man myself, and I am paying out a good deal for clerk-hire in addition to my regular clerk. I have paid more than his salary all the time for additional assistants, and I think I might be allowed this indulgence.

We are down in the crypt, in a room where we work to great disadvantage, and I hire additional clerks. Of those who are present of my committee I may say that a majority of them are willing to authorize me to report the amendment from that committee. I will submit the amendment and refer it to the Committee on Appropriations, and

Mr. SPOONER. It must be referred twenty-four hours in advance.

Mr. STEWART. I give the Committee on Appropriations notice of it, and to-morrow morning if my committee do not agree to its ot that I can report it of course it will not be pressed, but I hope the Committee on Appropriations will not make the point of order that it has not been referred to them regularly for twenty-four hours when I give them this notice.

Mr. ALLISON. The question of twenty-four hours we will take into account.

I shall be glad if we can have an understanding that to-morrow at 2 o'clock, if that be the hour, at least after the morning business is disposed of, we shall have a vote upon the amendment reserved by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK], and the question now raised by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART]. Mr. HALE. Why not call up the bill directly after the routine morning business?

Mr. ALLISON. Because there is some other business to occupy the time in the morning hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the vote be taken upon the bill-

Mr. ALLISON. Without further amendments?
The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without further amendments, except the one of which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] has given

Mr. STEWART. The Senator from Iowa will not make the point that the amendment has not been referred for twenty-four hours?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa reserve the point of order against the amendment of the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. STEWART. I do not wish to waive that right, because that will be less than twenty-four hours.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa reserve the point of order against the amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. I will not raise any point about the number of hours. I will not waive any other question of order.

Mr. HARRIS. I wish to make a suggestion to the Senator from Nevada, and I have been unable to get his attention.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee appeals to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. HARRIS. I was going to say to the Senator from Nevada that if the point of order is made upon his amendment, unless he can report it to-day, it does not matter at what hour to-day, and refer it to the committee, if the point of order is insisted upon to-morrow the chances are ten to one that it will be decided against him.

Mr. STEWART. I understand that the chairman of the committee says that he will not raise the point of order as to time. If it is reported to-morrow morning from the committee, that will be satisfactory as far as I am concerned.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to know whether I have unanimous consent that the bill is to be considered as only open for the amendment reserved by the Senator from Nebraska and the question, whatever it may be, of my friend from Nevada, and that the vote shall be taken at 2 o'clock to-morrow

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the proposition submitted to the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. Put the question and let us decide it.
Mr. STEWART. I want to know—
I will say to the Senator from Nevada that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is not the only man who can make the point of order. Let us dispose of that when the question comes up. There will be no promises made to-day, I assure the Senator, that the point of order will not be made to-morrow, because there are two or three other Senators who have the same kind of amendments precisely, and if the point of order is made against one it will be made against all.
Mr. STEWART.

Then I object to any understanding for to-morrow. Mr. ALLISON. Then I ask for a vote on the amendment reserved by the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, on motion of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY], reserved for a separate vote by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK], will be read.

Mr. PADDOCK. I call for the yeas and nays on concurring in the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 20, under the head of "Civil Service Commission," at the end of line 19, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "two" and inserted "three;" so as to read:

Three clerks of class 2.

Mr. DAWES. I was necessarily absent from the Chamber. I should like to inquire whether that is the only amendment that was adopted under that head?

Mr. PADDOCK. This is the only one reserved.
Mr. DAWES. There was one adopted, and then a motion made to add another clerk. Did that fail?

Mr. ALLISON and Mr. GORMAN. It is the last one that is re-

Mr. DAWES. Then there were two amendments made adding civil-service clerks?

Mr. HARRIS. One has been agreed to already.
Mr. ALLISON. I move to reconsider the vote by which that amendment was agreed to. [A pause.] No, that is not in order; it is open in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, which was reserved for a separate vote by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK].

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Nebraska asked for a separate vote on that amendment. He does not ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PADDOCK. I do ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have the yeas and nays.
Mr. DAWES. Has the Senator reserved for a separate vote the amendments providing for both of those clerks or only one?
Mr. PADDOCK. I reserved the last amendment adding one. Had it occurred to me earlier I should have reserved the other amendment

Mr. ALLISON. I quite agree with the Senator from Nebraska. I hope the amendment will be voted down without a yea-and-nay vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are the yeas and nays insisted upon?
Mr. HARRIS. Does the Senator from Iowa move to reconsider the vote by which the other amendment allowing an additional clerk to the Civil Service Commission was agreed to?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not now move to reconsider it. I am quite in accord with the Senator from Nebraska, however.

Mr. HARRIS. So am I; and I am quite in accord with a motion to reconsider the vote by which the other clerk was allowed to the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. ALLISON. That has been already concurred in.

Mr. HARRIS. I know it has been concurred in in the Senate, and I was simply asking if the Senator moved to reconsider the vote by which it was concurred in.

Mr. PADDOCK. I should like to vote for a motion to reconsider, if it is in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the call for the yeas and nays withdrawn?

Mr. HOAR. I appeal to the Senator from Iowa. I do not like to interfere with his conduct of the bill, but it is hardly fair to vote in the absence of the Senator who moved the amendment, unless the Senator had an understanding with him.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no suggestions to make. If the yeas and nays are called I fear we shall have no quorum.

Mr. HOAR. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. On that motion I call for the yeas and nays. I want to finish this bill to-night. I am under an honorable obligation to other Senators, who have other havings to discovere of this bill. to other Senators, who have other business, to dispose of this bill.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

The PRESIDING GFFICER. Before submitting the motion to adjourn, the Chair lays before the Senate a request from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 7, 1889.

Ordered. That the Clerk be directed to request the Senate to make out a duplicate copy of the Senate concurrent resolution directing the manner of the enrollment of Senate bill 2305, to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the Executive Departments, the original being lost.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request will be granted, if there is no objection. The Chair hears none, and the request is granted.

ADJOURNMENT.

Several SENATORS. Do not let us adjourn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is moved by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Hoar] that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison] calls for the yeas and page on that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the call for the yeas and nays sustained?

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary called the roll.

Mr. SPOONER (after having voted in the negative). I am paired generally with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WALTHALL], and by inadvertence I voted. I ask leave to withdraw my vote.

Mr. HARRIS. This is not a question about which the Senator need observe his pair unless he wants to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin withdraws his vote.

Mr. DAWES (after having voted in the negative). I am paired generally with the Senator from Texas [Mr. Coke], but I assume that he would vote the same way I voted. I think, however, I ought to withdraw my vote, and I withdraw it

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts withdraws his vote.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] is paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Colquitt]

Mr. PADDOCK (after having voted in the negative). I am paired generally with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Eustis], but I did not think it was necessary to withhold my vote on this question.

The result was announced—yeas 3, nays 13; as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The vote shows the absence of a quorum, and the Secretary will call the roll of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I have endeavored to complete the appropriation bill to-night, in view of the condition of public business. It is manifest that it will be impossible at this hour to secure a quorum to pass the bill. Therefore I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m. the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 8, 1889, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 7, 1889.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved. Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Regular order.

ELECTORAL VOTE-FLORIDA

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Secretary of State of an appropriation to pay the expenses of a special messenger sent to Florida for the electoral returns of that State; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DEFICIENCY PRINTING AND BINDING, AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT.

COAST SURVEY STEAMER GEDNEY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a supplementary estimate of appropriation for expenses incurred in transferring the Coast and Geodetic Survey steamer Gedney from New York to San Francisco, and for repairs to said vessel; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

USELESS PAPERS, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENTS.

The SPEAKER. The Senate concurrent resolution for the correction of the enrollment of the bill (S. 2305) to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the Executive Departments, has been mislaid, and if there be no objection an order will be made di-recting the Clerk to request the Senate to furnish a duplicate copy of the resolution.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

THOMAS LANNIGAN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the bill (S. 2714) for the relief of Thomas Lannigan.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, that bill carries only $100, and as a similar bill has been reported from the House committee, and is on the Calendar, I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration. This is a balance standing on the books of the Treasury Department to the credit of Mr. Lannigan.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Regular order.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to proceed with the Army appropriation bill, and must object to anything that will lead to delay.
Mr. ROGERS. Then I ask to have the bill remain on the Speaker's table for the present.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that will be done.

There was no objection.

ADDITIONAL ASSOCIATE JUSTICE SUPREME COURT, IDAHO.

H. H. SIBLEY.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. THOMAS H. B. BROWNE] asks unanimous consent that the Senate report No. 1146, relating to the claim of H. H. Sibley, be printed in the RECORD, stating that the bill will come up for consideration to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The report is as follows:

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was committed the bill (S. 518) for the relief of the legal representatives of Henry H. Sibley, deceased, have considered the same, and respectfully report:

Henry H. Sibley was, before the rebellion, a major in the United States Army, He was born in the State of Louisiana, and graduated at West Point July 1, 1833. He served with distinction from that time to the breaking out of the rebellion. He was in several Indian wars; in many battles, including several important battles in the Mexican war, and was brevetted a major March 25, 1847, for gallant and meritorious conduct in the affair at Medilin, near Vera Cruz. He resigned his commission in the Army of the United States, being then major in the First Dragoons, May 13, 1861. He accepted a command in the rebel service, and continued in that service during the war of the rebellion. His political disabilities were removed by an act of Congress; he was pardoned August 16, 1867, by President Johnson, upon certain conditions, all of which he compiled with.

His widow, Mrs. Charlotte K. Sibley, was born at Sackett's Harbor, N. Y. Her maiden name was Charlotte Kendall. She was the daughter of William Kendall and Charlotte Howard, both of the city of Boston. Her grandfather was Joseph Howard, one of the selectmen of Boston. All her relatives, so far as known, were loyal to the United States, were born in States which remained true to the Union, and sympathized with the Union cause. Mrs. Sibley herself strongly sympathized with the cause of the Union, endeavored to prevail upon her husband to come North during the war, and was much distressed at his resignation from the Union Army and abandonment of the Union cause. She was in the city of Brooklyn, N. Y., when the war broke out, and remained there or or five months after the battle of Manassas. She then, in obedience to the command of her husband, joined him in Louisiana, and remained there until some three or four weeks before the surrender of General Lee. She returned to the city of Brooklyn and remained there until after the war. Her only children were a daughter, who was fifteen years of age when the war began, and a son, who was less than fifteen years of age when the war began, and a son, who was less than fifteen years of age when the war began, and as on, who was less than fifteen years of age when the war began, and as on, who was less than fifteen years of age when the war then were issued to him on the 14th of April, 1856. It was known as the Sibley tent. On the 18th of February, 1858, the War Department made a contract with him by which the Government should make. This was to continue fill January 1, 1859, and thereafter until notice was given of its termination of the 18th of April he assigned to W. W. Burns a one-half interest in his invention and in "all benefits, profits, and royalties" which should arise from it after February 22, 1858.

The Government proceeded to use the Sibley tents, and used them before and during the war. The total amount of such tents so manufactured and used from March 1, 1859, an attorney and relieved from the obligation to take a test oath on such admission.

Sibley, therefore, might, according to this decision, have brought suit in the Court of Claims at any time after his pardon of the 16th of August, 1867. But the act of Congress requiring an oath that he had at all times borne true allegiance to the Government and had not in any way aided or abetted the rebellion stood apparently in his way. It was not till the promulgation of the decision in Armstrong's case at the December term, 1871, that the public generally, or even the profession, understood the law to be as so declared by the court.

We suppose that in an ordinary case Congress would remove without question the bar of the statute of limitations in the case of a person who had failed to bring a suit under such circumstances, but the committee seriously question whether they ought to waive the bar of the statute of limitations to enable a person to bring an action against the United States under a contract for a military invention the use of which invention by the Government was largely increased and, indeed, almost wholly occasioned by a rebellion in which the claimant himself took part. If Mr. Sibley were himself the person seeking relief this objection would, in the opinion of a portion of the committee, be fatal to his claim.

But we think, on an appeal to the sense of equity and to the indulgence of objection would, in the opinion of a portion of the committee, be fatal to his claim.

But we think, on an appeal to the sense of equity and to the indulgence of Congress, the case of Mrs. Sibley and her children stands differently. She was unquestionably loyal to the Government, as were all her kindred. She endeavored to induce her husband to remain loyal. As he is dead, one-third of his property would become hers, either by his will or by the policy of most of the States in spite of his will, if he undertook to convert it from her. If he had a clear and unquestionable claim against the Government, nothing in his own misconduct or in any other fact which has occurred has ever impaired or extinguished it. It is a mere question of consenting to waive the statute of limitations.

If it were a question of actual forfeiture, the Constitution of the United States prohibits Congress from creating any attainder or forfeiture which shall extend beyond the life of the offender. The purpose of that constitutional provision is to prevent the penalty of treason from attaching to the innocent wife or children of an offender by depriving them of means of support, although the property which would otherwise be forfeited comes to them from an offending husband or father. We do not suppose that this constitutional provision extended to property like the present, but we think the purpose indicated by the Constitution is one which may properly be recalled to the attention of Congress in the present case, and that we are complying with its spirit when we waive the bar of the statute of himitations—which has only affected the remedy and not the right—so far as to enable Mrs. Sibley, for herself and her children, to test the question of the validity of the claim. Her husband died in great poverty. She is a lady of great personal worth, as the committee are assured by many persons of the highest character who have known her well.

We therefore recommend that she be permitted to bring suit in the Court of Claims notwithstanding the st Alidavit of Charlotte K. Sibley.

I. Charlotte K. Sibley, of the city of Fredericksburgh, State of Virginia, do make oath that my maiden name was Charlotte Kendall; that I was born in Sackett's Harbor, State of New York, the daughter of William Kendall and Charlotte Howard, both of the city of Boston, and that my grandfathar was Joseph Howard, one of the selectmen of the city of Boston. That my father, William Kendall, was in the employment of the Government of the United States and remained so up to the time of his death, and that his children have always and (with the exception of myself) now reside in the North. That I am now sixty-seven years of age. That I married the late Henry H. Sibley, formerly of the United States Army.

That at the time of the breaking out of the war of the rebellion I was with my children in the city of Brooklyn and my husband was in New Mexico. That I was much opposed to his resigning his commission in the United States Army, as were all of my people, for I had been brought up in army circles and all of my sympathies were with the Union. That I sympathized with and was loyal to the Union all during the war of the rebellion. That I was much grieved when I heard of my husband's resignation, and remained in the city of Brooklyn until four or five months after the battle of Manassas, and then, in obedience to the commands of my husband and against my own inclination, I went to Louisiana, where I remained with my husband until some three or four weeks before the surrender of General Lee, when I returned to the city of Brooklyn. That my daughter, Mrs. Helen S. Stokes, was only fifteen years of age at the beginning of the war and eighteen or nineteen when it ended. That my son, Sidney J. Sibley, these being my only two children, was at the ending of the war a mere boy, not yet fifteen years of age, and that neither of said two children were guilty of nor espable of being guilty of disloyalty to the Government of the United States. That I and my children are the legal heirs of my husband, Henry H. Sibley.

Affidavit of Abner Bartlett.

I, Abner Bartlett, of the city of New York and State of New York, do make oath that during the year 1801 I knew Mrs. Charlotte K. Sibley; that she was then in New York City, and that my memory is quite clear that, in frequent interviews with me on her part at that time and when General Sibley, her husband, transferred himself to New Orleans, into the Confederate service, Mrs. Sibley did what she could to prevail upon him to come to the North, and if he could not join the Union cause to at least resign and stand neutral. I had opportunities of knowing and do know that Mrs. Sibley in her sentiments was loyal to the Union cause.

I, William H. Selden, of the city of Washington, do make oath that I was born in the State of Virginia, am forty-six years old, and am the proprietor of the Metropolitan Hotel, in the city of Washington, D. C. That I was during the civil war on the staff of General E. Kirby Smith, of the Confederate army, in the trans-Mississippi Department, from 1884 to 1885. That I was personally acquainted with Mrs. C. K. Sibley, wife of the late H. H. Sibley, and was where I formed an impression of her general reputation as to loyalty. That she had the general reputation among those who knew her of being loyal to the Union cause, and that it was a matter of common rumor that she sympathized with the Union cause. I have read the affidavit of Mrs. C. K. Sibley and believe it to be a true statement of her sympathics and feelings.

WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 13, 1883.

Sir: I have the honor to return herewith the communication from the Hon.
J. C. SPOONER, chairman of the Senate Claims Committee, dated the 5th instant, calling for certain information regarding the use of the patented Sibley tent by the Army of the United States.

In reply to the several interrogatories, I beg to state—
1. That the total number of Sibley tents manufactured by the Quartermaster's Department from March 1, 1858, to August 31, 1861, inclusive, was 3,583, upon 3,377 of which royalty has been paid to both owners of the patent (Burns and Sibley) at the rate of $5 for each tent. Royalty upon 206 tents, at $2.50 each, has been made to Mr. Burns only.
2. No Sibley tents were used by the United States since the termination of the rebellion and prior to the expiration of the patent, in 1873. Since 1873 the total number purchased and manufactured was 935.
3. The number of Sibley tents used by the United States during the rebellion was 43,958.

4. As stated in answer 1, the total number of Sibley tents manufactured prior to the war of the rebellion was 3,583, as follows:

the war of the rebellion was 3,583, as follows:
58	1,	44	5
559	1,	18	И
360	Ш	74	И
61	HS.	20	Х

Total .. or an average of about 896 tents per year. It is fair to presume that if the rebellion had not existed the annual use of this tent (considering the gradual increase in the number of officers and enlisted men of the Army) would not have exceeded 1,000 per annum.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. B. HOLABIRD,

Quartermaster-General United States Army.

The SECRETARY OF WAR.

Nore.—The number of tents manufactured from September 1 to 3, both dates inclusive, can not be given owing to the fact that returns of articles manufactured were rendered only at the end of each month.

The total number of tents manufactured during the month of September, 1861, can not be ascertained. The number manufactured at the Schuylkill arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa., during the month of September, 1861, was 24.

AMENDMENT OF THE PUBLIC LAND LAWS.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to submit a privileged report. Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am directed by the Committee on the Public Lands to report back the bill (S. 2511) to provide for the disposal of certain public lands in the United States under the provisions of the homestead laws only. It is a measure of great public importance, and I hope it will be acted upon without delay.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let me ask the gentleman if this will lead to any debate?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think not.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I give notice that I will demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. This is a privileged report.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Before proceeding with that bill, or before raising the question of consideration, I desire to obtain an assurance from the gentleman from Indiana that if debate springs up he will withdraw it for the time being in order to permit us to proceed with the Army bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. If debate springs up Mr. DINGLEY. I rise to a parliame

I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. But the gentleman from Indiana has the floor. Then I desire to submit a point of order. The SPEAKER.

Mr. DINGLEY.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

That according to the ruling of the Chair upon Mr. DINGLEY.

The SPEAKER. But this bill has lost its privilege—

The SPEAKER. But this bill is privileged under another rule of the House. It is a report from the Committee on the Public Lands as to the reservation of certain public lands under the homestead Section.

Mr. DINGLEY. Has it been referred by the House to the commit-

The SPEAKER. It has been.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will state to the gentleman from Illinois that if it appears there is to be a debate upon the bill I will then ask leave to withdraw it until the Army appropriation bill is passed.

Mr. RANDALL. That is subject to the pension bill now pending. The SPEAKER. The bill will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act the public lands of the United States now subject to private entry, except those in the State of Missouri, shall be disposed of under and according to the provisions of the homestead laws only. But this act shall not be so construed as to deny to any State the right to select lands in place of indemnity lands, in accordance with existing laws making land grants to States: Provided, That this act shall not interfere with the existing authority to enter lands for town sites, nor with the authority of the Commissioner of the General Land Office to sell isolated and disconnected tracts of land of less than 160 acres in extent, nor to prevent the perfection of titles to claims already initiated.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the amendments

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask for the reading of the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in the fourth and fifth lines, the words "except those in the State of Missouri" and insert "adapted to or chiefly valuable for agriculture."

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent to modify this amendment by inserting, after the word "entry," the word "or;" so that it will read:

Now subject to private entry, or adapted to or chiefly valuable for agriculture.

The amendment was adopted.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Insert, after the word "only," in line 7, "but section 2301 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby repealed."

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the commutation clause.

Mr. BURROWS. I would like to inquire what that is. I notice that the amendment simply provides for the repeal of a certain section of the Revised Statutes, and I would like to know what that is.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is the commutation clause of the homestead law, which we have been trying to repeal for years.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the next amendment, as follows:

It is proposed, after the word "States," in line 12, to insert "for educational urposes and for the reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands."

Mr. HOLMAN. That applies to allowing the State to make the se-

The amendment was again reported.

The next amendment was read, as follows:

Sec. 2. That any person who has not heretofore perfected title to a tract of land of which he has made entry under the homestead law, may make a homestead entry of not exceeding one quarter-section of public land subject to such entry, such previous filing or entry to the contrary notwithstanding; but this right shall not apply to persons who perfect title to lands under the pre-emption or homestead laws already initiated.

Sec. 3. That whenever it shall be made to appear to the register and receiver of any public land office, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, that any settler upon the public domain under existing law is unable, by reason of a total or partial destruction of crops, sickness, or other unavoidable casualty, to secure a support for himself, herself, or those dependent upon him or her upon the lands settled upon, then, such register and receiver may grant to such settler a leave of absence from the claim upon which he or she has filed, for a period not exceeding one year at any one time, and such settler so granted leave of absence shall forfeit no rights by reason of such absence: Provided, That the time of such actual absence shall not be deducted from the actual residence required by law.

Sec. 4. That the price of all sections and parts of sections of the public lands within the limits of the portions of the several grants of land to aid in the construction of railroads which have been heretofore and which may hereafter be forfeited, which were by the act making such grants or have since been increased to the double minimum price and, also, of all lands within the limits of any such railroad grant, but not embraced in such grant; lying adjacent to and coterminous with the portions of the line of any such railroad which shall not be completed at the date of this act, is hereby fixed at $1.25 per acre.

Sec. 5. That any homestead settler who has heretofore entered less than one quarter on entry hereunder does not own and occupy the lands covered by the centry.

SEC 6. That every person entitled, under the provisions of the homestead laws, to enter a homestead, who has heretofore complied with or who shall hereafter comply with the conditions of said laws, and who shall have made his final proof thereunder for a quantity of land less than 160 acres and received the receiver's final receipt therefor, shall be entitled under said laws to enter, by legal subdivisions of the public lands of the United States subject to homestead entry, so much additional land as added to the quantity previously so entered by him shall not exceed 160 acres: Provided, That in no case shall patent issue for the land covered by such additional entry until the person making such additional entry shall have actually and in conformity with the homestead laws resided upon and cultivated the land so entered and otherwise fully complied with such laws.

Mr. McRAE. I am strongly in favor of this bill as amended by the House committee, and hope it will neither be withdrawn nor further delayed. It is a just measure and is demanded by the country.

In explanation of the fourth amendment I ask leave to have read the report submitted by me December 19, 1888, on the bill H. R. 11620. This is substantially the same as the one passed during the last session and referred to in the report on the pending bill. The amendment is an exact copy of it, and was moved by me in the committee.

I ask leave to print the report as a part of my remarks. It will show the reason and necessity for such legislation. If there is no objection to the amendment I will not delay to have it read, but will insert the report in the RECORD.

The report is as follows:

The committee on the Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11620) to allow persons who have abandoned or neglected their homestead entries to make another entry, and for other purposes, have had the same under consideration, and now report the same back favorably with the amendments. The purpose and intention of the first section of this bill is to afford an opportunity to all who have falled to acquire a title to public lands if qualified to make a homestead entry. The committee believe that it was the intention of Congress by the original homestead law to allow this, but Department construction has deprived many settlers of it. This intention is evident from what was said and done at the time of the passage of that bill. On May 2, 1862, we find the following entries:

"The next amendment of the committee was, in line 7, section 5, after the word 'or,' to strike out the words 'abandoned the said entry' and to insert 'shall have ceased to occupy said land;' so that it will read: 'That if at any time after the filing of the affidavit as required in the second section of this act, and before the expiration of five years aforesaid, it shall be proven, after due notice to the settler, to the satisfaction of the register of the land office that the person having filed such affidavit shall have actually changed his or her residence, or shall have ceased to occupy said land for more than six months at any time, then and in that event the land so entered shall revert to the Government.'"

This was agreed to.

This was agreed to.

We also find the following:

"The next amendment of the committee was, in line 2 of section 6, to strike out the words 'make more than one lentry' and insert 'acquire title to more than one quarter-section;' so that it will read: 'That no individual shall be permitted to acquire title to more than one quarter-section under the previous of this act,' etc."

It is perfectly clear from this that it was not contemplated that the making of

It is perfectly clear from this that it was not contemplated that the making of the entry when no title was acquired should debar the settler from again filing upon public land.

In many cases when persons seeking homes have by misfortune failed to comply with the law Congress has relieved them.

The committee will cite the act of June 8, 1872 (Stat. at Large 16, page 337):

"Whereas fires in extent unparalleled in the history of the country burned through the newly-settled parts of the States of Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Michigan during the autumn of the year of 1871, whereby many homestead settlers lost their dwellings and all of their personal property, and many were burned to death, and many others were so much burned as to disable them from labor for the present winter, and are unable to rebuild and occupy their lands within a period of six months after said fires have driven them from their homestead: Therefore,

"Be it enacted, etc., That all such persons occupying homestead claims under the laws of the United States, on lands of the United States, who were burned out, and the heirs of such persons who were burned to death in the year 1871, in the States of Minnesota, Wisconsin, and Michigan shall have until the 1st day of January, 1873, to rebuild and reoccupy said homestead lands; and that when said homestead claimants shall prove upon their claims, such period of time until the 1st day of January, 1873, shall be included in the five years' time which they are required by law to reside on said lands, in the same manner as if such homestead claimant had actually resided thereon during said period of time."

And also the act of June 18, 1874/Stat at Large 18, page 81):

"Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be lawful for homestead and pre-emption settlers on the public lands in the counties of Costonwood, Noble, Martin, Jackson, Woutonwan, Murray, Rock, Lyon, Redwood, Brown, Chippewa, and Renville, in the State of Minnesota, and the counties of Iowa which compose the Sioux City land district, and counties contiguous to either of the above exempted sections, where the crops of such settlers were destroyed or seriously injured by grasshoppers in the year 1873, and where such grasshoppers shall reappear in 1874 to the like destruction of the crops of such settlers, to leave and be absent from said lands until May 1, 1875, under such regulations as to proof of the same as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may prescribe.

"Sec. 2. That during such absence no adverse rights shall attach to said lands, such settlers being allowed to resume and perfect their settlements as though no such absence had been enjoyed or allowed.

"Sec. 2. That during such absence no adverse rights shall attach to said lands, such settlers being allowed to resume and perfect their settlements as though no such absence had been enjoyed or allowed.

"Sec. 3. That the same exemption from continued residence shall be extended to those making settlements in 1874 and suffering the same destruction of crops as those making settlement of 1873 or any previous year."

Another act for the relief of settl to those making settlements in 1874 and suffering the same destruction of crops as those making settlement of 1873 or any previous year."

Another act for the relief of settlers in Kansas and Nebraska was passed June 4, 1880.

The best lands of the country have been acquired by the railroads while the settlers are being pushed to the outskirts of civilization. The committee believe that from the stand-point of public policy every citizen of the United States who has not acquired title to a quarter-section of public land and has no home, should have the right to enter under the homestead law a second homestead.

The second section only allows the Secretary of the Interior to do substantially what is now done without authority to relieve against hardships by granting leave of absence not exceeding a year. The third section is intended to reduce the price of public land within the limits of railroad grants where the road has not been constructed at the time of the passage of this act, as well as in the limits of forfeited grants. As far as the lands put in market prior to January 18, 1861, are concerned this is unaccessary, because reduction in such cases was made by the act of June 18, 1880 (21 Stat. L., 237).

There is no good reason why this distinction should be made.

The fourth section is intended to allow any settler who has entered less than one quarter-section upon which he or ahe still resides to take other contiguous lands to make out a quarter-section in quantity.

The fifth section allows all who have taken less than one quarter-section and acquired title thereto, and who can not find contiguous lands to make another entry, upon the condition that he or she shall reside upon and cultivate the land so entered as if it were an original entry.

The bill is so guarded as not to allow anything like scrip nor any right that may be assigned or sold. In support of the two last sections the committee will refer to the report on House bill 9111, in the Forty-ninth Congress, first session, which bill involved th

Average area of each homestead, 67.69, or about 67.70 acres. This average is for the total number of homesteads made in the five States for the two years. No entries were made in Louisiana in 1868, because there were no receivers at land office during that time.

The committee have thought best to make the bill of general application, and as far as possible to even up the quantity of land to the settlers.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to demand the previous question on the bill and amendments; but will yield for a question by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

Mr. WEAVER. I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana if he will not consent to have this bill printed in the RECORD and let it lie over until to-morrow morning, so that we can examine it and see what it is. It is a very important bill, and affects all the arable land belonging to the Government. I can not see that it would lose any of its privileges by going over for another day, and certainly it would be in the interest of good legislation. It is too important to have it go through the House without understanding all its provisions and its purposes, and therefore I ask that it shall go over.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish for a moment to say to the gentleman from Iowa that he misapprehends the facts. The bill and amendments have long been printed.

Mr. WEAVER. I do not misunderstand it. It has not been before the House, and I do not think that we should pass the bill without full consideration.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me state what it is. We passed at the last session of Congress an act withdrawing all public lands from entry in the public-land States of the South except under the homestead law. act was to continue in force until the general land bill, which passed the House and is now pending in the Senate, should pass, or the present Congress should terminate.

It is not probable that that general land bill will pass the Senate this Congress, and the act applicable to the five land States of the South will expire on the 4th day of March and the public lands of those States be thrown open to speculation. The object of this bill as it came from the Senate makes the principle of that act as amended apply to the whole public domain as to all lands that are subject to private entry or adapted to agriculture or chiefly valuable for agriculture. That is the main feature. The next feature is this: During the latter part of the last session of Congress we passed a bill conferring certain rights on settlers under the homestead law who had not been able to remain on their lands on account of drought or locusts, or other causes which compelled them to leave them for a brief period; also as to those who had only obtained in part the benefit of the homestead law. That was in substance the bill of last session.

That bill passed both Houses and went to the President, but did not reach him in time for approval; so that the House will perceive the state of these measures: One had already passed Congress and become a law applicable to the public-land States of the South, and the other applicable to the whole country, which failed to become a law; the first, now expiring by limitation, is now sought to be extended to all public lands with some additional provisions and with the sections added which were in the bill that failed.

The pending bill is also amended so as to repeal section 2301 of the Revised Statutes, known as the "commutation clause."

Mr. WEAVER. I do not know that I have any desire to oppose this bill, but this House passed a bill in the last session of Congress, or if not then it was certainly in the Forty-ninth Congress, repealing the desert-land and timber-culture acts; but does this?

Mr. McRAE. It does in effect. Mr. WEAVER. Oh, no; it does

Oh, no; it does not. Oh, it does.

Mr. HOLMAN.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, it does.
Mr. WEAVER. It only applies to land which is chiefly adapted to agriculture, and not as to the other.
Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no.

Oh, no. We do not know what it applies to by that language. Mr. WEAVER. If the gentleman thinks there is any ambiguity in Mr. HOLMAN. the language of the bill, that ambiguity will be removed by the time we get through a conference committee. It will be relieved of any ambiguity then; but it is not ambiguous when applied to the land system. A committee which worked so hard last session to get the general land bill through Congress is not apt to let an opportunity escape to secure all lands to actual settlers under the homestead law.

As to the disposal of the public lands that are adapted to agriculture, or that are mainly valuable for agriculture, or that are subject to private entry—each of the three classes the bill provides shall be disposed of under the homestead law only.

Mr. WEAVER. In reply to the gentleman from Indiana I will say that I have consulted with other gentlemen who also feel a deep interest in this question and it is their opinion that this bill does not repeal the desert-land act or the timber-culture act.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Senate have sent us this bill and we have amended it in such parts as will admit of any additional amendments that may be found necessary or that can be secured. We have put in these amendments with the view that if the language is not sufficiently specific to repeal the timber-culture act and the pre-emption law it can be made so.

Mr. WEAVER. If the gentleman will say that he will do all he can in conference to take away any ambiguity that may be found in the bill; if he will say that right here before the House, I will withdraw all objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I now call the previous question on

Mr. HOOKER. I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana in charge of this bill how far it affects the joint resolution which was passed at the last session of this Congress withdrawing certain lands in some of the Southern States. Does it restore the timber lands to entry?

Mr. HOLMAN. It extends those provisions referred to which are row applicable only to the Southern public-land States and makes them the permanent law, applicable to all the public-land States and Territories. It provides that lands adapted to cultivation or chiefly valuable for agriculture or subject to private entry shall be disposed of under the homestead law only, and it is satisfactory, I think, to the gentleman's colleagues in the Senate. Now, Mr. Speaker, I call for the previous question. previous question.

The previous question was ordered. The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, is it in order to offer an amendment to this bill?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The previous question has just been ordered by the House.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was assed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the House request a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will appoint the conferees on the part of the House later.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to dispense with the morning hour.
Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the House to resume the consideration of Senate bill 2547, to increase the pension of Mrs. General Emory, which was under consideration when the House took a recess yesterday, and which is a privileged matter.
The SPEAKER. The Chair will first put the question on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Townshend], after which it will be in order for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] to call up his bill.

to call up his bill.

The motion of Mr. TOWNSHEND was agreed to.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Mr. RICHARDSON.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have a privileged report from the Commit-

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have a privileged report from the Committee on Printing which I desire to present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] calls up the bill which was under consideration when the Honse took a recess yesterday afternoon.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Is that a matter of higher privilege?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that when this matter is actually before the House no other matter can come in and displace it. Clerk will report the title of the bill called up by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2547) to increase the pension of Mrs. Matilda Wilkins Emory.

Mr. CHEADLE. I move to strike out the word "fifty."
Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I raise the question of considera tion against that bill for the purpose of making a privileged motion. My purpose is to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, is it not too late to raise the question of consideration? The Chair had directed the bill to be read and the reading had commenced.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk had read the title of the bill, but the question of consideration can be raised after the entire bill has been read; in fact, that is the proper time to raise it. The question is, Will the House proceed to consider the bill?

The question was taken, and the Speaker declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I demand a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 73, noes 50.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I introduced this bill into the House; I am much in favor of it; and if there had been no obstruction—I say it with entire respect—this bill would have been passed before now. I did not, however, vote on yesterday, nor do I intend to vote to-day to delay an appropriation bill, and now I want to make a sugges-tion to the gentleman who has called up this bill, and also to those who seem to oppose it. I suggest to my colleague [Mr. O'NEILL] that he allow the House to proceed now with the Army bill, and in the mean time secure, if he can, an agreement that his bill shall not be obstructed after the general appropriation bills are disposed of obstructed after the general appropriation bills are disposed of.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I shall be perfectly content if this bill gets in such a position that it shall be positively called up and considered. If after the Army bill has been passed this bill can come up with an understanding that no question of a quorum shall be raised, I am perfectly willing to accept the suggestion of my colleague [Mr. Ran-DALL].

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL]

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentieman from I canaly the can call this bill up at any time.

A Member. But now is the time.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Yes, this is the time.

Mr. CHEADLE. I desire to say that it will be necessary to have a quorum here in order to pass this bill.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. There is just the trouble. Therefore I must insist on having this bill considered now. [Cries of "Regular order!"] I call for the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the yeas and nays upon the question of consideration.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 41 voting in favor thereof.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays have been ordered. I make this motion with the view of submitting a suggestion. I am assured by a gentleman on my right that this is the only one of these pension bills which is likely to be brought up this morning, and therefore we shall save time by allowing the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] to go forward with its consideration now with its consideration now.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I do not wish to occupy any time by debate in favor of the bill; the opposition can occupy their fifteen minutes in debate.

Mr. STRUBLE. I wish to say that I have another bill of this character which I desire to call up. I do not say that I shall ask its consideration this morning, but I want it understood that I desire that bill to have a hearing at a very early day. [Cries of "Regular order!"] The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded. The Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If no other pension bill is to follow this bill is morning— [Cries of "Regular order!"]
The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll. this morning-

Mr. BLOUNT. I have made a motion to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to make that motion merely for the purpose of submitting a suggestion to the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. When the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] announced that he proposed to follow this bill with another bill there was a good deal of confusion. I would like to know whether the gentleman proposes to insist on taking up his bill to-day.

A MEMBER. He said that he would ask its consideration "at an early day."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, The gent
STRUBLE] will not call up his bill to-day.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If it can be understood—gentlemen. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on ordering the yeas and ays. Is the demand for the yeas and nays withdrawn?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If it is understood that no other pension bill is to be brought up to-day to interfere with the Army appropriation bill, I have no objection to the final disposition of this bill now.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I so understand.
Mr. STRUBLE. I thought I made it plain that while I do not feel disposed to urge this morning the bill to which I have referred, yet I desire to have it considered at a very early day.

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to say that I understand from gentlemen on the other side that various other pension bills will be called up after this bill is disposed of.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. The gentleman is certainly under a misapprehension.

Several MEMBERS. We will vote down the question of consideration.

The bill called up by me should Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. not take a half hour to dispose of.

Mr. PERKINS. We only want the consideration of this one bill this morning.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Very well; I will rely on the good faith of that side of the House

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Townshend] withdraw the question of consideration?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I withdraw the question of consideration against this bill.

The SPEAKER. The question, then, is on ordering the bill to be read a third time.

Mr. CHEADLE. I move to amend the bill by striking out "fifty," in line 8, and inserting "thirty," preceding the word "dollars."

Mr. RANDALL. The previous question is operating.

The SPEAKER. But under the order of the House this bill is subject to amendment. There was an order made at a Friday evening session, by unanimous consent, directing that the previous question session, by unanimous consent, directing that the previous question be considered as ordered, subject to the right to amend the bill and to have debate for thirty minutes.

Mr. TAULBEE. I wish to ask the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE] a question. Is it not the fact that the beneficiary of this bill is already receiving a pension at the rate of $30 a month?

Mr. CHEADLE. I reply to the gentleman from Kentucky that I do not know, but I presume that is so. I make this amendment-[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. RANDALL. One word. The gentleman proposes by his amendment in effect to kill the bill, because the lady, I believe, is now re-

Several MEMBERS. That is true.

Mr. RANDALL. I believe she is the only widow of a general officer on either the Army or the Navy roll that is not now receiving a pension of $50 a month.

Mr. CHEADLE. I offer this amendment in good faith, and for this distinct purpose: My amendment proposes to give this widow the largest amount of pension granted to any widow by the general laws of this country. I want to emphasize the fact that the general laws in reference to pensions are the only tenable ground upon which we can predicate the granting of pensions at all.

I grant the right of any member on the floor to increase the pension of any widow they may think proper; but, sir, standing here as the representative of all the people, I want to know whether my colleagues on either side of this Chamber are willing to give to the widow of one soldier of the Union Army a greater sum than is allowed by the general law of the country so long as there are thousands of widows of their comrades in absolute penury and want all over the land.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Will the gentleman allow me to answer?

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CHEADLE. I wish to know whether this House proposes to grant large pensions to a favored class, or whether it proposes to stand upon the fundamental principles of our Government and enact equal laws for the benefit of all the people.

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question? [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. CHEADLE. In order to shorten this debate I trust gentlemen who favor these large pensions will agree there may be a yea-and-nay vote on this amendment, so they may go upon record either in favor of abiding by the general law of the land or in favor of special pension class legislation. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. Does my friend from Indiana [Mr. Cheadle] mean to charge that the members on this side of the House have

A MEMBER. He said that he would ask its consideration "at an arry day."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNSHEIL, of Pennsylvania, The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNSHEND. If it can be understood—— [Cries of "Regular rder!"]

Mr. ALLEN, of Michigan. I wish to ask a further question, and it is this: Because without any fault on our part we are unable to amend the laws so as to cover all meritorious cases, does the gentleman propose to obstruct every meritorious bill which comes up because it takes it out of the number not provided for under the general law!

Mr. CHEADLE. I have been unable to find, and I challenge any member upon this floor to find, where there has been submitted to the American Congress a bill to grant to a widow of a soldier of the line a pension for a larger amount than is authorized by the general pension laws

Mr. GALLINGER. They do it by special act.
Mr. CHEADLE. The gentleman from New Hampshire says we do it by special act. If gentlemen can name any acts which have been passed granting a pension for a larger sum than the amount authorized by the general law, $12 per month, I will pause and give them time to name the bill. I claim, Mr. Speaker, that no such cases can be found in favor of the widows of the men of the rank and file. I say, sir in favor of the widows of the men of the rank and file. I say, sir—and I utter the words advisedly, after a most careful study of the question—I say the general law in reference to pensions is the only tenable ground we can stand upon. It is the only just ground upon which we can stand. It is the only American policy. I trust, sir, that I have as much interest in the pension laws as any other man in the House. I also trust I have as correct an idea of what is right and just and equitable as any member upon the floor. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen will state it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLAND. We who sit on this side of the House desire to hear what is being said on the other side by the gentleman from Indiana, but there is so much confusion and so many interruptions and so many members calling for a vote that we can not hear a word of what is said.

The SPEAKER. The House will come to order.

Mr. CHEADLE. I thank my distinguished friend from Pennsylvania for saying they are not losing anything because they do not hear me. I wish that gentleman to understand that my position is tenable in law, it is tenable in equity, it is tenable in morals, it is tenable in a wise and impartial administration of the Government, and it is tenable only when it does equal and exact justice to all the people. I stand here for absolute justice for all, and I shall go as far as the gentleman from Pennsylvania or any other gentleman on this floor in favor of just and proper pension legislation. I shall strive to secure it by general laws, hence I shall vote in favor of the enactment of general laws for the benefit of all the pensioners. I shall at the same time oppose and vote against pernicious class legislation, of which the pending bill is a striking sample.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a

Mr. CHEADLE. In a moment. Let me say only the other night there was submitted to the House, by the unanimous report of the com-mittee, a proposition to increase the pension of a widow from $25 to $50 a month; and it was stated in that report that the $25 pension was the only support that widow had, when as a matter of fact she had been promotion in one of the Departments from a $900 clerkship to a thousanddollar position, and at that very moment was receiving $1,300 a year from the Government. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania therefore say, or would any other member pretend, that I should stand here and vote to increase the pensions of widows who are now receiving the and vote to increase the pensions of whows who are now receiving the highest rate of pension authorized by the general pension laws now in force when in the little village where I live there are a dozen war widows in abject poverty and want, whose husbands died that this Government might not perish, and who do not receive a single dollar of pension at all?

Mr. BOOTHMAN. I would like the gentleman to answer how, by increasing this widow's pension from $30 to $50 a month, that will decrease the pension of any other widow?

Mr. CHEADLE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, that is begging the question. I say, as an American citizen and as a member of this Congress, I stand here the earnest advocate of pension legislation which shall give for like disabilities like pensions to all pensioners.

Mr. BOOTHMAN. Answer my question.

Mr. CHEADLE. I have always, Mr. Speaker, been opposed to the creation of class legislation or granting pensions to any one which will permit them to live in luxury here in the capital of the Union so long as there are scores of thousands of my comrades and their widows and children living in abject want, living in almshouses, and who do not receive a single dollar of pension from the Government. I demand the enactment of pension laws liberal in their provisions which shall do equal and exact justice to all by granting like pensions for like disabilities, and this is the only legal ground upon which we can demand

Mr. DUNHAM. How much luxury does the gentleman think you can get out of the increase proposed here, or out of the whole amount of the pension?

Mr. CHEADLE. Let me tell my distinguished friend [Mr. Dun-HAM] that the earnings of the average worker in America are not over one-half of $50 a month. This increased pension means the average

Mr. CHEADLE. Do you suppose that I would ask the Government of the United States to give me $10,000 a year compensation as a member of Congress, and then demand that it give to my distinguished friend here upon my left [Mr. McKinley] but $5,000? I receive for my salary the amount which the general law of the United States provides shall be paid as salary to all members of this and of the other branch of Congress. I do not ask more than the amount paid to all, and I think the rule in reference to pensions should be the same, be governed by a general law.

Mr. BELDEN. But your coachman does not get the same that you do.

Mr. CHEADLE. I have no coachman, never had, and never will have, yet that fact can not have any relation to, nor is it necessary to the proposition I lay down. I challenge any man on this floor, however much he may laugh and sneer at the views I take-I challenge him in law or in equity or in morals to lay down a single fundamental proposition which justifies Congress in giving to the pensioners laboring under similar disabilities one amount in one case and another and a larger amount in another case. Do we enact laws for the control and government of all the people, or are we here to enact laws for the special benefit of the select few?

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I shall detain the House but a moment. There is, I think, hardly a widow of a general officer on the pension-roll of the United States to-day, either of the Army or the same rank in the Navy, but is now receiving $50 a month, and some are receiving $75 and $100 a month. We do not want that this widow shall be discriminated against; and repeating the thought of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOOTHMAN], as suggested by his question to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CHEADLE], we will not in the granting of this additional $20 pension to the widow in this case take anything from any other pensioner or from the widow of any other officer in the country. It simply raises her pension up to the level of what pensioners under similar cases are receiving from the Government.

I ask a vote upon the bill. Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Before the vote is taken I will merely state that General Emory was a most gallant officer of the regular Army, having served in the Mexican war with great distinction, and having distinguished himself in the war for the Union. I ask members to read the report at their leisure, and they will find that this officer in his long and active service was ever prompt and foremost in the performance of duty. Let us now pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, to strike out "fifty" and insert "thirty."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Being anxious for a vote so as to get at the appropriation bill, I will not consume any more time, but will urge the House to vote down the amendment reducing the pension to $40, and to pass the bill which makes the pension $50, thus increasing it from $30 to $50.

The question was taken; and on a division there were-ayes 30, noes

Mr. CHEADLE. No quorum.
Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I ask the yeas and nays.
Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. Oh, take the vote by yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I withdraw the demand.

Mr. CHEADLE. I trust that gentlemen will be willing to allow a yea-and-nay vote on this amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS, of New York. Take it on the passage of the bill. Mr. CHEADLE. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. CHEADLE, and Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania, were appointed tellers

The House again divided; and the tellers reported-ayes 39, noes

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

The question recurred upon the passage of the bill. Mr. CHEADLE. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were refused, there being 20 in support of the demand and 95 in opposition to it, the affirmative being less than onefifth of the whole number.

The question was taken on the passage of the bill.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 92, noes 31.

Mr. CHEADLE. No quorum.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. CHEADLE, and Mr. O'NEILL of Pennsylvania, as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 129, noes 34.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Speaker, I desire now to submit a privileged I ask to consider the bill S. 2626-

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is the bill called up by the gentleman from Illinois privileged?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman says it is. The Chair will cause the title of the bill to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2626) granting a pension to Catlena Lyman.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. How is that privileged?

The SPEAKER. This bill at an evening session was reported to the House with the previous question ordered upon it on its third reading and passage, with the right of amendment and thirty minutes for de-

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I raise the question of consideration against the bill. It is not in accordance with the agreement.

Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Speaker, in view of the agreement which I understand was made as to the other bill, I withdraw this.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider general appropriation

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first general appropriation bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1233) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, as perhaps no item in the bill will excite any controversy until we reach the latter part of it, I ask, not that general debate be limited, but that it may be postponed until we reach the controverted portions of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of not exceeding forty paymasters' clerks, at $1,400 each, not exceeding thirty paymasters' messengers, and traveling expenses of paymasters' clerks; in all, $40,000: Provided, That the maximum sum to be allowed paymasters' clerks and contract surgeons when traveling on duty shall be 4 cents per mile, and in addition thereto, when transportation can not be furnished by the Quartermaster's Department, the cost of same actually paid by them, exclusive of sleeping or parior-car fare and transfers.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to offer an amendment to come in after line

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 15 insert "for a riding and training master for the more thorough instruction of officers and cadets, a sum not exceeding $1,500,"

Mr. McMILLIN. That will be subject to a point of order; and I make the point of order that it changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee make the point of order?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not think the point of order is good, but I am perfectly willing that the gentleman from Tennessee may reserve it until the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] may have an time being. But it is as much in order on the Army appropriation opportunity to make explanation of the amendment he has offered, and until I shall have made an explanation.

Mr. LODGE. This appropriation has already passed the House in two bills—in the Army bill of last year and in the West Point bill of this year—and was stricken out in the Senate in both cases. It was put in in deference to a report of a military commission appointed by the Secretary of War. They made the suggestion with a view to improving the cavalry by breaking and training horses at the Academy or at posts. It had the approval of General Sheridan. It was laid before the Military Committee of the House last session. It passed this House then without objection, but was lost in the Senate. It was put in on the recommendation of the Secretary of War in the Military Academy bill and passed the House again this session, but was again stricken out by the Senate.

The object is to make an experiment simply in improving the methods of training and breaking horses. The amount of money is very small. If the experiment is not a success it can be ended at the close of a year; but the experiment has had the support of the best officers and those best posted in cavalry affairs in the Army. It is a matter to which I have given some little attention myself, which explains the personal interest I feel in it; and I was in hope that if the House would again allow it to pass, that the Senate would not strike it out. It was for that reason that I offered the amendment, with the assent of the chairman of the committee, and, I believe, all of the rest of the committee. I think it is an appropriation which will be of benefit to the service, and it is with that view solely that I offer it now. As it passed before, I had not supposed it was subject to a point of order.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts a question before he takes his seat.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I believe the gentleman has correctly stated the facts so far as the Military Committee are concerned. I would now inquire of him whether he has any reason to believe that the Senate will permit this amendment to remain in the Army bill when it did not permit it to remain in the Academy bill?

Mr. LODGE. I will say, in reply to the gentleman from Michigan, that if I had thought otherwise I would not have offered the amendment. I believe they will permit it to remain.

Mr. McMILLIN. The statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Lodge] shows clearly that the point of order is well taken. My object in making it is to prevent, so far as may be, burdening appropriation bills with extraneous legislation as provided by the rules of the House. If it is meritorious it can come up on a separate measure. I make the point of order for the reason that there is no law authorizing it, and the gentleman's own statement shows that there is not only no law, but that the co-ordinate branch of the Government has refused to make one.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman is entirely mistaken in reference to the rules on the point of order. The item that the gentleman from Massachusetts seeks to have incorporated in the bill was estimated for by the Department and has been regularly referred to the Committee on Military Affairs in the estimates for the Military Academy. It is as much a part of the Military Academy as any other officer employed nere. It is a part of the institution.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will my friend allow me a question there?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Certainly.
Mr. McMILLIN. Does he hold that the making of an estimate by the Department prevents it being subject to the point of order?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No; but I will only say that this appropriation is for a part of the support of the military establishment, and it is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs, and it is in order to incorporate it in this bill. When the estimates for this appropriation was forwarded to this House by the Secretary of War it was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and they reported it on the Military Academy bill; it is now proposed to put it on the Army appropriation bill. It passed this House as an amendment to the Military Academy bill, which shows that the House has acquiesced in the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs on this question.

The House also held that it was in order upon the Army appropria-tion bill reported by the Military Committee at the last session, and it has held that it is in order this session upon the Military Academy bill, which also emanates from that committee. Therefore I can see no reason why it should not be in order on this bill, which provides the means for the support of the military establishment. Any appropriation for the support of that establishment is in order upon a bill making appropriations for its support. This is a part of the Military Academy at West Point, and as much a part of it as the employment of any professor or other employé there.

Now, I do not know that it is necessary for me to say anything fur-ther about it. The amendment has been most urgently recommended by the Secretary of War, and we would have insisted upon it when the Senate struck it from the Military Academy bill at this session but for the fact that it was the only point in dispute between the two Houses on that bill, and as we did not desire to have a conference upon such an unimportant matter it was considered best to waive it for the bill as it was on the Military Academy bill, for both those bills are entirely within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Cnairman, there can be no doubt but that this amendment is in order upon this bill. As stated by the chairman of the committee, it was upon this bill at the last session of Congress. It is designed to enable the Secretary of War to engage the services of a horse-trainer, not only for the benefit of the cadets at West Point, but also for the benefit of the officers and soldiers of the cavalry of the Army. General Sheridan during his lifetime secured the establishment at Fort Riley of a cavalry school, and, in furtherance of that project, he appeared before our committee and very urgently recommended the employment of this horse-trainer or riding-master, and the present Secretary of War has made a like recommendation. This riding-master would become a part of the military establishment; he would be connected not alone with the Military Academy but with the cavalry training school; and I think there can be do doubt about the propriety of the amendment or about its being in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order and will submit the amendment to the committee.

The amendment was agreed to—ayes 47, moes 35. The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Regular supplies: For the regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department, consisting of stoves and heating apparatus, and repair and maintenance of the same, for heating barracks and quarters; of ranges and stoves for cooking; of fuel and lights for enlisted men, guards, hospitals, store-houses, and offices, and for sales to officers; of forage in kind for the horses, mules, and oxen of the Quartermaster's Department at the several posts and stations, and with the armies in the field, including its care and protection; for the horses of the several regiments of cavalry, the batteries of artillery, and such companies of infantry and scouts as may be mounted, and for the authorized number of officers' horses, including bedding for the animals; of straw for soldiers' bepartment, certificates for discharged soldiers, blank forms for the Pay and Quartermaster's Departments, and for printing division and department orders and reports, $2.678,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended on printing unless the same shall be done by contract, after due notice and competition, except in such case as the emergency will not admit of the giving notice for competition: Provided further, That after advertisement all the supplies for the use of the various departments and posts of the Army shall be purchased where the same can be purchased the cheapest, quality and cost of transportation considered.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last proviso in that paragraph, included in lines 7. 8, 9, 10, and 11. The proviso as it stands gives the impression that its object and effect will be to secure supplies at the lowest cost possible. The practical operation of it, however, is not so, especially in reference to the procurement of supplies for the posts on the Pacific coast. It is well known that the supplies for the Army are furnished to general depots in the East, and that there is no general depot for army supplies on the Pacific coast. The result is that under this provision advertisements are made for large quantities of supplies which are furnished to the depots in the East, and then whatever supplies are required on the Pacific coast have to be transported there.

The practical consequence is that supplies are received there and distributed to the various posts, when as to the Pacific posts they could be purchased cheaper at San Francisco. I will give an instance in connection with the Navy Department which will serve to illustrate the point with reference to the Army. The Navy Department advertised for a supply of flannel. A firm in San Francisco submitted a bid for that flannel and their bid was accepted as the lowest. The contract required that the flannel should be delivered at the general depot in Brooklyn, N. Y. The contractors asked the privilege of delivering in San Francisco whatever amount of it was required on the Pacific coast, but it was found impossible to do that.

The result was that this flannel was sent to Brooklyn and delivered there at the general depot, and then a large portion of it was transported to San Francisco in order to be delivered to the Mare Island navy-yard and to the Asiatic and South Pacific squadrons; so that a large portion of this flannel made the trip twice across the continent before it was finally distributed for use. Now, if this provision is struck out of the bill it will be perfectly competent for the Department to exercise its discretion in the purchase of supplies for the different divisions, and undoubtedly such supplies for Pacific coast posts can be bought in San Francisco at the lowest possible cost. I hold in my hand a letter from a merchant of San Francisco, in which he says, among other things:

The general depots are all east of the Missouri River, have large appropriations, and purchase, of course, everything in the East, and use up the entire appropriation. When they have purchased more than they can consume East, they send their surplus here to supply this post, and often when we could furnish the supplies at the same price or less. They are shipped from their general depots because they are on hand and not required there.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is a fact that we can supply at San Francisco a great many of the requirements of the Army for that division, and if this provision is struck out it will enable the Department to procure the supplies there cheaper than they can be had with this provision in

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, this provision was placed in the bill by the House at the last session. It was not recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs when it originally reported the Army appropriation bill, but was inserted on the motion, I believe, of the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. McShane]. I did not advocate the provision at that time. The committee this session, however, in preparing this bill simply took the law as it was enacted last year, and as there was no objection from the Department against this provision, no suggestion that it should be struck out or that it had occasioned inconvenience or extravagance, we concluded to retain it.

I will say, however, to my friend from California, that while we did not originate the amendment, I can not see any harm whatever in the provision, for it declares explicitly that "after advertisement all the supplies for the use of the various departments and posts of the Army shall be purchased where the same can be purchased the cheapest, quality and cost of transportation considered." Now, under that language the Department is fully authorized to use its discretion in this matter, and if the method suggested by the gentleman from California will enable the Government to obtain these supplies at less cost than the method which has been pursued, the Department is at perfect liberty to resort to it.

Mr. Morrow. But they do not resort to it.
Mr. FELTON. They have not done so.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Department has the matter within its own discretion. I will say to my friend that if the Department does not exercise a wise discretion in procuring these supplies where they can be obtained most cheaply, it violates the very letter of the law. his complaint should be made against the administration of the law, and not the law

Mr. MORROW. I think I can explain to the gentleman how this occurs. Take, for instance, the item of pork in barrels. An advertisement is published inviting proposals for furnishing supplies sufficient, as is supposed, for all'the different posts or departments in the United States; and these supplies are to be delivered at some one of the depots, for instance, Chicago. Under the contract entered into the supplies are delivered there.

The Department determines that, all things considered—cost of transportation, etc.-it is best to have the whole amount supplied and delivered at Chicago, distribution being made from that point to the various posts or departments in the United States. The contract is made for supplies sufficient for the whole Army at all the different places; and pork delivered in the first instance at Chicago is transported to San Francisco, though pork in barrels could be bought on the Pacific coast and delivered at a much lower price. Of course we on the Pacific coast could not undertake to deliver at Chicago, on terms economical to the Government, the supplies needed for the Army of the United States at New York, at various points in the South, etc.; but we can supply what is required on the Pacific coast at a much less price than is paid for it when delivered at Chicago.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Under the provision of this bill the Department is permitted to purchase these supplies upon the Pacific coast if it can obtain them more cheaply there.

Mr. MORROW. But the Department does not do it. We have no general depot on the Pacific coast; and therefore—

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The provision in the bill does not require the Department to purchase where there is a general depot; it is at liberty to purchase these supplies anywhere-at San Francisco or at any other point-wherever they can be obtained at the least cost

Mr. CUTCHEON. It seems to me that the fault is not with the law. The law is all right. The fault that the gentleman from California points out is in the execution of the law on the part of the purchasing agents of the Government. The gentleman's remedy is not to change the law, which now allows the officers of the department to purchase in the cheapest market, price and cost of transportation considered. His remedy is to go to the purchasing department and secure a reform in the The law does not need any change; it is right; application of the law. there is no doubt about that; and this provision ought not to go out. But the gentleman should bring his influence and eloquence to bear upon the purchasing department of the Government so that the law may be correctly applied and supplies obtained in the method cheapest for the Government.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If this provision were struck out the department would be left without any restraint whatever.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The provision ought not to go out.

Mr. MORROW. The chairman of the committee [Mr. Townshend] has informed us that this provision is of only a year's standing; that it was inserted in the law only a year ago; that prior to that time the purchases were made satisfactorily in different parts of the country.

Now we find that under the operation of this precision expellion. Now we find that under the operation of this provision supplies pur-chased elsewhere are being delivered at San Francisco at a cost greater than that at which they could be delivered if they were purchased on the Pacific coast.

I wish to say to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] that we have tried our "eloquence" on the Department with reference to this matter, and we are informed that the officers are controlled by this provision under which they invite proposals for the supply of provisions for the whole Army at different places where they may be required.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I beg to say to the gentleman that they are not required to have these supplies delivered at any regular depot; they can regulate that matter completely in their advertisements for proposals and in their contracts. I say again, that the provision ought not to go out; it is right.

Mr. RANDALL. If there is any ground for complaint in this regard Mr. KANDALL. If there is any ground for complaint in this regard it is a complaint with reference to a matter of administration, not a complaint in reference to the law. The law is right. The Army officer who buys in Chicago must take into calculation in reference to pork which is needed at San Francisco the freight to San Francisco in estimating the cost as compared with pork purchased at that place.

This provision was not inserted without full consideration. It was intended, if I remember aright, to meet an abuse which was growing up. I should myself hesitate to vote in favor of striking out this provision until we have had a longer period of experience in connection with its operation.

Mr. CUTCHEON. If the gentleman from California can demonstrate to the Department that, transportation considered, it can buy these goods cheaper on the Pacific coast, it is obliged by this very provision of law to buy them there.

Mr. MORROW. Such goods as we supply and as the Department

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes, such goods as you supply and as the Department requires.

Mr. MORROW. Now, Mr. Chairman, if it be necessary I move a pro forma amendment, to be heard for a few moments.

I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, as well as to the gentleman from Michigan, that we on the Pacific coast are in favor of the adoption of any provision which would secure the cheapest and the hest goods to be delivered to the Army. We do not object to that. But what we ask and what we want is that the Government shall be able to secure these goods, if practicable, at the most accessible points. That insures cheapness to a certain extent.

If it be determined in this discussion that the evil of which we complain lies with the administration of the law, and that all that is necessary to remedy it is an appeal to the Administration to have it corrected, we propose to use this very discussion and present it to the Department, and require that the supplies needed in California shall, so far as we are able to supply them, be advertised and called for on that coast.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from California.

The question was taken; and on a division there were-ayes 30, noes

So the amendment was rejected. The Clerk read as follows:

For continuing work of constructing buildings for the new post at Denver, Colo., $100,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to reserve the point of order against that paragraph, Mr. Chairman; but I think perhaps that a statement will induce the gentleman from Illinois having charge of the bill to let it go out of the bill, since it is already in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It was not embodied in the sundry civil bill as it passed the House, as I recollect.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, yes. Mr. RANDALL. There was a gross sum given in the sundry civil bill for military posts; and I have a letter here, which is accessible to the gentleman, from General Holabird, stating that in the sum em bodied in the sundry civil bill, and estimated for expenditures on that ground, the Denver post was included to the extent of $100,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Included in the same appropriation?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I was not aware that there had been any appropriation made for this post in any other bill.

Mr. RANDALL. We thought in committee when considering the subject that $50,000 was enough, but General Holabird has fixed it at $100,000. Certainly it ought not to be appropriated twice.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Undoubtedly it should not be; and I am perfectly willing so far as the $100,000 is concerned that it shall go out of the bill upon the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, although under the rules the appropriation should have been made in

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want the gentleman to base his action upon my statement, but I refer him to the communication from General Holabird, and here is his signature to the letter, which embodies the statement I have made.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I wish to say, however, Mr. Chairman, that I do not think the point of order is well taken; but if the appropriation is already made, of course I have no desire to incorporate it again in this

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman to strike out this provision.

Mr. SYMES. Let me ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if a special estimate was not made by the War Department and sent to the committee which asked an appropriation of $290,000, which sum was stated to be necessary for the completion of these barracks at Denver, Colo., in accordance with the act passed in the Forty-ninth Congress, and that it was stated it would be economy to appropriate the whole of that amount immediately to complete the work?

Mr. RANDALL. I think a hundred thousand dollars is what Gen-

Mr. RANDALL. I think a hundred thousand dollars is what General Holabird, Quartermaster-General, stated he could expend at this eral Holabird, Quartermaster-General, stated he could expend at this point during the coming year; and the gentleman from Colorado himself, I believe, appeared before the committee in that connection.

Mr. SYMES. No; I was not before the committee. I intended to press the matter in the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, perhaps I had a private conversation with the gentleman. I remember we talked over the matter.

Mr. SYMES. Yes, sir.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the gentleman from Colorado will permit me a moment.

me a moment.

Mr. SYMES.

Mr. SYMES. Certainly.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. I wish to state that I happened to be in Denver, Colo., myself during last November and visited this post. It is a new post, its location having been selected by General Sheridan. It is located in a very eligible position. They have commenced the work of constructing the buildings, and I think something like a hundred thousand dollars has been expended.

Mr. SYMES. That amount was appropriated by the Military Committee when the act establishing the post was passed.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes, that amount was expended there under that appropriation. But I was going to say that I have been told by the quartermaster in charge of the construction of the buildings that it would be great economy to the Government if the entire amount of the estimate was appropriated. From what he said I am convinced it would be true. He said that in letting these contracts for small annual appropriations the Government had been required to pay much more for materials than if the contract could have been let altogether. In other words, take, for instance, where a small quantity of brick is ordered by contract. They must pay more for the brick than they would in proportion if they could let a contract for the whole quantity of brick required for the post at one time. Therefore, so far as economy is concerned, I am convinced that the gentleman from Colorado is right, and that it would be better to have the entire appropriation. But as there was no larger estimate made by the Department than $100,000 we fixed the amount at that. But I will say again that I am convinced of the justice of what Major Campbell, the quartermaster in charge of the work, said, that it would be better in the long run and would promote economy to appropriate the entire amount required, which was something over $200,000, or perhaps a hundred thousand dollars still needed.

Mr. RANDALL. I am now able to state with certainty that the original estimate was what the gentleman from Colorado has said, $290,-000. That was made some years ago when the work was entered upon, and it has been progressing since. But in the estimate of this year the gentleman from Colorado and the gentleman from Illinois will find that it is either $100,000 or $117,000.

Mr. CUTCHEON. One hundred and seventeen thousand five hundred, as shown by the Book of Estimates, page 176.

Mr. RANDALL. Hence it is not necessary to have it duplicated.

I have no feeling about the matter.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let me say that I am not seeking to duplicate the amount. I am not asking that it shall remain in the bill after the statement of the gentleman, but was showing that the estimate for the work was more than a hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. RANDALL. I am not stating the exact amount already expended there.

Mr. SYMES. The original bill appropriated, in the language of the statute, $100,000 for the purpose of commencing the erection of the buildings after the Government shall have ceded to it or conveyed to it by a good title such a site as the Lieutenant-General might select. The Lieutenant-General selected a site—a very valuable site—a section of land; the citizens of Denver subscribed $30,000 to pay for the land, and it was conveyed to the Government in accordance with the In the sundry civil bill of the last session of this Congress $50,-000 only was appropriated; so that $150,000 has been appropriated in

This would make $250,000. A special estimate was made by the Secretary of War, and was sent either to the Appropriations Committee of the House or of the Senate, estimating that it would cost two hundred and ninety-odd thousand dollars, in addition to the $150,000 that had already been appropriated, which would make a total cost of $440,000 to complete the work. As stated by the chairman of the Military Committee, it would be good economy for the Government to now appropriate the $290,000 at this time to complete the post according to the plans and specifications approved by the Secretary of War. I hope this $100,000 in addition to the $100,000 in the sundry civil bill will be appropriated.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say it was only $100,000. The gentleman from Michigan has confounded it with

Fort Snelling

Mr. CUTCHEON. That is correct.
Mr. RANDALL. Now, why should we give more than the Depart-

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The full estimate is that it will cost $390,000. I stated before, but the gentleman from Pennsylvania did not hear me, that it happens that I was in Denver in November last, when I visited this post and had a conference with the officers in charge, and especially with Major Campbell, who is the quartermaster in charge of the works. He stated to me that it would be more economical for the Government to make an appropriation for the entire amount that is needed to complete the building, as they could then make more advantageous contracts for the bricks and other material if they could let the contracts for the entire amount needed at one letting.

He held that by letting contracts for a large amount of material-the entire amount required to complete the building-the Government could obtain the brick and other material at much less cost than by making the contract by piecemeal. It requires a large amount proportionally to purchase a small than a large amount. Aby one engaged in letting contracts for buildings can appreciate this.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not know what he thinks. We have necessarily to go by the estimates, and the sundry civil bill contains an appropriation for the sum which General Holabird in this letter, which have shown, has said will meet their requirements at this time, which is $100,000. It is not a matter with the committee at all. The only point that I desire to call attention to is, that there should not be a duplication of the appropriation.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Just one word. This confusion arises in part, I think, out of the change of the rules in the last Congress, and in part from the fact that the Appropriation Committee in the sundry civil bill, under the head of "Military posts," made an appropriation of the lump sum of $332,000. Of course the Military Committee would not know exactly what was covered by that.

Mr. RANDALL. I can understand that. It is an inadvertence, I

Mr. KANDALL. I can understand that. It is an inadvertence, I understand, but we ought not to duplicate it.

Mr. CUTCHEON. This post at Denver was reported to the Forty-ninth Congress from the Committee on Military Affairs. It was, I may say, the child of that committee, and we took an interest in it because we had reported it at the request of the Lieutenant-General, and were looking after it. We found no specific appropriation for it in the sundry civil bill. The confusion in the jurisdiction of committees in the last Congress has, of course, led to a little of the confusion, and the sooner that confusion can be prevented the better. and the sooner that confusion can be prevented the better.

Mr. RANDALL. I think so.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Of course the gentleman from Pennsylvania will admit at once that the matter of the establishment of a post or the location of a post is a matter within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs. I do not say that after the post has been located the appropriation for the building would be properly a military affair; but there could be no question in regard to the jurisdiction of committees, and I am not going to raise any argument in respect to the jurisdiction of committees as to that. The confusion has occurred out of the fact that this post originated with the Military Committee, and the appropriation for military posts was made in a lump sum in the sundry civil

Mr. RANDALL. I do not want to open up a discussion of the jurisdiction of committees in this connection unless we shall be com-

Mr. CUTCHEON. The suggestion I would make is that if the sundry civil bill were still here that the Appropriation Committee should drop it out of that bill and let the Committee on Military Affairs insert it in this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think anybody wants to insist on duplicating the amount. I think the gentleman from Colorado himself is content.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I offer an amendment here, and send a letter to the Clerk's desk on the subject.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

After line 10, on page 16, insert "for officers' quarters at the post at Columbus, Ohio, $20,000."

Mr. SAYERS. I trust the gentleman from Ohio will not insist upon that amendment.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Why?

Mr. SAYERS. In the first place, I desire to raise the point of order upon the amendment, and in the second place, I will say to the gentleman that the Committee on Appropriations have provided for the very thing he asks.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. No, the gentleman is mistaken in his last statement. The Committee on Appropriations, as I understand, are providing for the erection of additional barracks, but this is for the erection of officers' quarters. The letter which I send to the desk is from the Quartermaster-General, and it shows that there has been in contemplation for several years past this improvement at Columbus, Ohio, the estimate, as stated in the letter, is nearly $120,000.

Mr. SAYERS. Has that estimate come from the War Department? Mr. OUTHWAITE. Not in the regular Book of Estimates; but the letter which I have sent to the Clerk's desk explains the situation. Mr. SAYERS. I ask to have it read, subject to the point of order. The letter was read, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, Washington, February 4, 1889.

Sie: Referring to our interview of this morning regarding the desirability of an enlargement of the capacity for quartering troops at Columbus Barracks, Ohio, and to your request to be advised as to what proceedings have been had by this office in the matter, I have the honor to inform you that by War Department letter of April 8, 1880, and January 27, 1882, plans and estimates were submitted to Congress for the construction of permanent buildings at Columbus Barracks (see Senate Executive Documents Nos. 49 and 146, Forty-sixth Congress, second session, and House of Representatives Executive Document No. 55, Forty-seventh Congress, first session), but no legislative action appears to have been had on those papers. Subsequently, in October, 1883, the commanding officer at Columbus Barracks was directed to prepare plans and estimates for four sets of enlisted men's quarters and a corresponding number of officers' quarters; in accordance with which plans and estimates were prepared for two brick buildings for company quarters for four hundred men, at an estimated cost of $50,52,82, and two brick houses for officers' quarters, at $22,380,24. These papers were referred to the Quartermaster-General, but so far as I can learn no subsequent action was had in the matter.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

R. C. DRUM, Adjutant-General.

Hon. Joseph H. Outhwaite, House of Representatives,

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I trust that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] will not suppose for an instant that I am trying to obtain from his committee, in the bill of which he has charge, a concession and also trying to obtain the same thing, or something additional, here. The proposition as it is presented in the letter which has just been read shows that there has been in contemplation for a long time an enlargement of the post at Columbus, Ohio. It shows that the plans and specifications were made three or four years ago for additional quarters there for men and also for officers.

The present necessity for an appropriation for additional quarters for men is caused by the great overcrowding of the post. It is a post which was prepared for an average of about four hundred men, and it has had nearly five hundred during the past year, and quite recently there has been a great deal of illness in the quarters, attributable to the overcrowded condition of the post. This is one of the three recruiting depots of the United States. The sites have been selected for the two buildings, and this amendment which I offer now proposes $20,000 for two buildings for officers' quarters, while the estimate for the same buildings, as shown by the letter which has been read, was $22,380.24. These are not single buildings, but double buildings, so that the cost of each of the quarters for officers will be about $5,000. The quarters now occupied by the officers at that barrack are simply frame shells, which are uncomfortable in summer on account of the heat and uncomfortable in winter on account of the cold. They are entirely unfit to be occupied by the officers of the Army, and out of consideration for the officers there I have offered this amendment in good faith.

Mr. SAYERS. Recurring to the point of order which I have suggested on this amendment, it seems to me that the statement of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] clearly shows that the amendment, if it should go upon any bill, belongs upon the sundry civil bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Under what rule?

Mr. RANDALL. Under the decision of the committee.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I shall be glad if the gentleman will refer me to any rule or any decision to justify that statement.

Mr. RANDALL. I will do so immediately.
Mr. SAYERS. I send the decision to the desk to be read.
The CHAIRMAN. Before that is read the Chair desires to understand specifically and definitely the point of order raised by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

Mr. SAYERS. I put the point of order on two grounds: First, that this amendment is not germane to the bill, and, second, that if the amendment should be entertained at all it could be entertained only upon the sundry civil bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Under what rule?

Mr. RANDALL. The point of order is upon the question of jurisdiction. The military posts, prior to the change of rule in the Fortyninth Congress, were always dealt with in the sundry civil bill. The decision of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] as chairman of the Committee of the Whole the other day bears directly upon this point, and, as I have stated, these appropriations have never been taken away from the Committee on Appropriations, but have always been included in the sundry civil bill. When the question of the necessity for this appropriation comes up that will be an entirely different matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. In what bill was provision made for the officers' quarters, or for the establishment of the post at Columbus, Ohio, prior to the distribution of the appropriation bills among the several committees?

Mr. RANDALL. In the sundry civil bill, of course.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What was the inquiry of the Chair?
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to know what bill carried the provision authorizing the establishment of this post or similar posts prior to the distribution of the appropriation bills?

Mr. RANDALL. It was the sundry civil bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I beg leave to differ with my friend from Pennsylvania. My recollection is that this post was established by an independent bill which was reported from the Committee on Military

Mr. RANDALL. That is not the point. I say that prior to the distribution of the appropriation bills among the several committees in this House all matters relating to military posts were included in the

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I think my friend is mistaken about that. The sundry civil bill never contained a provision originating the appropriations to establish any military posts or for any public buildings. It is only where the appropriations for public buildings are found to be inadequate that the sundry civil bill has attempted to take jurisdic-As to this particular post, speaking from recollection, I think it originated in a bill which emanated from the Committee on Military Affairs. The sundry civil appropriation bill never did, according to my recollection, contain an appropriation criginating a post or a public

Mr. KANDALL. I never said so. I said that all military posts-their establishment and maintenance

Mr. TOWNSHEND. My friend does not answer the inquiry of the hair. The Chair inquired on what bill this post was first established. Mr. RANDALL. I say on the sundry civil bill, because these annual appropriations, prior to the distribution of the appropriation bills, have all been on the sundry civil bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But here is the question, and the gentleman does not answer it. The question is, was this post first established or authorized in the sundry civil bill?

Mr. RANDALL, I did not understand that that was the question of the Chair at all.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is the question of the Chair. The CHAIRMAN. This post might have been authorized by an the CHARMAN. This post might have been authorized by an independent bill; but that was not the point to which the inquiry of the Chair was directed. The Chair desired to know what had been the practice heretofore—at least prior to the distribution of the appropriation bills—with reference to appropriations originating or continuing these posts or providing for additional quarters—whether such appropriations had been in the military bill or in the sundry civil bill. The question is one of fact, and the Chair would be glad to have information in respect to it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have taken occasion to investigate the record as to the practice of the Committee on Appropriations and the House prior to the adoption of the present rule in the last Congress. I have found that upon the Army appropriation bill there were appropriations for the continuance of work upon buildings at posts—

Mr. RANDALL. What year?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have a list with dates, but it is not in my desk. It is in my committee-room.

Mr. RANDALL. What year?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have said I have not the list at my desk; but it was during several years. That was under the old rule prior to the change of rules in the last Congress. I found that it was the practice of the Committee on Appropriations, when it had charge of both bills, at times to place these appropriations in the sundry civil bill, and at other times to place the same kind of appropriations for the continuance or completion of these buildings in the Army appropriation bill. The sundry civil bill carries an appropriation to-day against which I did not make a point of order, but on which a point would, in my judgment, have been sustained under the uniform practice of the House—an item which never appeared in the sundry civil bill, but always appeared in the Army appropriation bill until the last Congress; and that is the appropriation for the iron-testing machine. Uniformly that appropriation appeared in the Army appropriation bill. I did not make the point the other day—

Mr. RANDALL. Just there let me state that I think the gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I can prove my statement. Mr. RANDALL. I do not think that matter has been provided for in the Army appropriation bill since the Forty-fifth Congress. That appropriation for the testing-machine has appeared in the sundry civil bill to my knowledge for several years.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Well, my recollection is that it has appeared in the Army appropriation bill since the Forty-fifth Congress.

Mr. CUTCHEON. For at least three Congresses it has appeared in the Army bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes, sir; at least three Congresses, if not more. Mr. RANDALL. Well, it appeared there when all the bills were under the control of one committee.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. So far as the practice is concerned, these appropriations have been made in the past in both these bills.

But we still come back to the original question, upon what grounds does the gentleman from Texas base the point of order? The gentleman says he bases his point on the ground in the first place that this provision is not germane to the bill. Now what is the character of the bill before the House? It is a bill making appropriations for the military establishment. What is embraced in the military establishment? Every appropriation for objects of a warlike character that is not embraced in the naval establishment. [A laugh.] If I am incorrect in that definition, I hope the gentleman will show it; this is not a subject for levity; it is a question of fact—a question arising under the rules. The rules provide as plainly as language can be written, that subjects relating "to the military establishment and the public defense, including the appropriations for its support and for that of the Military Academy," belong "to the Committee on Military Affairs." The next clause of the rule is

To the naval establishment, including the appropriations for its support; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Find me now a single clause in any of these rules conferring upon any other committee than the Committee on Military Affairs jurisdiction over anything pertaining to the military establishment, save and except forts or, strictly speaking, fortifications. You can not do it.

If this amendment is not germane to this bill, no bill can be conceived of to which it would be germane. It is germane to this bill, and only to this bill. I would like some gentleman to cite a clause in the rules anywhere conferring upon the Committee on Appropriations, or upon any other committee of this House except the Committee on Military Affairs, jurisdiction upon this or any other feature of the military establishment, except, strictly speaking, forts and fortifica-

Now, do you propose to obey the rule? It is mandatory. It does not bear a doubtful construction. It emphatically declares that all subjects pertaining to the military establishment shall go to the Committee on Military Affairs, except in the case of forts and fortifications, a subject which was reserved to the Committee on Appropriations.

What was the other point the gentleman made? That there is no law authorizing this appropriation. As the Chair virtually decided that point in the first point of order made to-day on this bill, it is unnecessary to discuss it further.

The post at Columbus has been established by law. We are simply making an appropriation in pursuance of law already made.

So far as the merits of the proposition are concerned, I do not think I shall vote for it; but when the gentleman attacks the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs, it is my duty to stand here and de-

Mr. BLOUNT. The Chair asked for the practice in reference to this, and I sent for the Statutes at Large, volume 21, and turned to the first bill, and in it I find:

For the completion of the necessary buildings for headquarters of the Department of Dakota, at the military post of Fort Snelling, Minn., $100.000,

For the construction of a new military post at or near the Musselshell River, in the Territory of Montana, at a site to be approved by the Secretary of War,

Mr. CUTCHEON. What does the gentleman read from? Mr. BLOUNT. I read from the Statutes at Large, page 269, from the sundry civil appropriation bill of that year.
Mr. CUTCHEON. What year?

Mr. GUTCHEON. What year?
Mr. BLOUNT. Eighteen hundred and eighty.
Mr. RANDALL. And I have the bill of 1886.
Mr. BLOUNT. I sent for this bill to see the provisions it contained.
I am inclined to think I had charge of the bill that year.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman from Georgia did not hear my statement.

Mr. BLOUNT.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am trying to make one of my own.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will agree with the gentleman, perhaps, in conceding all that he has so far claimed.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am addressing myself to the Chair. I know the gentleman will not concede what I am claiming, but I am speaking to Mr. TOWNSHEND. We will not concede all that you may claim.

Mr. BLOUNT. My friend will concede a good deal, no doubt, but he will allow me to proceed in my statement in the time given to me under the rule.

Now, Mr. Chairman, since the service in that year there was never a doubt in that committee where this class of appropriations belonged; that it belonged with the sundry civil bill. If you will find an exception here and there it will appear, I think, it was never there on any question of order. Sometimes it may have come in the shape of an amendment, but I speak from my experience of the practice of that committee during that whole period that these appropriations went to the sundry civil appropriation bill. Any gentleman, I think, who has had experience in that committee recognizes also that it belongs there.

I think if the Chair will take the several statutes for a series of years he will find it is in accord with what is in this bill from which I have read. That being true, I think the inquiry of the Chair is suggestive there is but little difference as to what is the true method, and that is to rule out what is not germane to this bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The appropriation proposed in the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] is not in the Book of Estimates, and therefore was not embraced in this bill. however, to speak so much as to the merits of the amendment as I do to speak to the point of order which has been raised. The point of to speak to the point of order which has been raised. The point of order is made, in the first place, that the amendment is not germane to the Army appropriation bill. This is a bill entitled "A bill making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes."

The gentleman from Ohio moves as an amendment to this bill a clause appropriating $20,000 for officers' quarters at the city of Columbus one of the three recruiting denote of the United States. Those bus, one of the three recruiting depots of the United States. Those recruiting depots are emphatically for the support of the military establishment. That is what they are for. They are for that and nothing else. They are military and purely military. A recruiting depot ing else. They are military and purely military. A recruiting depot is for the support of the military establishment.

It seems to me utterly preposterous, begging the pardon of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Savers] and everybody else, to make a point of order that an amendment providing an appropriation for the erection of necessary quarters for a recruiting depot is not germane to a bill making appropriations for the support of the military establishment of the country. You may as well say an appropriation for the support of the Army is not necessary in such a bill. Nothing could be more germane.

In regard to this matter, while I never had the honor to serve on the Committee on Appropriations, like the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, yet, sir, I have read the rules of the House, and I think I understand the English language well enough to know what they are. understand when the Committee on Appropriations had jurisdiction of the entire field of appropriations except for rivers and harbors and the Agricultural Department they were not particularly nice in dividing it amongst themselves; but by the change of the rules in the Fortyninth Congress jurisdiction has been conferred upon another committee to make appropriations for the military establishment and for the pub-

What have we here? I find, Mr. Chairman, that an appropriation recommended for a military post at San Antonio, Tex. Within my is recommended for a military post at San Antonio, Tex. Within my own recollection that appropriation originated in the Military Committee, and since I have been a member of it. Again, I find for Fort Riley, Kansas. It is within my knowledge that that came from the Military Committee on the recommendation of General Sheridan, who appeared before the committee and recommended the establishment of the post, and I had something to do with reporting the bill in that con-

Mr. RANDALL. But both of these were under special acts.
Mr. CUTCHEON. I am aware of that, but they both came from the Military Committee. Again I find for the post at Denver, Colo., which also came from the Military Committee, and another for the construction of barracks at Newport, Ky., and that came from the Military Committee during the last Congress under the chairmanship of General Bragg. In fact, about one-half of all the posts that have been established on estimates from the Department have come from the Military Committee, and are as much germane to the bill as is the appropriation for the pay of the Army, or for any other purpose which is not questioned in the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. That this matter was in the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations prior to the modification of the rules in the Forty-ninth Congress can not be questioned.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What is that statement?

Mr. RANDALL. I will state it in a different way. That prior to the change of the rules in the Forty-ninth Congress the Appropriations Committee held unquestioned jurisdiction in this connection. I never have denied that the Military Committee had power to originate a special act authorizing the establishment of a military post. But uniformly the Committee on Appropriations in the sundry civil bill for ten years past have provided for the appropriations for such purposes.

Now, the question is, was this power taken from that committee? I want to show you, Mr. Chairman, that it never was taken from them, and that the facts to which I shall refer establish a precedent to regulate you and the committee. For ten years I find that no appropriations for the continuation of such works as I have spoken of have come from the Military Committee. On the contrary, I think for the first time in the last year there was an appropriation by the Military Committee, on a special estimate which came in after the regular estimate, as to a new post at Chicago, and that got into the Military Committee; but if there is to be any appropriation in that connection to increase that post or to maintain it, it never has been taken from the Committee on Appropriations in any way; and I would like to have read the decision the gentleman from Texas has sent up to the Chair, which bears directly upon the point.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I have not concluded my remarks, Mr. Chair-

Mr. RANDALL. I beg the gentleman's pardon; I thought he had concluded.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood that the gentleman had yielded the floor.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I supposed the gentleman from Pennsylvania rose to interrupt for a question.

Mr. RANDALL. I thought the gentleman had concluded.
Mr. CUTCHEON. Of course I am perfectly willing to yield to the

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If my colleague on the committee will allow me a moment right on the point suggested by the gentleman from

Mr. CUTCHEON. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. While the gentleman from Pennsylvania was addressing the House I obtained the laws passed by the Forty-fifth Congress. The gentleman seems to have forgotten what has been the history of the appropriations made by his own committee upon these bills, although he has been presiding over that committee so many years.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not preside over it in the Forty-fifth Con-

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No, but the gentleman occupied a seat in the chair then as Speaker of the House, and under his administration of af-fairs the practice was sanctioned and indorsed of making these identical appropriations in the Army appropriation bill; and I am surprised that my friend from Georgia [Mr. Blount], who was a member, as I recollect, of the Committee on Appropriations in the Forty-fifth Congress and participated in the preparation of the bill, does not remember that then the practice was to insert these appropriations in the Army bill.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have that bill as it became a law before me, the bills of the Forty-fifth Congress that the gentlemen have both forgotten. In the first session of that Congress, on page 3 of the Statutes, there will be found under the head of "Appropriations for quarters" in the Army bill the following:

For the construction of temporary huts and stables, and for repairing public buildings at established posts—

Just what is sought to be done here; and the amount appropriated $1,100,000 for that purpose in that bill.

What further?

For the construction and repair of hospitals, $50,000,

That was the first session, in 1877.

Mr. RANDALL. And they have been there ever since, the repairs, but this is not a repair.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Well, what has the gentleman to say to this language?

For the construction-

Mark youand repair.

Construction of what-hospitals? Mr. RANDALL.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Construction and repair of hospitals.

Mr. RANDALL. But this is not a hospital.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Butlet me give the gentleman more. Where is the distinction between hospital and other buildings? In the second sion of the Forty-fifth Congress-I will give the gentleman language which the honorable gentleman from Georgia can not misunderstand or controvert. What is it? On page 148, second session of the Fortyfifth Congress, in 1878:

For the construction of temporary huts and stables and for repair of public buildings at established posts, $880,000.

Further in the bill I find-

For the necessary construction of suitable buildings for store-houses and offices at Omaha, Nebr.

What answer can my friend from Pennsylvania make to that?

Again appears the former appropriation-

For construction and repair of hospitals, etc.

Now, I have not time to examine the other statutes, but so far as the practice of the House is concerned, it was evidently the practice of the committee to place these appropriations in the sundry civil bill or in the Army appropriation bill at discretion.

I will now refer to the bill of the last session of this Congress making appropriation for the Army. In it the same language is incorporated as that just read by me:

For the construction of temporary buildings and stables, and for the repair of public buildings at established posts, $620,000.

This is as late a precedent as can be desired.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to have the decision of the former Chairman read.

Mr. CUTCHEON and Mr. TOWNSHEND. We concede that de-

Mr. RANDALL. Neither of you appealed from it.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. It appears from what the former Chairman said to-day that he did not remember what was done on this bill in the Forty-fifth Congress

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is familiar with the decision. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania desire to have it read?

Mr. RANDALL. Not if the Chair is familiar with it.
Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I had not concluded Mr. Chairman, I had not concluded the remarks I was making. I want to find this line of division between these two committees. It is admitted by the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, that committees. the Committee on Military Affairs properly originates and initiates the Committee on Military Affairs properly originates and initiates bills for establishing military posts. Am I stating that too broadly?

Mr. RANDALL. That is true.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Because that is purely a military affair.

Mr. RANDALL. It does not go to that committee under the power to appropriate, but it goes to it under the power which your committee possesses to report bills that legislate.

Mr. CUTCHEON. We will not dispute about the power. The Military Committee unquestionably has the power.

Mr. RANDALL. Pardon me. I concede that you have had that power always, and you have it yet.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Yes, we have it yet. And as a matter of practice when we establish a military post we always make an appropriation for the commencement of the work.

Mr. RANDALL. Not necessarily.

Mr. CUTCHEON. We did in the case of Denver. We appropriated $100,000 for Fort Riley. We appropriated for San Antonio, Tex., and for Newport Barracks $100,000. We also appropriated $300,000 for Highwood, now Fort Sheridan, near Chicago. It has always been the practice with that committee, when a post was established in a particular locality, therewith to furnish the Government with the means of commencing the construction of that nost. Now if the Militery Commencing the construction of that nost. mencing the construction of that post. Now, if the Military Committee has the power under the rules to originate these posts, when does it lose the power to continue construction and why does it lose it?

If it is a military matter and belongs to the Military Committee to initiate a post, why is it not equally a military matter for that committee to determine how extensive the post shall be-whether it shall be a two-company post, a four-company post, an eight-company post, or a battalion post, and how rapidly the accommodation shall be constructed for the troops? Now, Mr. Chairman, to come back to the point of the Military Committee originally establishing this post at Columbus, as I am advised (and I do not speak of the matter from my own knowledge), the question now is, whether we should go on with it and whether there is a military demand for the continuance of that post and an enlargement of the accommodations. I will not detain the committee further.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the amendment is germane to the bill and in order. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. I think the letter which I have sent up to the desk shows its necessity.

Mr. RANDALL. The letter which the gentleman sent up is a letter from the Adjutant-General in which he speaks of this matter, and states from the Adjutant-General in which he speaks of this matter, and states that it was referred to the Quartermaster-General, and the latter clause of the letter states distinctly that the Quartermaster-General has made no recommendation to that effect. I only say that it is usual before we make an appropriation to require that there should be an estimate for it, or at least a subsequent letter from the Quartermaster-General before providing it, which does not appear to have been done in this case.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. The Committee on Appropriations have a letter from the Quartermaster-General showing the necessity for the troops, and they have alluded to this same matter in a letter which preceded it.

ter from the Quartermaster-General showing the necessity for the troops, and they have alluded to this same matter in a letter which preceded it. Now, I have stated the necessity for these officers' quarters. In fact, the officers stationed at the city of Columbus have to live in houses that are unfit for them to live in, because they are uncomfortable and not sufficient. They have had to live there while this matter has been in contemplation for five years, and it is time the improvement was begun. Mr. HOOKER. Are the houses in which they live rented?

Mr. OUTHWAITE. They are Government buildings upon Government land ment land.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For shelter, shooting-galleries, ranges, repairs, and expenses incident thereto,

For the purchase of about 101 acres of land adjoining or near the post, at Madison Barracks, New York, for rifle-range and drill and camping purposes, $7,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order on that paragraph for the purpose of making an inquiry. Is there any law authorizing the purchase of this land? Mr. CUTCHEON. It is simply in furtherance of the post at Sack-ett's Harbor. Mr. PARKER. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point of order until he has heard the report. The letters furnishing the estimates recommend this item, and I ask the Clerk to read the correspondence which I send to the desk. The Clerk read as follows:

Headquarters Army of the United States,
Washington, D. C., April 30, 1888.

Sir: I have the honor to return herewith a bill H. R. 9070, Fiftieth Congress, first session, providing for the purchase of ground near Madison Barracks, New York, for a rifle-range and for other purposes, referred by you for my report, with the remark that upon a proposition made last December, to sell this ground to the Government for $6,000, I recommended favorable action. I am still of the opinion that it would be of advantage to the service to have this ground as part of the reservation of Madison Barracks, but believe that the price mentioned in this bill, $8,000, is too high, and that not more than $6,000 should be paid. If the bill should be amended to specify that latter amount, I would then recommend its passage. its passage.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

P. H. SHERIDAN, Lieutenant-General, Commanding,

The SECRETARY OF WAR, Washington, D. C.

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, May 2, 1888. SIR: In reply to your request of the 24th ultimo, for information upon House bill 9070, Fiftieth Congress, first session, to provide for the purchase of lands to be used as a rifle-range in connection with Madison Barracks, New York, I have the honor to inclose a report of the 30th ultimo, from the Lieutenant-General of the Army, and to say that the views therein expressed are concurred in by this Department.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. V. BENÉT, Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance, and Acting Secretary of War.

Hon. R. W. TOWNSHEND, Chairman Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives.

WAR DEPARTMENT, QUARTERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE, Washington, D. C., December 29, 1888.

Washington, D. C., December 29, 1888,

SIR: Referring to annual estimate of this Department for the next fiscal year for $6,000 for the purchase of about 101 acres of land adjoining or near to the post of Madison Barracks, New York, to be used for a rifle-range and drill and camping purposes, I have the honor to inform you that from information lately received it appears that the $6,000 will be insufficient. It is therefore recommended that the amount be increased to $7,000, "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

From a recent personal inspection, the Quartermaster-General was convinced of the necessity for the immediate purchase of the land.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. B. HOLABIRD,

S. B. HOLABIRD, Quartermaster-General United States Army.

Hon. LEVI D. MAISH, House of Representatives.

Mr. PARKER. I do not wish to occupy the time of the committee with this amendment. It is recommended in the Book of Estimates; it is recommended by the late Lieutenant-General Sheridan; it is recommended by the Ordnance Department; it is recommended by the Quartermaster's Department. The statement is that it is immediately necestermaster's Department. The statement is that it is immediately necessary. The amendment simply provides for purchasing, at a rate at which the interest will more than pay the former rent, lands to be used in the place of rented lands in connection with this old post which has been occupied for some three-quarters of a century. It is continually occupied now by soldiers, and, the War Department in its several subdepartments agreeing, I ask that gentlemen will let this pass without criticism or objection.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, it is true that this item is in the Book of Estimates, and it is also true that it was considered in the Committee on Appropriations, and as the committee had no right to report appropriations except in pursuance of existing law, this item was ruled appropriations except in pursuance of existing law, this item was ruled

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The proposition is obnoxious to the rule because it is new legislation.

Mr. PARKER. But, Mr. Chairman, the renting has been continued, and this is simply putting purchase in place of the renting—

The CHAIRMAN. But there is no existing law authorizing the

Mr. RANDALL. Thave no earthly objection to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] having a bill passed here authorizing this purchase, but the rules of the House not only prevent the committee from reporting such an item, but they also prevent the Committee of the Whole from adopting it.

Mr. PARKER. I regret very much that this measure should be crucified between two committees, but I can not help it. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase of about 101 acres of land adjoining or near the post, at Madison Barracks, New York, for rifle-range and drill and camping purposes, $7,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I offer the amendment which I send to the

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

After the word "necessary," in line 17, insert "For the purchase of the site of Fort Elliott, Texas, $17,000, or as much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. In support of that amendment I desire to have read a letter from the Quartermaster-General.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve the point of order on the amendment. The Clerk read the letter, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, QUAETERMASTER-GENERAL'S OFFICE,

Washington, January 2, 1889.

Sie: I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of a letter addressed by me yesterday to the honorable the Secretary of War, inclosing the estimate of amount required for the purchase of site for Fort Elliott, Texas. From the copy of the lease, also inclosed herewith, it will be seen that unless action is had by the present Congress and the land purchased before the 1st day of January next, all the buildings and improvements remain and become the property of the lessor. Yours being the only committee which I understand may report appropriations for the purchase of sites for military posts, I most respectfully request your early consideration of this matter.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. B. HOLABIRD,

S. B. HOLABIRD, Quartermaster-General, United States Army.

Hon. RICHARD W. TOWNSHEND,

House of Representatives.

Mr. RANDALL. I reserve the point of order on that amendment. Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is impossible for me to conceive what may be the point of order in the gentleman's mind, as he has not given us an opportunity of knowing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Holman] stated that he reserved the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I will finish my statement.
Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I think that proposition is clearly subject to the point of order. As I understand it the Government has heretofore leased the ground on which these buildings stand.

Mr. LANHAM. It has leased the ground, and more than $80,000 has been expended there in the erection of buildings

Mr. CUTCHEON. And probably that will all be lost unless this amendment is adopted.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is a military post existing there already. If the object of the amendment was to increase the number of military posts I should object, because a very little travel over the country where these posts are located will satisfy any one of the propriety of consolidating existing posts rather than increasing the number; but in view of the fact that there is already an established post at this point, and that the Quartermaster-General, a very well-informed gentleman, recommends a purchase instead of leasing, I do not insist on the point

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the gentleman can conceive of a point of order that will apply to this amendment I should be glad to have him

Mr. HOLMAN. Why, new legislation is required for the purchase of this ground

Mr. TOWNSHEND. This is in pursuance of work already done.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no law authorizing this purchase.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to withdraw the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I have reserved the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let the gentleman from Pennsylvania state his point of order.

There is no law authorizing this appropriation. Mr. RANDALL. Mr. RANDALL. There is no law authorizing this appropriation. If the gentleman will ask unanimous consent, however, to have the amendment go into the bill, I will not object.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I will object. This will go regularly into this bill or not at all. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania wants to make a point of order, let him state it and discuss it.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be heard for a moment. The appropriation contemplated by this amendment is based upon an asstimate from the Secretary of War, transmitted to this House on the estimate from the Secretary of War, transmitted to this House on the 25th day of January by the Acting Secretary of the Treasury. The estimate is shown in Executive Document No. 106, House of Representatives. In 1877 certain lands were leased in Wheeler County, Texas, upon which was erected what is known as Fort Elliott. By the terms of that lease, which was for the period of thirteen years, it was expressly stipulated that if the Government should not purchase the property all the buildings on the property should revert to the owner

Now, in pursuance of that lease the Government established a military post, Fort Elliott, near the western border of the Indian Territory, at which post there are now two troops of cavalry and two companies of infantry. There has been expended on that post $84,346, as shown by a letter which I have received from the Quartermaster-General. The lease will expire on the 1st of next January. There may be no session of Congress in time to provide for this purchase, if we do not adopt this amendment now. If the lease should expire without the Government purchasing the property, it is, as I have said, expressly stipulated in the lease that all these buildings on the site of Fort Elliott shall revert to the owner of the land.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Is it not a fact that in this lease there is reserved to the Government a right to purchase, and that this lease was made in pursuance of law?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes. This is a lease with authority to purchase.

It will expire on the 1st of next January.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I will inquire of the gentleman further whether the law authorizing the War Department to lease this property with the privilege of purchase does not confer jurisdiction upon this committee to make this appropriation?

Mr. LANHAM. It would seem to me that it does; but I am not sufficiently advised to answer that question authoritatively.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The appropriation is sought to be made in pursuance of law already existing.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Lanham] allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. LANHAM. I will with pleasure answer any question. This is a subject with which I am somewhat familiar.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That is the reason I seek information from the gentleman rather than from others. How many acres are there in this reservation? Mr. LANHAM. There are four sections of land leased by the Texas

Mr. LANHAM. There are four sections of land leased by the Texas Land Company to the United States Government—about 2,500 acres for the site and lands adjoining the site.

Mr. BUCHANAN. What is the proposed price?

Mr. LANHAM. Seventeen thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary. The purchase will take nearly all that amount.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is that the price named in the lease?

Mr. LANHAM. The price named in the lease was $3 per acre, provided the Government should buy the property by the 1st of January, 1878. It was stipulated that if the Government should fail to buy the property by that time there should be added 10 per cent. interest on property by that time there should be added 10 per cent. interest on the amount named from January, 1878.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Then under this arrangement the Government will have paid 10 per cent. interest for these years?

Mr. LANHAM. That was the lease made; that was the agreement entered into.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understand.

Mr. LANHAM. And the Government is now in this attitude, that it may lose the property for which this amount of money has been expended there unless the purchase be made.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I understand the gentleman's statement. I was simply trying to elicit the facts.

Mr. RANDALL. In view of the statement made by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Lanham] I withdraw the point of order. But I desire also to withdraw the point in regard to the provision in which the gentleman from New York [Mr. PARKER] was interested, because if one provision is to go in both should go in.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Is there any town or village of any considerable size near this land?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes, sir; it is at the town of Mobeetie, the county seat of Wheeler County.

Mr. BUCHANAN. How large a place is that?

Mr. LANHAM. Not very large; it is a town of, I suppose, 600 or

Mr. BUCHANAN. How near is it to railroad communication? Mr. LANHAM. I suppose the nearest point is 25 or 30 miles; it may be somewhat nearer

Mr. BUCHANAN. This would appear to be rather a stiff price. Mr. LANHAM. Well, the Government is in such a position that it must either purchase the property or sacrifice the money which has already been expended.

Mr. CUTCHEON. It may be proper for me to say that when the Quartermaster-General and the Secretary of War were before the committee recently in regard to this matter, I asked the question whether if this property should revert to the owners it would be necessary to establish another post in that general vicinity, to which they replied that it would be.

Mr. LANHAM. Yes; it is the purpose of the War Department, I understand, to keep up the post.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the ruling made on the point of order against the proposition of the gentleman from New York is equally in against the proposition of the gentleman from New York is equally in force against this. I have not a doubt about that, and I do not think the Chair has. If he has I would like him to say so.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Chair has not decided the question. The gentleman has no right to assume how the Chair would decide.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to make my statement without interruption. The gentleman can controvert it afterward in a gentleman way if he valesces I decide to withdraw my objection to the manly way if he pleases. I desire to withdraw my objection to the proposition of the gentleman from New York because—

The CHAIRMAN. This proposition should be first disposed of. The point of order being withdrawn, the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania withdraws his point of order made against that part of the bill included on page 16, lines 13 to 17, inclusive. Mr. HOLMAN. I desire I desire to reserve the point of order until a statement is made as to the necessity for that purchase.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. A letter from the Secretary of War has been read. It was quite lengthy. I hope the gentleman will not ask that it be read again.

Mr. CUTCHEON. That letter will be found on page 3 of the report of the committee.

Mr. PARKER. General Sheridan recommended this purchase; the Chief of the Ordnance Department has recommended it; and December last the Quartermaster-General recommended that it be made im-

Mr. HOLMAN. As I understand, this land has heretofore been occupied by the Government as a military post under a lease.

Mr. PARKER. For three-quarters of a century this post has been occupied as an Army post, and I am advised that for several years land for the use of the troops stationed there has been hired annually at a rental which would be more than the interest on the money proposed to be paid for this.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does your proposition indicate any sum to be paid?
Mr. PARKER. It does; the amount proposed is $7,000.
The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the provision will be restored to its place in the bill. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. CAREY. I offer the following amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after the amendment just adopted:
"To enable the Secretary of War to complete the water-supply system of Fort D. A. Russell, Wyoming Territory, $24,500, or so much thereof as may be neces-

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Clothing, camp and garrison equipage: For cloth, woolens, material, and for the manufacture of clothing for the Army; for issue and for sale at cost price, according to the Army Regulations; for altering and fitting clothing, and washing and cleaning when necessary; for equipage, and for expenses of packing and handling, and similar necessaries, $1,150,009: Provided, That out of the money hereby appropriated for clothing and equipage of the Army there shall not be expended at the military prison at Fort Leavenworth a sum in excess of $125,009: Provided, also, That hereafter the regimental price fixed for altering and fitting soldiers' clothing shall not exceed the cost of making the same at the clothing depots: Provided, That the several sums appropriated for the Quartermaster's Department by this act, including their credits, shall be available for three months after the expiration of the fiscal year.

Mr. PANDALL What is the avecage for adding that provise?

Mr. RANDALL. What is the reason for adding that proviso? Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will send to the Clerk's desk to be read a letter from the Quartermaster-General of the Army, which will give the reason why.

The Clerk read as follows:

War Department, Quartermaster-General's Office, Washington, D. C., January 17, 1889.

Washington, D. C., January 17, 1889.

Sin: Referring to my request for insertion in the Army bill of the words "Provided, That the several sums appropriated for the Quartermaster's Department by this act shall be available for three months after the expiration of the fiscal year." I have the honor to state that the request was made for the following reasons:

First, It has been found even with the greatest care the exact conditions of the appropriations can not be known for at least three months after the close of the year.

the appropriations can not be known for at least three months after the close of the year.

Second. Existing law requires that advertisement for proposals shall be made thirty days in advance of purchase. The exact condition of the appropriations being unknown until after the close of the fiscal year, and advertisement having to be made at least thirty days before the close, it is impracticable to arrange for expenditure within the year of what may prove to be available, and consequently a portion (considerable at times) of the appropriations are lost to the service.

It has accompract to me that in lieu of the world referred to above the object. he service.

It has occurred to me that in lieu of the words referred to above the object would be better accomplished by the following:

"Provided, That obligations may be incurred, and expenditures from the several sums appropriated for the Quartermaster's Department by this act may be continued to be made, for three months after the end of the fiscal year." Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. B. HOLABIRD Quartermaster-General, United States Army.

Hon. Richard W. Townshend,

Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,

House of Representatives.

Mr. RANDALL. All indebtedness under contracts made during the year is payable within two years out of appropria. As for that year. Now, I can understand how this might be vicious legislation, and especially as to the Army. Those who framed our Constitution declared we should never appropriate for the support of the Army for a longer period than two years. This provision has the effect to make an appropriation available for fifteen months, or for three months after the year has expired.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It was with considerable hesitation the Committee on Military Affairs were willing to incorporate this in the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. I will say in answer to the statement contained in the letter which has been read, that the law forbids the paying out of the appropriation for the support of the Army after two years. It goes back into the Treasury after two years, but during that time indebtedness incurred within that period can be paid out of the appropriation within two years.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The law prohibits the making of contracts in the last thirty days, as well as at any other time, without advertisement. This law is impracticable for contracts during the last thirty

Mr. RANDALL. It may be in effect, that is to say they have to make advertisement, and as that is required to be thirty days before, it would be too late to act. If they have no power to make contract without advertisement, they can not, of course, advertise within the last thirty days. If the committee felt doubt about that they should have omitted it from the bill; and for the purpose of testing the sense of the Committee of the Whole I move to strike out that provision which makes the fiscal year fitteen instead of twelve months.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why should it not go out on the point of order?
Mr. RANDALL. It is something new and the Department has lived for three years without it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. This is desired by the Department, and I do not see any good reason why they should be deprived of it.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think any Department of War should be allowed to use appropriations except under the general provisions of the law now prevailing.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not wish to discuss it further. The letter read sufficiently explains the reasons for its adoption.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to strike out the following proviso:

Provided. That the several sums appropriated for the Quartermaster's Department by this act, including their credits, shall be available for three months after the expiration of the fiscal year.

The committee proceeded to divide on the question. Mr. RANDALL. I do not ask for any further count, So the motion was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

MEDICAL DEPARTMENT.

Medical and hospital department: For the purchase of medical and hospital supplies, including disinfectants for general sanitation, expenses of medical purveying depots, pay of employés, medical care and treatment of officers and enlisted men of the Army on duty at posts and stations for which no other provision is made, for the proper care and treatment of cases in the Army suffering from contagious or epidemic diseases, and the supply of the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., advertising, and other miscellaneous expenses of the medical department; in all, $215,000; and not over $45,000 of the money appropriated by this paragraph shall be applied to the payment of civilian employés of the medical department.

Medical Museum and Library: For Army Medical Museum, preservation of specimens and the preparation or purchase of new specimens, $5,000; for the library of the Surgeon-General's office, $10,000; in all, $15,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the last word. priation for the Medical Museum, $5,000, seems to be a moderate provision. Then comes the appropriation for the library of the Surgeon-General's Office, $10,000. Now, that item has been in this appropriation for a number of years, $10,000 each year, and I would be glad to inquire of my friend from Illinois having charge of this bill how long that appropriation has been running at the rate of $10,000 a year?

Mr. MAISH. The gentleman from Illinois is not present, and I can not tell how many years this has been going on, but I think for four or five years the same amount has been appropriated for this purpose. The books, as the gentleman from Indiana is no doubt aware, are costly, and the sum in my judgment is not extravagant. It was found necessary heretofore, and we have no reason to suppose that it is not necessary now. I trust, therefore, the gentleman will make no objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. Was any inquiry made as to the amount actually required?

Mr. MAISH. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. SPINOLA. Do they pay $10,000 a year for books?
Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; and it has been going on for many years.
Mr. MAISH. For the information of the gentleman from Indiana I will state that last year some inquiries were made, and the Surgeon-General informed the committee that the amount was absolutely necessary.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to state the experience of the Committee on Appropriations in regard to the other Departments in this respect, for the purchase of books for the libraries, as to the propriety of looking into this particular item. The appropriations for the libraries of the several Departments were some years ago excessive, ranging from five to ten or fifteen thousand dollars per year for each. Upon an investigation of the subject each of these sums was reduced several thousand, as will be seen in the successive legislative, executive, and judicial laws, and it seems to me that an item like this, which has been going on for many years at the rate of $10,000 a year, ought to be subject to inquiry; and while I will not move to reduce it I hope the Committee on Military Affairs will examine the subject more closely in the future.

But, Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the House to the progress which we have been making in the direction of increasing these appropriations from year to year. We have the same Army, the same number of men, substantially the same number of officers, but the cost of transportation would be naturally largely reduced by reason of the extension of our railroad system in the West and the concentration of the Indian tribes, all of which naturally should aid to reduce largely the appropriations, and yet we are still confronted with a bill carrying an appropriation of over $24,000,000, fully up to and in excess of appropriation bills of years ago. The vast expenditures on railroads in the West, on the argument that it would greatly reduce the cost of supplies and transportation, produces no such result. The estimates here are $25,-000,000 in round numbers for the coming year, and the appropriations for the present year are $24,600,000 in round numbers, and yet the appropriations now made by this bill for the next fiscal year are $24,466,-615.73. The additions already put upon it in the House will swell the appropriation nearly or quite up to the appropriations for the present year, and the additions which will be made in the Senate, according to ordinary experience, will make it the largest bill of the kind that has been before Congress.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Has the gentleman from Indiana analyzed the bill to decide in his own mind where the increase comes in; whether it be for additional buildings or posts?

Mr. HOLMAN. There are some additional buildings and enlargement of military posts; some not necessary at all, I think. We have, for instance, Camp Robinson upon one side and Camp Niobrara on the other of the great Sioux reservation, both maintained upon the theory, I think, of watching the Indians at the Pine Ridge and Rosebud agencies, while, as a matter of fact, either is in striking distance of those agencies, and at the same time we have a considerable military force—an armed police—upon the ground. The same condition of affairs is true, I may say, all along the Missouri River, commencing at Bismarck and coming down. You constantly pass military posts as you descend the river as well as inland—long transportation, involving heavy expense year after year—while a concentration of the posts could heavy expense year after year-while a concentration of the posts could be made with great reduction of expense, entire safety, great benefit to officers and men, and no public interests jeopardized. The small concentration of troops which has been made up to this time and since the concentration of the Indian tribes has done but little to reduce the aggregate of the bill; in fact, on the contrary, it seems to have increased it

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, if necessary I renew the amendment to strike out the last word for the purpose of answering the gentleman. The gentleman from Indiana has certainly forgotten the amount of the appropriations when he himself was a member of that committee, and, if my recollection serves me right, at a time when he, as a member of the subcommittee, participated with me in the preparation of the Army bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, I never was on the subcommittee on the Army bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I think my friend will find himself mistaken.

Mr. HOLMAN. Never; at least that is my recollection.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Of course I must assume that the gentleman is correct, but I am inclined to think that he will find on looking into the matter that he is mistaken. However, in the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress the appropriation rendered by the Appropriations Committee for this service was $26,687,000, while the appropriations reported by this bill are only $24,466,000, in round numbers, think the gentleman was then a member of that committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. What Congress? Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Forty-seventh.

Mr. HOLMAN. No. Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I will take a Congress in which he was a member. He was a member of the Committee on Appropriations in the Forty-eighth Congress

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; in the Forty-eighth and in the Forty-ninth, and also in the Forty-fourth Congress.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I will turn to the appropriations made in the Forty-eighth Congress at the first session to show the gentleman what was then accomplished by his committee as a set-off against his criticism made here of this appropriation. In the first session of that Congress, when the gentleman was on the Committee on Appropriations, the aggregate appropriations recommended for the military establishment for the ensuing year were $24,244,000, or within a small amount of the sum recommended in this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. About $250,000 less.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. In the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress he likewise joined with the Committee on Appropriations in demanding from this House an appropriation of $24,429,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. Pretty nearly up to your figures.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes, the gentleman will find that there is a difference of only a few thousand dollars.

Now, the gentleman in the Forty-ninth Congress was a member of e Committee on Appropriations. That committee did not have this the Committee on Appropriations. That committee did not have this bill in the Forty-ninth Congress, but I want to express my surprise that the gentleman should show such an economic spasm at this time when on the Army bill of 1886 and 1887 he seemed willing that the House should make an appropriation within a few thousand dollars of the amount appropriated by this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend has said that I was so anxious for it, but he does not know whether I was or not.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I think I will be able to convince him that he and I assisted our good friend, General Forney, as members of the subcommittee having charge of the preparation of the bill in the second session of the Forty-eighth Congres

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not making any point upon that question at all.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I can not see what point the gentleman wants to make, when we have increased the appropriation only a few thousands since four years ago. We are making an appropriation for 1890, and you were making an appropriation for 1886.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend entirely misunderstands me in this matter. It occurred over a very unimportant item, that of $10,000 for the library of the Surgeon-General. There is no question between the gentleman and myself. We are but small factors in the legislative current; and when we shall both have passed away from this Hall the current of legislation will go on in the same order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND, I wish to show, however, that he was mistaken in respect to whether he was not a member of the Appropriations Committee in the Forty-eighth Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. Whether I was on the committee that prepared the bill or not is entirely an unimportant matter. The public interest in the question is as to the appropriation. It is too big, and the question was as to a particular item and as to whether that should remain.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the appropriation is within $10,000 of the appropriation in 1886, I do not see how he can now complain of this bill on the score of economy after the country has greatly increased in its public necessities.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it was too large then.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it was no large them.
Mr. OUTHWAITE. Regular order, then.
Mr. HOLMAN. It was too large. That is all there is about it.
And instead of this bill growing it should be decreasing year by year, as the facilities for transportation have certainly increased. As these fortifications are not required all over the country, but are being concentrated, there ought to be a heavy reduction in this bill instead of an enormous increase in the period of thirteen years, for I think I will be able, as I have sent for the documents, to show that the appropriation made in the first session of the Forty-fifth Congress was inside of $17,000,000; and I know such was the case in the Forty-fourth Con-

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

Engineer Department:

Engineer depot at Willets Point, New York: Incidental expenses of the depot, including fuel, chemicals, stationery, extra-duty pay to soldiers employed as artificers on work in addition to any not strictly in line of their military duties, such as carpenters, blacksmiths, draughtsmen, printers, lithographers, photographers, engine-drivers, teamsters, repairs of and for materials to repair public buildings, machinery, clerk-hire, and unforeseen expenses, $5,000.

For purchase of materials for the instruction of engineer troops at Willets Point in their special duties of sappers, miners, for land and submarine mines, and pontoniers, torpedo drill and signaling, $1,500.

For the purchase, under direction and at the option of the Secretary of War, of movable submarine torpedoes propelled and controlled at will by power transmitted from shore stations, such torpedoes to have a speed of not less than 15 miles an hour on a 1½-mile test, to carry 11,000 feet of cable, to steer to the right or left within a radius of 300 feet before or after diving under a spar or log, to carry not less than 400 pounds of dynamite or other high explosive, and before acceptance to meet the approval of the Board of Engineers, and the appropriation thereof shall be available until exhausted, $500,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order against that item, that it is not in order upon this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. I shall raise the additional point of order as to whether or not it may be construed as an appropriation extending beyond the limits prescribed by the Constitution.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say that the appropriations for this object, as in contemplation by this paragraph, originally belonged to the Committee on Appropriations. They were not taken from that committee by the change of the rules which distributed certain appropriation bills; further, that during the Forty-ninth Congress the appropriations, after the change of the rules by which these bills were distributed, were contained in the fortifications bill, and no appropriation of this nature appears in the Army bill for either session of the Forty-ninth Congress.

The question was raised touching this matter in the first session of this Congress, and I will ask the attention of the Chair to it, as perhaps he may be familiar with it, as he was here at the time and I was not. I will ask attention to the decision of the gentleman who then occupied the position of Chairman of the Committee of the Whole [Mr. SPRINGER], and I also desire to direct the attention of the Chair to the decision made in this connection as to jurisdiction on this very subject by Mr. BLOUNT, who occupied the chair, and which decision is at the desk

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to have both decisions read.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to say before the decisions are read that I feel more justified in making this point of order because there is no estimate, if I remember aright. We did hear in the Committee on Appropriations parties in this connection, and in harmony with the recommendation of the engineer officer, but we omitted any appropriation in that connection; and yet we find it under the Engineer's Department in this bill. And further, I would like to have read a letter from the head of the Engineer Department.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the gentleman desires to discuss the merits of the proposition, I trust he will do so when the point of order is disposed of. If he proposes to open the discussion on the merits, I shall claim the right to answer him, and I advise him now that if he opens the question of the merits-

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, it has not any merit.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will show that it has some merit. I can prove by the gentleman himself that there is merit in it. I will prove by the gentleman's own action that there is merit in it, and I want to say to him now, before he opens the discussion upon the merits, that I have matter enough here to occupy the attention of the committee for an hour.

Mr. RANDALL. I only want to show that the engineer officer—Mr. TOWNSHEND. You have made an assertion that one of the engineer officers does not recommend this, and I take your word for it; but if you are going to open up the question of the merits—

Mr. RANDALL. I say further that the engineers—
Mr. TOWNSHEND. If you are going to read anything from General Casey I will put against it the best engineer authorities in our own service and in the world.

Mr. SPINOLA. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania permit a question ?

Mr. RANDALL. One at a time, please. The point I had in mind in asking for the reading of this letter about which the gentleman seems to have so much apprehension-

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Not at all.
Mr. SPINOLA. We care nothing about it. We will brush it away like so much cobweb before we get through with it. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. I want to say to the Chair, then, that in this communication General Casey states that this is part of the fortifications of the country

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let the communication be read. I have no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. I thought you wanted to stop me from having it

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No, sir; I only want fair dealing. I want to quote from better authority on this point. Mr. RANDALL. I want to have the letter read merely as bearing upon the point of order, to show that the General of the Army says that this is one of the fortifications of the country.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appeals to gentlemen to confine the discussion to the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I will withdraw the letter.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that if one gentleman insists on addressing himself to the merits of this question, the Chair must permit gentlemen on the other side to reply.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to present my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Pennbylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to withdraw this letter.

Mr. RANDALL. The letter itself bears on the point of order and that is the only reason I wanted to have it read. So far as the merits of the matter are concerned, of course it meets with general condemnation.

Mr. SPINOLA. We will confine the time to two years. meet the point of order of the gentleman from Indiana. I will move an amendment to that effect.

Mr. HOLMAN. General Casey himself says that this belongs to the fortifications bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that if this letter is read and the merits of the proposition are gone into, the Chair must certainly indulge gentlemen on the other side of the question.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hopes, therefore, that gentlemen will address themselves to the point of order, which is the only question now before the committee.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has already gone too far into a discussion of the merits.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, you go just as far as I did, and then we will be exactly even. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman has already discussed the merits of the question, and certainly I have a right to be heard on the merits in reply

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman after the gentleman from Indiana states his point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. The point of order I make is that which comes under the constitutional provision. The bill contains this provision: "And the appropriation thereof shall be available until exhausted, $500,000."

Mr. SPINOLA. We can meet that point by simply adding at the cad of the words "not exceeding two years."

Mr. HOLMAN. The constitutional provision is, of course, familiar to the Chair:

To reise and support armies; but no appropriation to that use shall be for a longer term than two years

Of course this is an appropriation for the use of the Army.

Mr. RANDALL. Under our statutes the appropriations are for only

Mr. HOLMAN. This provision is in conflict with the Constitution, because it is indefinite in terms as to its duration. If such a provision were allowable we could make an appropriation for all time to come.

Mr. SPINOLA. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that at the proper time a motion will be made to add the words "not exceeding two years," which will obviate his objection.

Mr. HOLMAN. My point of order is made against the proposition

Mr. SAYERS. I would like to have that letter read. The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, Washington, D. C., January 31, 1889.

Office of the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, Washington, D. C., January 31, 1889.

Sir: I have received your letter of the 30th instant, as follows:

"Referring to provision in Army bill of $500,000 for movable torpedoes, please inform me whether you regard such an appropriation as entirely advisable at this time and whether the same was recommended by your department.

"I presumed that the provision in the fortification bill as reported from the Appropriations Committee this session substantially complied with your views as to the torpedo service."

I do not regard the expenditure at this time of $500,000 for movable torpedoes as advisable, because—

First. It is not understood that the movable torpedo has been perfected.

Second, We have ten of such torpedoes on hand in an imperfect condition. Third, All our means should be devoted to accumulating whatever may be necedery for the obstruction of our channels by submarine mines.

None of the estimates contained on page 170, Book of Estimates for 1889-'90, were submitted by this Department for movable torpedoes. Two estimates were submitted, one for "submarine mines and necessary appliances, $300,000."

These submarine mines are entirely different from "movable torpedoes."

They are spherical cases loaded with dynamite, anchored in the channels beneath the submarine mines are a part of the fortification, are obstructions to the channels of flows near the surface of the water, and must be seen in order to be sterved and directed upon an enemy. They have run from one to two miles, and when perfected may be of service in certain localities in limited numbers, and when perfected may be of service in certain localities in limited numbers, and when perfected may be of service in certain localities in limited numbers, and when perfected may be of service in certain localities in limited numbers, and when perfected may be of service in certain localities in limited numbers, and when perfected may be of service in certain localities in limited numbers, and when electrical machines, the batteries, etc., with which to fire the mines. The cable galleries are passages leading from the channel ways, under the shores, and into the casemates, and through them the wires leading from the submarine mines are carried into the casemates. Of these casemates and cable galleries the estimate covers five at New York City, five at San Francisco, five at Boston, two at Hampton Roads, two at Philadelphia, one at Washington, one at Baltimore, three at Portland, two at Narragausett Bay; in all, twenty-six, at $60,000 each, $1,500,000. (Report of Chief of Engineers, 1887, pages 9 and 11. Renewed in report of 1888, page 5.)

The provisions in the fortification bill, as reported from the Appropriations Committee this session, included in one item the two above, and fixed the sum at $330,000, and upon this I was not consulted by the committee. If I had been, I should most certainly have suggested a larger sum for casemates and cable galleries.

galleries.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOS. LINCOLN CASEY,

Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers. Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL, Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RAN-DALL] has elected to discuss both questions at this time-first, whether the amendment is in order; and second, whether the proposition should be adopted if it is in order.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to the gentleman doing the same thing

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I shall avail myself of this opportunity, as indicated by the Chair and by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, to make answer on both points.

make answer on both points.

First, as to the question of order, the gentleman from Pennsylvania has not given us the ground on which he bases his point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. I referred you to the decisions.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman has failed to give the Chair any reference to any rule of this House which renders this amendment out of order. If he mentioned a single rule I should be happy to be reminded of it. He has utterly failed to do so. He has asked the Chair to remember something that was decided by a former Chairman of the Committee of the Whole at the last session of Congress; and he has also cited a decision that has been made during this session, bearhas also cited a decision that has been made during this session, bearingupon an entirely different question, resting upon entirely different grounds.

The point of order made then was as to whether the Committee on Military Affairs had jurisdiction over the question of coast defenses. The question raised now is whether the Committee on Military Affairs has jurisdiction over anything pertaining to the military establishment. This appropriation is not necessarily a part of the system of seacoast defenses. This is for a torpedo which may be used in the defense of a fort, or may be used a thousand miles away from a fort for other defensive or offensive purposes having no relation whatever to a fort. It might be used in the Potomac River at any point from its mouth to obstruct navigation if a foreign fleet should attempt to assail the city of Washington. There are no forts between the mouth of the Potomac and this city, except the old dismantled Fort Washington, just below the city. Sir, it may be used on the water anywhere, even where no fort ever was or is ever intended to be built.

The jurisdiction of the committee over this weapon is as complete as it is over the other provisions which we shall soon reach, which have always been authorized by this bill-such as an appropriation to manufacture small-arms at the national armory, etc.; our jurisdiction is as complete as it is over anything pertaining to the Ordnance Depart This torpedo is not necessarily required to be a part of a fort. Under the rules to which the gentleman has referred, it may be that if this were intended solely as part of a fort it would be held as belonging to the fortification bill. But the rulings which have been made do not go, and no one, in my judgment, capable of passing upon a question of this kind would go, so far as to hold that everything which may be used in a fort when not necessarily intended for a fort, is outside the jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs.

In order to properly guard a fort it is necessary to have small-arms as well as heavy ordnance. Now, forsooth, because small-arms are used in a fort, shall the Committee on Military Affairs in reporting the Army bill be deprived of the jurisdiction conferred upon it by the express terms of the rule and by the practice of the House in making appropriations for small-arms for the infantry or cavalry service? It is true these movable torpedoes may be a necessary appliance, as has been held by the highest authority, in constituting the proper defense of a fort; but, sir, it is clear that they may be needful where no forts exist and where there may be no need for any fort.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania has appealed to a letter addressed to him by one of the officers of the Engineer Corps, General Casey. General Casey is not an expert upon the use of high explosives and of torpedoes. He is an accomplished, well-informed engineer officer, against whom I have nothing to say; but in point of weight of authority he bears no comparison with General Abbot, who is the commander and superintendent of the school of instruction of weight of the school of instruction of the school of instruction of the school of the scho and superintendent of the school of instruction of engineers at Willets Point, and to whom have been referred for years past all questions per-taining to torpedoes and to the use of high explosives as a method of warfare. I undertake to say, what will be concurred in by every stu-dent of this subject anywhere in the civilized world, that General Abbot stands at the head of the list as the best-informed, the ablest, and most accomplished authority on the use of torpedoes and high explosives. I have in my hand a series of lectures delivered by him the year before last at the United States Naval College, where he discussed, in a manner showing more knowledge and more study than have ever been shown by any expert in Europe or America, the power and usefulness of high explosives and of torpedoes in offensive and defensive warfare.

I put against the word of General Casey or that of any other engineer officer of our own or any other army the distinct and emphatic utterance of General Abbot, in which he highly commends such torpedoes and declares that they are of essential importance in protecting the submarine mines which General Casey in season and out of season has been advocating. General Abbot declares these submarine mines are useless and worthless without such protection as will be afforded by long-range, high-power guns, movable torpedoes, dynamite guns, etc. General Casey himself must admit that submarine mines without some protection are utterly worthless. All intelligent engineer of-ficers admit, in the absence of long-range and high-power ordnance, torpedoes, or other effective means, the submarine mines are useless to torpences, or other elective means, the submarine limes are useress to stay the advance of a hostile fleet in any harbor.

We have to-day an entirely defenseless coast. There is not a city on our long, exposed seacoast that is not absolutely defenseless and at the mercy of the navies of any of the great powers of the world. We have in the Army no long-range, high-power guns to defend them, nor can we have them inside of three years. General Abbot, as I am informed, was among the first to suggest the use of submarine mines. He has for years had charge of the instruction of officers in the construction and manipulation of submarine mines and high explosives. I can read you from utterances of his to prove that in order to make those mines of any use whatever they will have to be protected by some such weapons as long range, high-power guns, or of movable torpedoes, dynamite guns,

As the gentleman has thrown in the words of General Casey to prejudice this proposition, it is perfectly proper I should call attention to the superior authority of General Abbot. It is on his recommendation that this House appropriated nearly $1,200,000 during the last fifteen years to construct submarine mines, and he knows whereof he speaks when he tells us that the country needs and must have weapons of the character included in this bill to render those mines of any

What does General Abbot say? In his lecture in November, 1887, before the Naval College, in speaking of a necessary system of coast defense, he said:

defense, he said:

The elements of a first-class system for coast defense, as already stated, are: (1) high-power guns and mortars for keeping the armored ships of the enemy at a distance; (2) land fortifications to hold the position; (3) obstructions in the channels of approach; (4) flanking guns, movable torpedoes, and the electric light to cover the obstructions; (5) vidette and torpedo boats to watch the enemy and make offensive returns. These elements are of primary importance, and they are the only elements which can be so regarded; their relative importance at different sites will vary, but according to modern engineering principles no site is thoroughly defended unless all of them are represented.

These elements hardly admit of intercomparison as to relative importance. Each must be sufficiently elaborate to fulfill its special function at the locality. Thus obstructions can not replace high-power guns; neither can high-power guns replace flanking guns; nor can any or all of them replace fortifications or vidette and torpedo boats, which are essential to guard against surprise and to make the offensive returns which are so necessary to any defence in war. When these five elements are judiciously combined and sufficiently developed they may be trusted to do their work without further assistance, provided the site is favorable.

Again he savs. in describing the submarine mines:

Again he says, in describing the submarine mines:

Again he says, in describing the submarine mines:

Second. Mines which can be exploded only by judgment, at the will of an operator on shore (this being the characteristics of these submarine mines) have a very limited application. In the night, or a fog, or the smoke of a bombardment, or when several vessels are approaching abreast, or when the water is deep or the channel is wide, the chances of failure are very great. Indeed, the destructive range of practicable charges is so limited that if the ship be constructed with double cellular bottom and water-proof compartments, judgment-firing has become nearly obsolete for any but very narrow channels. In general, therefore, the system must be automatic, the explosion occurring in consequence of the touch of the enemy; but it should also admit of judgment-firing by groups when desired.

And he says etill further.

And he says still further:

In the absence of an effective fire of artillery and particularly where special vessels shall have been constructed for counter-mining (such as the dynamite vessel recently constructed by our Navy) movable torpedoes controlled from the shore can be made to play an important part. Unless the currents are strong there is no urgent need of very high speed, say above 10 miles per hour.

Again General Abbot says:

Again General About says:

The most valuable points from an engineer standpoint, are: (1) Invulnerability to fire, whether of machine-guns, of rapid-firing guns, or of cannon throwing grape and canister; (2) capacity to carry three or four hundred pounds of the explosive; (3) a range of at least 2 miles; (4) the power of diving under any simple boom protection, such as a ship could easily improvise from her spare stores. The ordinary service conditions, such as being under perfect control, presenting a small target, etc., of course are essential. All these conditions can be fulfilled in practice, and I entertain no doubt that such boats will form an important but subordinate element in every perfect system of coast defense.

I have been before me covice of letters written by General Abbot.

I have here before me copies of letters written by General Abbot, answering every feature of objection that General Casey has urged against the availability of the Sims-Edison movable, controllable tor-pedoes. I will ask that some of his letters and those of other eminent engineers of the Army may be inserted in my remarks.

NEW YORK, November 22, 1882.

DRAB SIR: In reply to your inquiry, I take great pleasure in stating that Ire gard General H. L. Abbot, United States engineer, as the highest authority in this country on the subject of torpedoes. His high ability, scientific acquirements, and long experience in charge of the Army torpedo station pre-eminently qualify him to decide upon the merits of any preferred system. His perfect integrity of character precludes the possibility of his giving any other than a thoroughly honest opinion.

Let me add that, without pretending to be thoroughly conversant with the subject, I am strongly impressed by the conviction that the Sims is the best of the movable torpedoes yet invented.

Very truly, yours,

GEO. B. MCCLELLAN.

GEO. B. McCLELLAN,
Major-General United States Army.
The President of the Sims Electric (Fish) Torpedo Company.

[Extracts from letter of December 15, 1882.]

The dangerous range of your torpedo. A charge of 250 pounds of dynamite, submerged at the depth requisite to develop its maximum intensity, would disrupt a modern double cellular iron war-ship, at a range of 25 feet, a 400-pound charge would do the same at 31 feet, and the effect on the machinery, especially if in action, would be dangerous in the extreme. The explosion at a distance of 50 to 75 feet would not disrupt the hull. The effect on the machinery, if in action, is not so certain. I know of no data which would decide it.

Very respectfully, yours,

ours,

HENRY L. ABBOT,

Lieut, Col. of Engineers, Bvt. Brig. Gen. U. S. A.,

HEADQUARTERS, BATTALION OF ENGINEERS, Willets Point, New York, December 10, 1882.

Willets Point, New York, December 10, 1882.

DEAR SIR: On September 19, 1882, the float of your torpedo, made in 1881, was anchored in front of a 32-pounder howitzer. It was fired at five times at a range of 370 yards, and eight times at a range of 186 yards, with double-shotted eanister charges, each containing 96 balls. The accompanying photograph illustrates the severity of the test. (See page 22).

Five large holes were made by this firing. The float was then towed about a mile by a steam-launch at a rate of 5 miles per hour. On its return it had lost only 150 pounds of its 400 pounds of buoyancy, and was perfectly serviceable for use in an attack.

On October 26, 1882, experiments were readed to the first property of the control of the service and the service of the serv only 150 pounds of its 400 pounds of buoyancy, and was perfectly servicesoic for use in an attack.

On October 26, 1882, experiments were made to test its power of resisting concussion. The mast of a schooner, 56 feet long, and 17 inches in diameter at the foot and 13 inches at the head, was anchored by two 500-pound anchors—one at each end. Your torpedo was driven against this obstruction twice, once moving at the rate of 7.5 miles per hour, and once at 9.1 miles per hour. Neither shock did any damage. The torpedo in both cases dived under the log and continued its course uninjured.

I regard these tests as sufficient to prove that the torpedo is quite safe against any artillery fire which it would encounter in actual service, and that no temporary protection, in the shape of spars or logs moored around a vessel, would be of any value against an attack. Probably deep iron netting might check its course, but the explosion of its charge—250 pounds of explosive gelatine, or of dynamite—would be sure to open a route for a second torpedo following in wake of the first.

Its steering properties are sufficiently shown by plate 49 of my report to our Board of Engineers.

Very respectfully, yours,

HENRY L. ABBOT,

HENRY L. ABBOT,
Lieut, Col. of Engineers, Bvt, Brig, Gen. U.S. A., Commanding School of Application.

BOARD OF ENGINEERS, New York, December 14, 1882.

* * * The results of this investigation have been to convince the board that this torpedo should form a part of our system of harbor defense. * * * The board recommends that this proposition of Mr. Sims be accepted. * * * Respectfully submitted.

Z. B. TOWER, Colonel of Engineers and Brevet Major-General, President of Board. (Pamphlet, page 24.)

BOARD OF ENGINEERS, New York, January 29, 1883.

* * Third. Upon such controllable fish torpedoes as shall be able to cope, not only with war-vessels of the first class, but also with special-armored boats designed to open a passage through the obstructed channel by countermining, Fish torpedoes, therefore, form a recognized part of our system of defense, and in the present incomplete condition of our batteries, and a total lack of heavy rifled ordnance, their importance for us is greatly enhanced. * * * Respectfully submitted on behalf of the board.

JOHN NEWTON, Colonel of Engineers, Brevet Major-General, President of Board.

But, Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the provision in this bill does not authorize the purchase of such a weapon as General Casey described—the description of weapon of such a weapon as General Casey described—the description of weapon which was bought by the Government before it attained its present perfection. It does nothing of the kind. He is describing a weapon with an imperfect cable or motive power. He is describing a boat with less than 10 miles an hour speed. The proposition of the bill, however, is that unless an improved controllable torpedo is presented which has a speed of at least 15 miles an hour, and which is perfect in all of its details the Scartage of the second of the sec details, the Secretary of War is not required to spend one dollar upon it. The weapon described in the bill, therefore, is unlike that described by General Casey; it is not the same weapon, and therefore his letter is notapplicable to the weapon described in this bill. Listen to the reading of the item as it is in the bill:

For the purchase

Absolutely? No, not at all; but-

For the purchase, under direction and at the option of the Secretary of War, of movable submarine torpedoes propelled and controlled at will by power transmitted from shore stations, such torpedoes to have a speed of not less than 15 miles an hour-

Or else we do not purchase iton a 11-mile test, to carry 11,000 feet of cable, to steer to the right or left within a radius of 300 feet before or after diving under a spar or log, to carry not less than 400 pounds of dynamite or other high explosive, and before acceptance to meet the approval of the Board of Engineers, and the appropriation thereof shall be available until exhausted $500,000.

The provision in the bill, therefore, it will be seen, Mr. Chairman, simply gives to the Secretary of War the option, the discretion, of purchasing this weapon, provided it comes up to all the requirements that are specified in the bill. And before acceptance it must meet the approval of the Board of Engineers. But even if they should present a weapon of that kind, a weapon complete in all of its parts, a weapon meeting all of the requirements which we have embodied in the bill, the Secretary of War has it as his option still to decline to use a dollar of the appropriation for that purpose,

The committee felt this way in regard to this matter, that while they had no fears of war resulting from our difficulties in Samoa, while we saw no immediate danger of war from any quarter, yet we felt that as it would take two or three years to procure the heavy ordnance which has been already authorized by law, it was a mere act of prudence thus to put under the control of the Secretary of War means which would enable him quickly-within a few months-to furnish some defense for the harbors on the seacoasts of the United States. We felt that we were doing nothing more than what common prudence demanded of those charged with the duties intrusted to us.

We have lessons to guide us in this connection. It will be remembered, sir, that shortly before the Franco-Prussian war, the Emperor of France and his advisers sneered at the danger of war, and scorned the idea that the capital of France could ever be successfully assailed by a foreign invader. France went into that war, or was forced into it unprepared, but not so much so as we are to-day; Germany went into it fully prepared, devastated France and dictated terms of surrender to the French people from their own capital. To-day one of the smallest powers of Europe can send their heavy-armed ship across the water and lay every city upon our Atlantic coast under tribute; and gentlemen sit here willing to leave us at the mercy of a power as insignificant as that of Chili, which can enter the harbor of San Francisco with the Esmeralda and lay that city under tribute.

This weapon is not only useful and needed for defensive warfare, but is useful, as I have said, for offensive as well, and for the defense of the coast where there are no forts to defend. I insist if the House intends to put into the possession of the incoming administration power to make ourselves respected abroad, power to present any defense whatever from the gunboats of an enemy, the time has come when we should avail ourselves of the only means open to us for providing some means of defense obtainable within a short time.

I have been unwillingly led into this discussion of the merits of this weapon at this time. We have had proof of its effectiveness. Congress for years has given proof of its efficiency. It has been appropriated for as a part of the fortifications bill since 1883. It has been approved of by the Committee on Appropriations time and again. That committee put it into the fortifications bill of last year, and my friend from Texas was the champion of it; his committee recommended it.
Appropriations were made for them last year by the action of the Committee on Appropriations, over which the gentleman from Pennsylvania presides, and yet he comes here to-day with a letter from an engineer officer, who can see no virtue in any explosive weapon except sub-marine mines, to condemn the action of his committee nearly every year since 1883.

But, sir, as I have already said, these torpedoes are not simply to defend the submarine mines and forts. They can be used to defend points where no forts exist; and therefore we wish it for the use of the military establishment aside from the branch of it known as the fortifications. Now, in conclusion, I can not see one single point upon which the gentleman could raise the point of order that is not applicable to every item in this bill, especially every item in the Engineer Department and in the Ordnance Department. I insist that until he points to a rule which will warrant the Chair in striking this provision from the bill the Chair will hesitate to sustain his point of order.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would ask the attention of the Chair for just a moment to the point of order. The first question for the Chair to consider in deciding the point of order is, what is a movable torpedo? I find two points of order made; one by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] in regard to the expenditure of the appropriation-and that will be easily obviated with very slight amendment. The other point of order, made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RAN-DALL], goes to the jurisdiction of the bill. Now, in deciding that point of order the first thing to determine is, what is a movable torpedo? Is it a fortification? Is it an arm? Is it a projectile? To what arm or branch of the service does it pertain? Who are to operate these torpedoes in case they are provided? That proposition will assist us in determining the question.

There are two kinds or varieties of torpedo-the fixed torpedo or submarine mine, which is stationary and anchored to the bottom of the channel, and the fish torpedo or movable torpedo, controllable from the shore. The appropriation is for the latter variety—the fish or movable torpedo. What is it? These torpedoes are cigar-shaped cases of copper in three parts: the float which carries it near the surface, the storage for the cable which pays out as it progresses, and the charge of high | and to the Engineer Corps of the Army; and second, it belongs to the explosive. This movable torpedo is anchored near the shore in some slip that is provided for that purpose. When the enemy's ship approaches the movable torpedo the first of these parts, the float, floats on the surface, and the torpedo itself, which is suspended beneath the surface, beyond the range of machine guns and ordinary artillery, is set in motion by means of the motive power communicated through the cable, usually, of course, by electricity. This torpedo is usually 28 feet in length, 18 inches in diameter, and is thus projected by the force applied from the storage batteries or through a dynamo on shore into the stream or into the harbor as the case may be, and by the force communicated through the cable is directed hither and thither, straight forward, to the right, or to the left, is made to dive, to rise, and to be controlled almost absolutely by means of the electrical current.

Now, Mr. Chairman, what sort of a thing is that? It is not a fort; it is not a fortification. General Abbot, in his communication, which has already been read, says that it is a weapon. It is a weapon; it is an arm. To what branch does this weapon or arm pertain? Why, Mr. Chairman, we have decided that over and over again for the last twenty years. It is the arm of the Engineer Corps. We have established. twenty years. It is the arm of the Engineer Corps. We have established at Willets Point, New York, a torpedo station. There a portion of the Engineer Corps of the United States is stationed, I think four companies, and they are drilled and practiced in the use of this weapon. It is exactly as the artillery are drilled in the use of a field battery, or the infantry in the use of a muzzle-loading or a breech-loading gun, or the cavalry in the use of the saber or the carbine. The Engineer Corps is drilled in the use of the torpedo.

Now, a torpedo is an arm. It is a weapon. It is a weapon and a projectile combined. It is a weapon which carries its projectile with t in the form of a charge of three or four hundred pounds of the highest explosive. Now, the question arises under the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, whether or not it is germane in this bill, and whether it falls within the jurisdiction of this committee. It absolutely does, and absolutely it must unless it is a fort or a fortification. What is a fortification? A fortification is a strong place, an inclosure, an earthwork, a work of masonry, or something of that kind, and usually armed with guns.

Now, let us see what jurisdiction the present committee has in reference to this sort of thing. Under the rules we find that everything that pertains to the military establishment, including the Engineer Corps, is committed to the Committee on Military Affairs; we find that everything pertaining to the public defense, including appropriation for its support, except the one item, the fortifications, is also com-mitted to the Committee on Military Affairs. We also find by a reso-lution of this House, reported from the Committee on Ways and Means, that so much of the annual message of the President of the United States to Congress at the present session as relates to the Army of the United States, including appropriations therefor, and to provide for the armament for the defense of the seacoast, is committed to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Now, I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that under these three heads, providing for the military establishment and the support of the Army, the public defense, and the defense of the seacoast, under these three heads incontestably the matter of movable torpedoes controllable from the shore is embraced. It is embraced under the military establishment as appurtenent to the Engineer Corps, who are the proper branch of the service for the operation of this weapon or arm. It is embraced in the defense of the seacoast. It must come under the one or the other of these heads, and both of these heads are proper to the Committee on Military Affairs and are germane to this bill. But it is said by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr RANDALL] that during this present session of Congress when the fortifications bill was under consideration there was reported a provision for torpedoes and the then presiding officer held that the committee had jurisdiction and refused to strike the appropriation out.

Mr. RANDALL. And the gentleman from Illinois himself [Mr. TOWNSHEND] made the point of order, I believe.

Mr. CUTCHEON. It is undoubtedly true that there was such a provision in that bill; but, Mr. Chairman, it is possible that upon a review of the authorities and a better understanding of the question the present Chairman might hold differently. I reason in that way for this reason: I find that the provision in that fortification bill was as fol-

For torpedoes for harbor defense: For the purchase of submarine mines and necessary appliances to operate them, for closing the channels leading to our principal scaports, for naval casements [meaning casemates], and cable galleries to render it possible to operate submarine mines, etc., $330,000.

That evidently relates to fixed mines, because it provides for casemates on the shore, for cable galleries, and for everything that is appurtenant to fixed mines; but there is nothing in the bill about movable torpedoes controllable from the shore.

Now, whatever may be the case in regard to fixed mines, whether they may constitute a variety of fortification or not, it is impossible, within the limits of common sense, to contend that a mere weapon, a projectile that is controllable and moved at will for a distance of 2 mile is a fortification. It is a weapon. I reiterate, then, first, that this belongs to this bill because it is appurtenant to military establishment Military Committee because it pertains to the public defense, and is not a fortification. In the third place, it belongs to the Military Committee because it has been expressly committed to that committee by the judgment and order of the House in the resolution reported from the Committee on Ways and Means; and in the fourth place, it belongs to that committee because it is simply a weapon and does come within the invidence of the Committee of

Mr. RANDALL. I simply want to say that the decision in the first session of this Congress was exactly upon this question of torpedoes.

The point of order was raised by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND], and after discussion he withdrew the point, the effect of the withdrawal being to avoid a decision; but the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TURNER] renewed the point of order, whereupon the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Springer], made the decision. Then, in the present Congress, when the fortification bill was up, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Townshend] made the point of order against that bill as to the torpedo service, and he was overruled and a decision was made in harmony with the former decisions, and the gentleman did not appeal.

mony with the former decisions, and the gentleman did not appeal.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. My friend does not want to do me injustice?

Mr. RANDALL. No, I do not.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. In the question which was before the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole there was nothing at all pertaining to an appropriation for movable torpedoes. It was not in the fortifications bill at all. And therefore he did not pass on the point now raised.

Mr. RANDALL. It was.
Mr. CUTCHEON. The movable torpedo was not in that bill.
Mr. RANDALL. I want to tell my friend from Illinois [Mr. Town-SHEND] and my friend from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] that the way to reach their object is to change the rule, and I hope it will be made more explicit.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. There is no need to change the rule.
Mr. CUTCHEON. Not for this point.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. I want to correct the gentleman as to what he says about the decision at this session of Congress. At this session the question has not been passed upon, because the provision was not in the bill to which he refers.

Mr. RANDALL. The provision was identical with this.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I say that it was not. I have here a copy of the bill. If the gentleman will ask the clerk of his committee he will tell him that there was no appropriation in that bill for this purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. There was no appropriation this year, because the officers of the Engineer Corps told us it was not advisable to make any.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But you said awhile ago that upon my making the point of order it was ruled out by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], who was then presiding.

Mr. RANDALL. I think yet that you did make the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I made it upon another item, but not upon this

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Illinois may of course place himself in whatever position he chooses as to his object in making the point, but I think I do not do him injustice when I say that his point of order related to the torpedo service.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But I do not want the gentleman to put me in a false position. I state again most emphatically that when the gentleman from Georgia passed upon the point of order I raised, there was no such item in the bill as the gentleman from Pennsylvania now suggests, and no such item was passed upon. In the last session my colleague from Illinois [Mr. Springer] passed upon an entirely different question from this.

Before the Chair decides the question of order-Mr. SPINOLA. The CHAIRMAN. How long a time does the gentleman desire to

Mr. SPINOLA. Not a very great while. This is a subject of the utmost importance to my constituents, and therefore I ask the indulgence of the Chair as well as of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will indulge the gentleman, but he again expresses regret, as he did at the beginning, that this discussion was not confined to the real point at issue.

Mr. SPINOLA. Of course not, because the letter of General Casey was sent up and read, on which the whole debate has taken place.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will indulge the gentleman for a rea-

Mr. SPINOLA. I called upon General Casey personally in regard to this very question; I submitted to him the very provision contained in the bill; and here is his own proposition in his own handwriting. He modified the measure submitted; and here is the modified proposition as he wrote it out.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. From whom is that proposition?

Mr. SPINOLA. From General Casey, Chief of Engineers; and acting upon his suggestion, acting upon his statement, I moved in the committee that this proposition, as submitted by him, be inserted in

Mr. RANDALL. I am authorized by General Casey to state that he never did say what the gentleman is now trying to construe him to

Mr. SPINOLA. Is the gentleman from Pennsylvania familiar with

Mr. SPINOLA. Is the gentleman from Pennsylvania lamiliar with the haadwriting of General Casey?

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, yes, I have been familiar with it for ten years.

Mr. SPINOLA. Then read this letter. I do not care how General Casey undertakes to dodge the issue. He shall not dodge it with me; he may with some gentlemen; but I will not permit him to make a statement to me, and put it in black and white, and then undertake to flee away from it under any pretext whatever.

Mr. RANDALL. If the gentleman knew General Casey as well as I do, he would know that the general is a man who never does anything except in a straightforward way.

Mr. SPINOLA. I have said nothing that will reflect upon General Casey, except as I have stated it. [Laughter.] The fact, Mr. Chairman, most speak for itself. I am not speaking for General Casey; he has spoken in his own handwriting; there it is [exhibiting a letter].

Mr. RANDALL. What is the date of that?

Mr. SPINOLA. I submitted this proposition to him, and he made those alterations, which have been embodied in the bill so as to conform to what he wrote. Here is what he stated; and it is embedied exactly in the bill before us, embracing some erasures and some insertions, as compared with the original proposition.

Now, I do not know by what authority General Casey has the right to send the letter here which has been read to-day. Has the Secretary of War spoken on this subject? Why did not my honorable friend from Pennsylvania, for whom I entertain so high a respect, write to the Secretary of War? Mr. RANDALL. I wanted to get what I thought the best informa-

Mr. SPINOLA. Oh, yes, the gentleman goes to a subordinate; he does not go to the highest officer; he goes to a clerk. When I have business with the colonel I am not going to undertake to transact it with

Mr. RANDALL. Our Secretary of War is a lawyer, while General Casey has been educated specially in reference to these matters

Mr. SPINOLA. The Secretary of War is the head and front of that Department. General Casey is one of the subordinates. As I said a moment ago, I am not going to consult a corporal when my business is with the colonel.

Now, sir, this scheme of fixed mines has been a pet of our friends who have reached public life through West Point. They have spent hundreds of thousands of dollars in trying to perfect it. It is a scheme of theirs that they do not want to surrender, and they never will surrender it so long as we keep on giving them money to continue their experiments. They have been engaged upon this scheme—how long? In the Forty-first Congress $145,000 was appropriated for the purpose of testing these fixed mines; and this matter has been under the jurisdiction of the Chief Engineer and his subordinates, including General Casey, from that day until this. So they went on, as will appear by the following statement:

Appropriation for fixed mines.

The Government has spent $300,000 for English cables which are now on hand and utterly useless, in fact it amounts to just so much money thrown away. From the Forty-first Congress to the present time the Treasury has been called upon to pay for experimenting on fixed mines as a public defense

An aggregate of $1,157,000 of the public money has been expended to gratify the whims of some scientific men, I do not care whether they are engineers from West Point or where they come from. I know they have an idea they are better than anybody else. There may be twentyfive hundred of these men in this country who think they have all the inventive genius of the United States. Is it reasonable now to suppose that these twenty-five hundred men can compete successfully with the twenty million of freemen, every one of whom is a man of genius? I will read some extracts from reports to the Secretary of War:

[Report of Chief Engineer, 1880, General H. G. Wright, to Secretary of War, volume 2, part 1, page 58.]

During the year an elaborate set of experiments has been undertaken with an electrical fish torpedo, designed to be started by electricity from shore; it is the invention of Mr. W. S. Sims, and was offered for trial by Mr. W. F. Bridge, both of New York. Preliminary trials at the dock and in motion were made with an experimental torpedo, which has been gradually developed and improved by the owners.

The results showed the device to possess merits of so high an order that a contract was entered into with Mr. Bridge to supply the Government with a new one, including all the improvements which have been suggested by his long series of experiments.

The subject for most elaborate investigation, however, has been the perfecting of Sim's movable fish torpedo, for use in connection with our stationary mines. During the past year attention has been chiefly devoted to testing the modification in model suggested by trials of 1881; to testing the strength of the torpedo to resist concussion against floating obstructions; and to determining by trial whether the provisions to neutralize the fire of artillery and machine guns are effective.

Entirely satisfactory results have been reached in each of these respects. (Page 55.)

In respect to Sims's torpedo, only the electrical problem demands further study.

* * The speed thus far attained with the 1-mile boat is about 10 miles per hour; and when the motor is perfected a marked increase is expected. (Note by W. S. Sims.) The motor and electric cable have been improved by Mr. Sims (with the assistance of Professor T. A. Edison) at his own expense of some tento fifteen thousand dollars, and at this date show an increase in horse-power of 600 to 800 per cent.; that is, from former 6 horse-power to 36 horse-power, same weight and size; from 10 horse-power (2-mile boat) to 80 horse-power, same weight, and cables to correspond.

The invention supplies a useful auxillary to our stationary mines, and should form a part of the material provided for the defense of all our more important harbors.

THE PRESENT CONDITION OF FIX MINES.

[Report of Board of Engineers to the Secretary of War, volume 2, part 1, page 57.] [Report of Board of Engineers to the Secretary of War, volume 2, part 1, page 57.]

Fix mines, unless the electric cables connecting the mines with the casemates containing the batteries, etc., are so introduced as to be secure against bombardment, a single fortunate shot may open the whole channel to the enemy. * * It is useless to provide mines without also constructing the shafts, galleries, and bomb-proofs necessary for their efficient service. * * *

Page 11: Heavy mortars must be placed in large numbers to command all those positions where an enemy is likely to anchor within range, either for the purpose of tampering with or destroying our torpedo lines.

Note.—This report admits that the fix mines are useless unless they are defended by shore batteries or movable fish torpedoes.

FIX MINES-ARE THEY PERFECT?

Attention is invited to the estimates for torpedoes. For the present our principal reliance for harbor defense in case of war must rest upon fix mines. It is very necessary that there should be a full supply of those on hand at the principal scaports of the nation. * * * These experiments (with fix mines) have been in progress for some years (Since 1870, at least; $1,000,000 expense), and a system of fix mines has been developed and gradually improved until it bids fair before long, if funds are available, to reach the highest point of excellence. cellence.

First, Years 1883 and 1884	$75,000
Movable torpedoes purchased	17,500
Second. Appropriated years 1885 and 1886	75,000
Applied under contract	43,500
(of this nothing has been expended)	75,000

In all  $$225{,}000$  appropriated, of which only  $$85{,}000$  has been used for the purchase of movable torpedoes.

Why, sir, it is a farce I have to talk in this way about fix mines for the protection of our seacoast cities and harbors. Our great chieftain from my own city, for whom the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr.

RANDALL] entertained such a high regard, and who reciprocated it so fully, Samuel J. Tilden, has spoken to this House on this subject.

I am sorry the gentleman from Pennsylvania has raised this point of order on this item of the bill which makes an appropriation for the protection of our seacoast cities which we desire. I hope it will not go out on a technicality.

I shall occupy the attention of the committee but a few minutes longer and will then yield the floor, because, although I would like to have a half hour on this subject, I presume I must content myself with four or five minutes.

This engineer states further, Mr. Chairman, speaking of the fish torpedo:

The invention supplies a useful auxiliary to our stationary mines, and should form a part of the material provided for the defense of our more important har-

What becomes of General Casey's position in the face of all this cumulative evidence of the Army engineers? All of the other engineers disagree with him, and take opposite views from those which he advances. He stands alone and unsupported in his position. He is wedded to fixed mines, and, Mr. Chairman, if he is to keep up with the progress of the times he must cut himself loose from his moornings and drift out into deeper water if he desires longer to receive the admiration of this House

But the Board of Engineers further state:

The results of this investigation have been to convince the board that this torpedo should form a part of our system of harbor defenses. The board recommends that the proposition of Mr. Sims be accepted.

Now let us see what General Newton says. His name, Mr. Chairman, is familiar here, I presume; it certainly is familiar throughout this country as an officer of experience and ability. He says:

The fish torpedo should form a recognized part of our system of harbor defense, and in the present incomplete condition of our batteries, and a total lackt of heavy rifled ordnance, their importance for us is greatly enhanced. * * * In fixed mines, unless the electric cables connecting the mines with the casemates containing the batteries are so introduced as to be secure against bombardment, a single fortunate shot may open up the whole channel to the enemy.

Remember that; a single shot may remove the whole of the fixed torpedoes and open up your submarine mines so as to let the enemy's vessel pass through without harm. In addition to that, in a fog or at vessel pass through without harm. In addition to that, in a fog or at night, all their communications with the shore can be easily cut so as to render them entirely harmless or useless. The same thing has been urged against the dynamite gun, exactly, that has been urged against this class of torpedoes. That gun, though, Mr. Chairman, in the face of the objections urged against it, has become a fixture in this country. It is here to stay, from all accounts, and from the trials and experiments that have taken place it will not depart by anybody's bidding. Nor will the fish torpedo go away in my judgment. We drove the Gatling gun from this country, which is now wholly and absolutely the property of the British Government; and yet it is one of the best guns ever made. The Hotchkiss gun shared the same fate, We were too late, too dilatory. We had the chance and dallied with it too long. it too long.

We did not avail ourselves of the chance that was offered. waited until other governments took it from us, and by our dilatoriness we sacrificed that great weapon and turned it over for the safety and protection of foreign governments. Now, if we stand still and permit this torpedo to go abroad, the time will come when the whole American people will rise up and regret it.

In addition, sir, to show conclusively that this can not belong to the fortifications bill, let me suggest a case: Suppose that we should establish a floating station 15, 50, or 100 miles from shore and arm it with fish-torpedoes. Would anybody claim that would come under the head of fortifications? Suppose we knew that there was a hostile fleet approaching our shores, and we prepared a fleet of our own gunboats, armed them with this weapon, and sent them out one or two hundred miles to sea to engage the enemy; would that bring it under the head of fortifications, and give the jurisdiction of the subject to the Appropriations Committee? I think that position would hardly be mainpropriations committee? I think that position would nardly be maintained. I think the intelligent answer would be that it would leave it right where it is now, under the jurisdiction of the Military Committee. Such floating stations as these would be able to keep off an enemy's fleet from our shores and sink or render their ironclads powerless to do us harm.

I hold, therefore, sir, that the point of order can not be sustained and that the jurisdiction of this subject is unquestionably in the Military Committee.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that several other gentlemen desire to discuss the point of order, I move that the committee now rise.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the Chair decide it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Other members of the committee desire to be heard; but if the gentleman wishes to remain here for two or three hours longer, I have no objection.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not propose to enter into further discussion, but suggested that, as I presumed the Chair was ready to decide the question, a ruling be had.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair expressed his desire at the beginning of the discussion that it should be confined to the point of order. The merits of the question have been trenched upon, and the Chair has not felt like closing the discussion in view of the fact that the merits were first discussed by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RANDALL. I spoke for that about five minutes against at least an hour and a half on the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair states, however, that he is ready to pass upon the question of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman from Pennsylvania was warned not to open the question of the merits until the point of order was disposed of, and disregarded it. He brought on the discussion and had

mr. RANDALL. I occupied but five minutes in the discussion.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is not a question as to the length of time. The gentleman opened the discussion and the members of the Committee on Military Affairs desire to be heard, and I beg that they may have that privilege.

Mr. CUTCHEON. In the remarks which I had the honor to submit I confined myself strictly to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understood.

Mr. CUTCHEON. And if the merits are to be gone into, I would like to be heard further on that point.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will announce that in view of the fact that much more time has been consumed by the members of the Committee on Military Affairs on the merits of the question than was consumed by the Committee on Appropriations he can not therefore hear any further discussion upon the merits of the question; but if there are gentlemen who insist upon presenting further arguments upon the point of order the Chair will hear them.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. McMillin having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12383) making appropriations for the support of the Army, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A bill (S. 3779) for the relief of Frederick Kress; and

A bill (S. 3865) to provide for writs of error on appeals to the Supreme Court of the United States in all cases involving the question of the jurisdiction of the courts below.

It further announced the passage without amendment of the bill (H. R. 4496) to authorize and empower the Mount Carmel Development Company to draw water from the Wabash River or its tributaries in the county of Wabash and State of Illinois.

war with Mexico with amendment, and requested a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. HAWLEY, Mr. MANDERSON, and Mr. COCKRELL as conferees on its part.

It also announced the passage of the bill (H. R. 3312) to transfer certain counties from the southern judicial district to the northern district in the State of Georgia, and to divide the northern district in said State into two, to be known as the western and eastern divisions of said district, and for other purposes, with an amendment, and requested a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. Wilson of Iowa, Mr. Brown, and Mr. Frye as conferees on its part.

It further announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of the conference committees on the bill (S. 1305) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, and on the bill (H. R. 331) for the relief of David Meriwether.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CLEMENTS. I am directed by the Committee on Appropriations to report back the bill (H. R. 11651) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia, with Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills, received yesterday from the House of Representatives, were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs:

A bill (H. R. 7777) to provide for the sale of lands patented to certain members of the Flathead band of Indians in Montana Territory, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 11128) for the disposition of the agricultural lands embraced within the limits of the Pipestone Indian reservation in Min-

The bill (H. R. 12292) to amend sections 851, 856, 857, 861, and 862, Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the District of Columbia, was read twice by its title.

Mr. HARRIS. I have compared that bill from the House of Representatives with a bill upon the same subject that the Senate passed some ten days or two weeks ago, and they are precisely the same in every respect, except two amendments that were made in the Senate on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. The clerks have those amendments, and as I do not see the Senator in his seat, and they are questions which the Senate has already decided, I believe I shall ask the Senate to adopt the amendments the Senate made to the Senate bill and dispose of the House bill this morning.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that the bill ought to be printed, and we should see what the amendments are. A bill so important should take the usual course

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, if there be no objection.

The bill (H. R. 11777) granting the right of way to the Fort Smith, Paris and Dardanelle Railway Company to construct and operate a railroad, telegraph, and telephone line from Fort Smith, Ark., through the Indian Territory, to or near Baxter Springs, in the State of Kansas, was read twice by its title.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I ask the Senate to take this bill up for immediate consideration. There was reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs the identical bill that now comes from the other House, with the exception of two or three words, which I will ask the Senate to change in the House bill to conform to the Senate bill on its passage. A similar bill has been reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, and I ask the Senate to consider the bill at this time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I must object, Mr. President.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. EDMUNDS. The bill ought to be printed.

It ought to be printed and have the amendment put in in the regular way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, if there be no objection.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I will state to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Sherman], who I understood to object to the present consideration of the bill, that it has been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with a variation of three words only,

Mr. SHERMAN. The shortest way is to let the bill go to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and on being reported back it can be passed as well, and a conference can be obtained between the two Houses if

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. If there is any objection, of course I can not insist upon the bill being considered now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against the repeal of the interstate-commerce law; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

I move that the petition, which, as I stated, is signed by all the principal packing-houses in Kansas City, be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CHANDLER. I present a memorial of the Republican State central committee of Louisiana, authenticated by the signature of William Viger, corresponding secretary, in which, after a preamble, they say that, representing and speaking for the Republican party of that State, they earnestly recommend and memorialize the Senate of the United States to adopt a resolution pending before the Senate for the investigation of the election in Louisiana in April last. The committee also state that it is confident that the facts which will be adduced by the investigation will show that the State election held on April 17, 1888, which included the election of a General Assembly for the State of Louisiana, was not conducted according to the letter or spirit of the Constitution of the United States or of the constitution and laws of the State of Louisiana, and that a government republican in form does not exist in Louisiana to-day, and did not exist at the time of the alleged election of two United States Senators in June last.

I move that the memorial be printed and lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. TURPIE. I present a petition very numerously signed by manufacturers, wholesale dealers, and commercial travelers of the State of Indiana, praying for the adoption of the following amendment to the interstate-commerce law:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to prohibit any common arrier from giving reduced rates to commercial travelers, whether employer or employé, who travels to sell merchandise for a wholesale business, taking orders from dealers for goods for subsequent delivery.

I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Interstate Commerce, and I trust that committee will give it early and favorable consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SABIN presented the petition of Rev. J. M. Smith and 25 others (12 voters and 14 women), citizens of Hancock, Minn., and the petition of W. S. ### DISTRICT POLICE-COURT JURY.

Mr. FAULKNER. I am instructed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom were referred the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3132) to provide for trial by jury in the police court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, to report back the bill and amendments with the recommendation that the Senate non-concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives, and ask for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. FAULKNER, Mr. SPOONER, and Mr. FARWELL were appointed.

TRUSTEES OF DISTRICT CORPORATIONS.

Mr. HARRIS. I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11693) to amend section 555, Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia, to report it without amendment.

The bill is a single paragraph and makes but a slight change in the existing law, authorizing corporators to appoint any number of trustees from three to fifteen. The existing law limits the number to from three to nine. I ask that the Senate consider the bill at this time.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to amend section 555 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia by striking out the word "nine" and inserting the word "fifteen" in lieu thereof;

The stock, property, and concerns of such company shall be managed by not less than three or more than fifteen trustees, who shall respectively be stockholders, and a majority citizens of the District, and shall, except the first year, be annually elected by the stockholders, at such time and place as shall be determined by the by-laws of the company.

Mr. PLATT. What company does the bill refer to?
Mr. HARRIS. It is an amendment of the general incorporation law of the District of Columbia.

Mr. PLATT. It refers to all companies? Mr. HARRIS. To all companies.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PAYMENT OF GOVERNMENT CLAIMS.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 34) to extend the time for filing certain claims for compensation for horses and other property lost in the military service of the United States, to report the same back to the Senate, and to recommend the passage of a substitute for the bill. I ask that the substitute may be read. It is to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert what I have written.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. The amendment will be read, subject to objection.

The CHIEF CLERK. The committee report to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

enacting clause and to insert:

That no statute of limitation heretofore enacted shall be held or construed as a bar to or to prohibit the adjudication of any claim of any officer, soldier, or citizen of the United States for money due or for property lost in the military or naval service of the United States in any case in which the proper official records in the War and Treasury Departments, or in either of such Departments, show the amount of money due and unpaid or the facts from which the amount of money due and unpaid or the facts from which the kind and amount of property lost; and it shall be the duty of the accounting officers of the Treasury Department in every such case, when brought to their notice either by the claimant or his legal representative or by an examination of such official records, to proceed to adjudicate such claim or claims under the laws governing the adjustment and allowance of such claim or claims and ascertain the amount and report the same to the Secretary of the Treasury, to be by him reported to Congress at the beginning of each regular session.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Missouri if the bill includes soldiers who served in the volunteer service in the Indian wars and whose service has been recognized by the United

Mr. COCKRELL. This is simply to establish the principle that the accounting officers of the Treasury, whenever our records, kept by ourselves, show that a sum of money is due to any claimant, soldier, civilian, or any one else, shall proceed to adjudicate that claim and report it to Congress for payment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Without any reference to time?

Mr. COCKRELL. Without any reference to time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then I am opposed to it. I should like to see that bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am in favor of the bill, I think, but I should like to have the privilege of looking at it. Is there objection?
Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly, I have no objection to that.

Mr. MITCHELL Let it be printed and go over.
Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly. I want to state that the principle of it is that where we keep the records, where we keep the accounts with officers, soldiers, sailors, marines, or civilians, and our records show that we owe a man a certain sum of money, instead of concealing that fact, we owe a man a certain sum of money, instead of concealing that fact, instead of suppressing it, instead of making it almost a misslemeanor for a clerk, an employé of the Government, to tell the claimant that a sum of money is due him, the accounting officers of the Treasury shall be required to take it up, adjudicate it, and report it to Congress.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the principle of the bill is right.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object to its present consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Cal-

CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS.

Mr. EVARTS. Perhaps I may properly give notice now that on Monday next, during the morning hour, I shall ask the Senate to take up the resolution directing the Committee on Privileges and Elections to revise the existing law regulating the election of members of Congress, etc., following a report made concerning what are known as the Texas outrages.

Mr. SPOONER. I gave notice a day or two ago that I would at the proper time move the reference of the resolution—

Mr. COCKRELL. We can not hear. I did not hear one word that the Senator from New York said. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair appeals to the Senate to be in order. Senators will please be seated and abstain from audible conversation

Mr. COKE. I should like to hear what the Senator from New York said.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York gave notice that upon Monday next he would call up the resolution relating to the Texas outrages reported from the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The Scnator from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. COKE. Before that resolution is called up I hope that the testimony in the case will be placed upon the desks of members of the Senate

Mr. SPOONER. I gave notice some days ago that I would at the proper time call up the resolution introduced by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] to investigate the condition of the suffrage for the purpose of moving its reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I ask that the resolution may be taken up at this time, to-gether with the amendment to that resolution offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr.CHANDLER], to enable me to make the motion that the matter be referred to the Committee on Privileges and

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent

Mr. PLUMB. Has the order of morning business progressed until it has reached resolutions?

The PRESIDENT pro lempore. It has not been concluded. The motion can be entertained at this time only by unanimous consent,

Mr. PLUMB. I think we had better conclude the formal morning

Mr. SPOONER. The motion involves no debate.

Mr. PLUMB. But why should we not introduce bills and go on with the regular routine business of the morning hour?

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator from Kansas objects—
Mr. PLUMB. I do object, but I want to say that I would be glad to have the Senator come in before prayers if he would like to anticito have the senator come in before prayers if he would like to anticipate the entire morning business.

Mr. SPOONER. If I had made the application before prayers the Senator from Kansas would not have been here to object.

Mr. PLUMB. The Senator from Wisconsin would not be here to make the application.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Bills and joint resolutions are next in order.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 3933) to create a port of entry at Blaine, in Washington Territory; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3934) pensioning soldiers who served in Indian wars; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3935) for the relief of George Hunter, late captain of Company A, Columbia County, Washington Territory Volunteers; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EVARTS introduced a bill (S. 3936) granting an increase of pension to William Hunt; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PADDOCK. I desire to introduce a bill which is very short, and I should like to have it read for the information of the Senate and lie on the table. I shall ask at no-distant day to make some observations

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The Senator from Nebraska introduces a bill, which will be read at length for

The bill (S. 3937) in relation to the officers and employés of the railway mail service was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be itenacted, etc., That the provisions of the act of January 16, 1883, entitled "An act to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States," shall not be construed as embracing within the scope of its operations the officers and employés of the railway mail service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will lie on the table. Mr. GORMAN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 136) to enable the United States to accept a present of the springs of spa water at Bladensburgh, Md.; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SPECIAL ELECTORAL MESSENGER TO FLORIDA.

Mr. PASCO introduced a bill (S. 3932) to provide for the expenses, compensation, or mileage of a special messenger sent by the Secretary of State to the State of Florida for the certificate of the electoral vote of that State of A. D. 1888, for President and Vice-President of the United States, in pursuance with the provisions of section 141 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act approved October 19, 1888; which was read twice by title. Mr. HOAR. Let the bill be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. Does the Senator from Massachusetts ask for its reading?

Mr. HOAR. I thought that probably it was a bill which would be of two or three lines and the Senate could pass it at once without reference, but if the Chair thinks it had better go to the committee I have no objection. The PRESIDENT protempore. The Chair was merely ordering the bill referred in accordance with the rules of the Senate. The Chair will entertain the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. HOAR. I ask that the bill be read at length. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $225, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay the compensation, expenses, or mileage, as the case may be, of a messenger to the State of Florida to receive from the United States district judge the certificate of the electoral vote of that State of January 14, A.D. 1889, for President and Vice-President of the United States deposited with such judge under the provisions of section 140 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as amended by the act approved October 19, 1888. The sum hereby appropriated shall be immediately available and shall be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State.

The PRESIDENT was tempore. Does the Senetor from Massachus.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts ask unanimous consent that the bill may be now considered?

Mr. HOAR. It occurred to me that the bill would probably go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections and it might require a special meeting, which would be inconvenient to Senators, and as it was clearly a bill that ought to pass, the Senate would pass it without a reference. I make that request.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. PASCO. I wish to state that in preparing the bill I followed the precedents in the case of the electoral votes of Iowa and Oregon four years ago. I have no objection to the immediate consideration of the bill if it is so recommended by the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

By unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. DANIEL submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GORMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SHERMAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

FORT OMAHA, NEBR.

Mr. MANDERSON submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved. ### NAVAL OFFICERS' CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. CHAND-LER] in relation to naval officers' claims, coming over from yesterday. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, submitted by Mr. CHANDLER January 25, 1889, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be instructed to make inquiry and ascertain the amount of the claims of officers of the Navy which have been already presented and paid and the amount which will probably hereafter be presented for payment for arrears of pay for allowances due such officers, known as longevity, mileage, and training-ship and receiving-ship claims; and to report said amounts to the Senate with the opinion of the committee whether any legislation is advisable in order to prevent any further allowance of such claims; and also to inquire and report whether or not unusual and improper facilities have recently been allowed in the office of the Fourth Auditor of the Treasury to altorneys or claim agents engaged in presenting training-ship and receiving-ship claims.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

CHANGES IN DISTRICT OFFICERS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate the resolution offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. Chand-LER] in relation to the removal of officers and employés under the control of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, coming over from a former day. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the resolution, submitted by Mr. CHANDLER

February 5, 1889, as follows:

Resolved, That the commissioners of the District of Columbia be directed to furnish to the Senate a list embracing those officers and employés (not workmen or laborers) under the control of said commissioners in any branch of the District government who have been changed since March 4, 1885, giving in each case the name, office, date of change, name of new appointee, and the reasons for the change so far as they appear of record.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

RAILWAY POSTAL CLERKS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a resolution offered by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE], coming over from yesterday.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to,

as follows:

That the Postmaster-General be requested to furnish the Senate, at his earliest practicable convenience, with a statement showing the number of changes of railway postal clerks, by quarterly periods, occurring from January 1,1885, to December 31,1888, with the reasons for such changes; the said statement to be in tabular form, similar to that hereto annexed.

WALTER SNIFFENS.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, on the 8th of March last I introduced a bill, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Walter Snif-A bill has now been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, and passed, which is a general bill on that subject. As I desire to withdraw the papers which are filed in the case, in order that the soldier may present them under the general law if it should pass, I ask that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill referred to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut moves that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2251) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Walter Sniffens. It will be so ordered if there be no objection.

Mr. PLATT. Now, I move that Walter Sniffens be permitted to withdraw his papers filed with the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HARRIS. I see the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Plumb] is now in his seat. If he is ready to offer the amendment he suggested to the pension appropriation bill, I should be glad to have the matter disposed of this morning. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the matter, and let us dispose of it,

Mr. ALLISON. I would ask the Senator from Tennessee to allow that to go over until 2 o'clock, as there is a special matter to come up meanwhile.

Mr. HARRIS. Until after 2 o'clock?

Until after 2 o'clock, as there is a special matter to Mr. ALLISON. come up and be disposed of this morning.

Mr. HARRIS. Certainly; but I hope the Senator from Kansas will be here at that time.

Mr. PLUMB. I have my amendment ready.

STATE OF THE SUFFRAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If there be none, that order is closed. Pursuant to the order of yesterday the Senate resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1368) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the resolution introduced by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. Gibson] for the purpose of enabling me to move its reference.

Mr. ALLISON. If there is not to be any debate I shall not object.

I reserve the right, if any debate springs up, to object.

Mr. SPOONER. If there is any debate, I shall not press the matter. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the pending business be informally laid aside for the purpose of considering a resolution the title of which will be

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. I should like to have that resolution read. I wish to make some remarks on it.

The PRESIDENT protempore. That would be in the nature of debate. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1368) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes

Mr. DANIEL. I am informed by gentlemen around me that there was an understanding that the resolution should not be debated on the motion to refer. Of course I will not violate that understanding.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution mentioned by the Senator from Louisiana will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, if there be no objection.

Mr. SPOONER. I will say to the Senator from Virginia, if I may be permitted, that there is another resolution upon the same subject which is to be called up Monday, upon which he can submit the remarks he desires to make.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Clark, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2511) to provide for the disposal of certain public lands of the United States under the provisions of the homestead laws only, with amendments in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11651) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, and agreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill with amendments; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. CLEMENTS, Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL, and Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3312) to transfer certain counties from the southern judicial district to the northern district in the State of Georgia, and to divide the northern district in said State into two, to be known as the western and eastern divisions of said district, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 331) for the relief of David Meriwether.

The message further announced that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1860) to amend section 683 of the Revised Statutes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 4496) to authorize and empower the Mount Carmel Development Company to draw water from the Wabash River or its tributaries in the county of Wabash and State of Illinois;

A bill (S. 3869) to secure the maintenance of public order during the inauguration ceremonies of 1889, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 1405) to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nica-

DES MOINES RIVER LANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the considera-tion of the bill (H. R. 1368) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to inquire whether this is the same bill which was passed at a former session of the Senate and vetoed by the President, and if not in what respect this bill differs from the bill which was formerly passed by the Senate?

Mr. PLUMB. The bill is the same except that it is a rather more limited bill. It does not provide for the rights of persons to whom assignments of claims for these lands were made. With that exception it is the same bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The bill is narrower in its scope.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I do not rise to propose an amendment, but to the discussion of the bill itself, if it be now in order; and I would first ask that Senate bill 1469, which is Calendar No. 148, a bill introduced by me and referred to the Committee on Public Lands and reported adversely, may be read for information, omitting the preamble, which is not necessary for the intelligence of the Senate on the subject

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read if there be no objection, omitting the preamble.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the United States will indemnify and pay to the settlers or their heirs and legal representatives, who in good faith entered upon, for the purpose of purchasing, pre-empting, or securing homesteads upon any lands lying along the river Des Moines, in the State of Iowa, above and north of the Raecoon Forks, which were listed and certified to the State of Iowa under an act approved August 8, 1846, entitled "An act granting certain lands to the Territory of Iowa in aid of the improvement of the navigation of the Des Moines River in said territory," and which said lands were afterwards, namely, on the 18th of May, 1858, sold and conveyed to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company by an indenture of that date, signed by Ralph P. Low, governor, and attested by Elijah Sells, secretary of state, by John Davis, his deputy; and that the indemnity and compensation shall embrace:

First. Any and all moneys paid by said settlers to the Government for certificates of entry or patents, or both, including fees paid to the officers of the land offices in relation to the same.

Second. All reasonable sums paid by said settlers to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company, or to its grantees, to purchase in the outstanding title and secure lands upon which they had settled or located, or which they had entered.

had entered.

title and secure lands upon which they had settled or located, or which they had entered.

Third, Any direct and immediate damages or losses sustained by any of said settlers who have been unable to buy in said outstanding title, and have in consequence been dispossessed and lost their possession and improvements.

Fourth. Any other damages, losses, or injury sustained by said settlers, which, upon just and equitable consideration, ought to be the subject of indemnity.

SEC. 2. That this act shall not extend to any settlement upon or entry of any of said lands made after January 1, 1880.

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of enabling the Government to extend such indemnity and make compensation, the President of the United States is hereby authorized to appoint three commissioners, who shall ascertain the number of acres and, by appraisement or otherwise, the value thereof, exclusive of improvements; the separate value and character of the improvements of all such lands lying north of Raccoon Forks, on the Des Moines River, in the State of Iowa to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad Company; also what person or persons, as enterers or homestead pre-emptors of any of said lands, have been evicted or dispossessed thereof, and have been compelled to purchase in the outstanding title, and the amount so paid; also who have been unable or unwilling to purchase in said title, and the extent and nature of the improvements lost, and any other data touching the rights of said parties which in the judgment of the commissioners should be considered in determining the measure and extent of indemnity. Said commissioners shall have regard to a report of a commission appointed under an act approved March 3, 1873, chapter 306, Statutes at Large, volume 17; and they shall report all the facts at the commencement of the next session of Congress.

Sec. 4. That said commissioners shall receive each $8 per day during the time they shall be actually engaged in said service.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, the bill which I have had read is controversy, and in substance is the assumption by this Government of proper indemnity of all the claimants and settlers who have supposed that they have been injured by the judicial interpretation and execution of the laws of the United States governing these disputed lands. It will be perceived, then, that I do not lack at all in sympathy for the settlers who are involved in this litigation which concerns land titles, and that I recognize the propriety of this Government, if by its officers in the administration of their duty concerning these lands there have been injuries inflicted in disappointment of the expectations of settlers, making indemnity. With that premise I will now proceed to discuss very briefly the measure itself, which passed the Senate at the last session, and now comes back in the shape of a House bill reproducing the Senate shill with the expectation as I understand it of a sinducing the Senate bill with the exception, as I understand it, of a single amendment.

All the objections to this form of legislation and its substance that have been urged in previous debates in this body and that brought out from the Executive a message vetoing the bill—all these objections, it is admitted, whatever may be their strength and soundness, apply to this bill. There is nothing whatever in any modification of this bill, as I understand it, that exempts it from the objections to the previous bills which have passed the Senate and that which received from the President a veto of its enactment, and therefore I shall not feel justified in protracting this discussion, but shall proceed to insist with as much firmness as is in my power that this bill contravenes the most fundamental principle of the security of title, is an innovation upon our system of legislation, and undertakes a dictation to the judiciary which intolerable in the proper co-ordination of the departments of this

The general nature of the transaction out of which discrepancies of interest have arisen in this disputed territory is this: By a law passed in 1846 the disposition of lands on the Des Moines River below or above and below Raccoon Fork on that river was treated by the administrative officers in the way of recognizing that bill as covering the lands above this fork. The disposition of the land itself was in favor of Iowa toward its internal improvements. Under that bill improvements were made; compensation was made to the improvement company; and the title to this property passed, as was supposed. In 1861 Congress passed a resolution or law confirming that title. In 1873 Congress authorized a commission to inquire into the situation, the number, and the grievances of those who had suffered under this distribution of the land, and reports were made and certain settlements and indemnities were given.

Now, after a series of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in litigation between claimants and tenants, fixing the title of all this property and uniformly settling that title in conformity with the acts of Congress to which I have referred and to the tenants who held under or through the grantees who took from the State of Iowa this property, an attempt now is made to reintroduce into litigation this which ought to have been treated as a settled matter of land titles between the competing claimants.

The first clause shows not only the purpose but shows what must be the judicial effect for the new litigations in court if this enactment can be made and can stand the test of constitutionality. It starts by describing the territory covered by the bill, and disposes of, so far as enactment can dispose of it, the question of title by act of Congress.

That all the lands improperly certified to Iowa by the Department of the Interior under the act of August 8, 1846, as referred to in the joint resolution of March 2, 1861, for which indemnity lands were selected and received by the State of Iowa, as provided in the act of 1862, are, and are hereby deciared to be, public lands of the United States.

Mr. President, that is a disposition of the present title to the lands in whosesoever right and claim they may now rightly rest, and a transfer of it to the United States Government. On this statement and on the reason of this statement there is no more foundation for this transaction by the United States than there would be to expropriate the land of any private citizen in possession of the same. If there be qualifying circumstances that may induce the act of Congress which is proposed, it does not change the nature of the transaction. The title is now somewhere. It is among the disputants under competing claims of settlers, homesteaders who were expecting to complete that title under the general laws of the United States governing that mode of acquiring title, and the grantee of the State of Iowa under the title conferred by the United States upon that State. The origin dates as far back as 1846, now forty-two years ago. The confirmations of 1861 and 1862 by the acts of Congress are now nearly thirty years old. There has been an unbroken series of determinations by the Supreme Court of the United States affirming the title that is deduced under these acts of Congress and under the action of the State of Iowa.

Either those who are to seek benefits under the law of the land before the tribunals of the country have some right of footing now or they have not, and the method by which their footing is to be improved and their attitude for impugning and reversing a series of decisions of the Supreme Court given to them, if it be possible, is under the notion that by act of Congress and by mere force of its legislative power the United States assumes the ownership of these disputed lands. If the bill went no farther, then it would be a question of the increase of the public domain, but the United States does not claim nor does it propose to insist upon any right or claim on its part to one foot of all this land, and the object of this procedure is to give to the United States by its expropriation of title now held a different disposition of all thus acquired, to private and different owners.

As I understand it, there is not a foot of this land that is to remain in the public domain. It is a mere question of a legislative form by which the United States take this property to themselves from those that under the decisions of the Supreme Court are the owners of it, and deliver it to other disputants who have had their litigations there determined adversely.

Mr. PLATT. Do you admit that the United States by this asser-

Mr. FIATI. Do you admit that the United States by this assertion of title can change it?

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I will state what I was proposing to insist upon after showing what the actual nature of this transaction more fully was. I will repeat here what I have said heretofore, that in my humble judgment there is not the least efficacy judicially, or under the law of the land, or under the control of the Constitution, which prohibits the taking of private property for public uses—there is not the least virtue that can maintain a suit for a moment in any court of justice upon this assumption of a right to take this property. What is it proposed to do with the property? Of course if the United States does not get this title its subsequent disposition of it comes to nothing in the confirmation of anybody.

Provided, That the title of all bona fide settlers under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with prior bona fide pre-emption or homestead claimants, are hereby ratified and confirmed and made valid.

So far that seems to look towards confirming the titles made by the Des Moines Improvement Company; but-

Provided further, That the claims of all persons who, with intent, in good faith, to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, entered and remained upon any tract of said land prior to January, 1880, not exceeding 160 acres, are hereby confirmed and made valid in them, or their heirs, and upon due proof thereof, and payment of the usual price or fees, where the same has not been paid, shall be carried to patent.

These persons under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States now have no title, and they can have no title except by what they take by this confirmation, which confirmation must rest entirely upon the proposition that the United States has the jus disponendi, and the jus disponendi rests only upon this act of Congress expropriating property that by the law of the land now belongs to others. And then:

Provided further, That the title of all bona fide claimants under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with persons who, with intent, in good faith, to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, settled upon the said lands prior to January, 1880, are confirmed and

These three provisos are but a circuitous form of legislation for taking the property that under the law of the land as it now stands, and as it has been expounded authoritatively by the most searching investigation and most patient inquiry in a series of decisions by the Supreme Court, which has exhausted the competing rights of the homestead settlers and are the end of that litigation unless this act is to That is the whole question in dispute. It is a circuitous mode of interposing an interruption between the legal rights under judicial ascertainment as they now stand and giving a footing for litigation that is to transfer the title now assured by the decision of the United States to others against whom that right has been decided.

It is of course obvious that this circuitous form can not obscure nor can at all corroborate the process of the first enactment which is to annex to the public domain land that the United States makes no claim to, has no right to, and does not propose to retain for the public benefit one foot of this land.

This bill has been through the two Houses of Congress repeatedly. It has never come to be a law; but in the instance of the last Congress it received the veto of the President and thereby, the Houses not possessing the necessary constitutional majority in its favor, it again failed to become a law.

The Judiciary Committee of this body when it had under its consideration this measure on former occasions of the introduction of the bill pronounced against it; and the reasoning of the President, brief and terse, which was read and considered, presents precisely these legal and constitutional questions and none other. There has not entered into this debate at any stage of it any disparagement of the natural disappointment and the natural desire of some indemnity on the part of these disappointed settlers; but no government, no action, no person is chargeable with any of these incongruities or entanglements about the title except the action either of the State of Iowa or of the United States Government through its administrative officers. Ever since this matter was brought to my notice—for I had never heard of the subject-matter in debate here until after the debate arose—there has never been any disposition on my part, nor have I favored any other disposition of it than that the United States should assume a proper indemnity if an investigation properly conducted should result in presenting to us an equitable, an honest, and a straightforward right under these inchoate or these expectant claims, and I have had read the bill which I introduced and which was reported adversely by the Committee on Public Lands, naturally if they reported this bill, for there is no consistency between them, in order that it might be seen what were remedies that were consistent with law and with the dignity and supremacy of judicial action within its province.

My own judgment, Mr. President, is that the settlers who are sought to be benefited by this act are ill-advised or misconceive their resort. Perhaps indemnity would answer their wishes or their purposes as well as the maintenance of their footing on the land. Nor do I wish to disparage that sentiment and that adherence to what they may suppose their rights; but, in my judgment, this act will only introduce a new series of litigation, which must terminate in an utter disappointment of the plans and hopes of these settlers, and must finally bring us back, after a much protracted litigation and after their hopes are still longer deferred and still more bitterly disappointed, to the only proper remedy which, I submit with great respect to the Senate, is the remedy which is included in the bill I have proposed and have had read for information.

As I have said, this bill from the House of Representatives is substantially that which the Senate passed upon, and I only wish that Senators understand that there is no change, that this is a subversion, as we contend, on our part of the right, the legal right, and is an interference with the freedom of litigation under the law of the land as it now stands, by introducing by mere force of legislation a disturbance or rearrangement of their claims, at least so far as the footing in court may go, to give them an opportunity to have, as I think, nothing but a rejection of their demands. I shall therefore desire that the Senate shall not concur in this House bill, and that it shall not become

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Mr. President, I will not weary the Senate with prolonged remarks touching this bill. The question involved has been discussed for years in this body, and whenever it has been brought here to a definite vote the result has been uniformly in favor of the claim of the settlers upon these Des Moines River lands.

The Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] referred in his remarks to the grantees of the State of Iowa. To whom did he refer? To the Des Moines Navigation Company and those who may have received Des Moines Navigation Company and those who may have received alleged titles from that company. How did that company acquire this pretended claim of title? It is said by a contract with the State of Iowa, subsequently strengthened by the joint resolution of Congress of 1861, whereby Congress released to the State of Iowa all of its title to the lands embraced within this dispute.

But as I demonstrated when this measure was before the Senate in Iowa 1988, the State of Iowa all of the Senate in Iowa 1989, the State of Iowa all of the Senate in Iowa 1989, the State of Iowa all of the Senate in Iowa 1989, the State of Iowa all of the Senate in Iowa 1989, the State of Iowa all of the Senate in Iowa 1989, the State of Iowa all of the Senate in Iowa 1989, the State of Iowa 1989, the Senate in Iowa 1989, the State of Iowa 1989, the Iowa 1989

June, 1888, the State of Iowa could not receive title to these disputed lands from the United States by act of Congress or otherwise, and the ground upon which I based that assertion, as I stated at that time, was that in the original constitution of the State of Iowa may be found this section:

SEC. 7. The General Assembly shall not locate any of the public lands which have been or may be granted by Congress to this State, and the location of which may be given to the General Assembly, upon lands actually settled, without the consent of the occupant. The extent of the claim of such occupant so exempted shall not exceed 320 acres.

When the original grant was made that provision of the constitution of Iowa was in existence; it was carried into the revised constitution of 1857; and I declare here to-day that in view of that provision of the State constitution it was not competent for the United States to confer upon the State of Iowa, upon the Des Moines Navigation Company, upon any person claiming under them, any lands within the boundaries of this grant upon which a settler was located.

Where, then, must be this title? The settlers say it is in the United I agree with them in that position. It can not have passed States. I agree with them in that position. It can not have passed out of the United States, because Congress, when it attempted to confer title upon the State of Iowa, was obstructed by that provision of the constitution of the State of Iowa. Where, then, if the title did not pass, must it rest from that time until this? In the United States. Why? Because it was there originally. It could not pass to the State of lows under the provision of her constitution. Therefore it must rest in the United States to-day. That is the position of the settlers on this subject.

Now what do they ask? They ask that the United States will, by the passage of this bill, allow this question of long contention to be taken into the courts of the United States and determined judicially. If the courts shall hold that this title is in the United States, then the bill provides that the settlers who went upon the lands at the instance and by the invitation of the United States shall have their title from the Government. That is all there is in the case.

The judicial involvement to which the Senator from New York has referred, has grown out of the first case which was taken into court and upon which a judicial decision was rendered, and that was a case in which both plaintiff and defendant desired the same result, and of course they got it. It was a made-up case, organized for the purpose of inducing but one result, and the position taken by the court in that case has been followed along the line of cases that have been tried since that time.

Now, we ask the Government of the United States to so far protect the men it invited to go upon these lands as that it will ask its own court through its own Attorney-General to say whether the title to the land does not yet vest in the United States, and if so, then, and only then, it shall give the settlers their rights.

As I have said, Mr. President, I do not want to detain the Senate with prolonged discussion of this question. Every Senator here understands the case, and being willing to risk it even upon that single point which I have stated, I am quite content to take the judgment of the Senate.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Iowa must admit that this question under the constitution of Iowa or its laws is to a decision and is a question to which private parties have a right to a decision by the courts of justice upon the law as it stands upon the transaction up to the time that litigation occurred. We have heard all through the debates about the first suit that was argued and determined in the Supreme Court of the United States, being a mere question of land title between competing claimants was— I do not know that it is stated that it was a collusive suit—but that it was a suit in which the parties both desired a conclusive judgment; that the opinion may have been on both sides that a conclusive legal determination of their rights must necessarily end as it did.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. No, Mr. President, I desire to state definitely that in that case both the plaintiff and defendant desired the precise result which was reached.

Mr. EVARTS. Very well.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The plaintiff, although insisting upon rights against the defendant, and the defendant combating these alleged rights, so framed their case, so kept from the consideration of the court ques tions vital to the determination of the questions properly, that through that instrumentality they obtained precisely the result which both of them intended when the case was commenced.

Mr. EVARTS. That has been the way in which it has been put, but no attempt was ever made to have the case thrown out of the jurisdiction and countenance of the Supreme Court by a charge of collusion, or any effort at a rehearing, or any of the methods which are to review a collusive judgment. And if it stood upon this alone now, some twenty years old, it would be difficult to hold that a mere question of title could not properly be passed upon by that great court without resting upon any inadequate presentation by counsel. The elements are of the simplest kind. The constitution of Iowa, the laws of Iowa, the laws of the United States, ad hoc, and the general laws of the United States as to settlers and titles thus to be acquired are within the familiar and every-day jurisprudence and disposition of that court. But a series of decisions in regard to which there has been no such imputation has come on term after term in that court until the last, I believe, is in the year 1883, or 1886 perhaps, and therefore we can not indulge in any illusion of that kind that the law as it is has not been explored and has not been understood by frequent representations or able counsel where there was no disposition to have any concurrence in indoment whatever.

I must therefore discard the notion that this title of the United States, notwithstanding all its legislation, is to be revested as of its original title by the operation of the constitution of the State. There is no disguising the fact that this bill is desired because there may be under it either a collusion or a rehabilitation of merely legal rights to land that at present have been put an end to by the decisions of the Supreme Court.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (S. 3401) in relation to the Pacific railroads.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to interfere with the matter the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] has in hand, but I ask now that the legislative appropriation bill may be laid before the Senate. It will take but a moment to dispose of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iewa asks unanimous consent that the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill may be laid before the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. VEST. Will the bill which has been under consideration come up after that? Mr. ALLISON. That will be a question to be determined by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] somewhat.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business is the Pacific railroad funding bill.

Mr. VEST. I want to state to the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], who has charge of the railroad bill, and to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] that there are three of these Indian court bills now pending. ALLISON] that there are three of these indicates another is the One comes here from the House of Representatives, another is the Constant from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. My only object is to get these bills in a committee of conference, so as to dispose of them at this session.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. It will take but a short time to dispose of this matter, I apprehend.

Mr. VEST. Unless the subject gets before a committee of conference at this time it can not be disposed of at this session, and it is a matter of great importance that some sort of court should be established in that Territory.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senate bill 3401, in relation to the Pacific railroads, being the unfinished business before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Allison] asks unanimous consent that it be laid aside for the purpose of proceeding to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The bill is before the Senate, and the question is on concurring in the Senate with the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole which was reserved at the instance of the as in Committee of the Whole which was reserved at the instance of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. PADDOCK].

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Will the Senator from Iowa consent that the appropriation bill may be laid aside temporarily until the Indian court bill can be disposed o'?

Mr. ALLISON. I will simply say to the Senator from Arkansas that the legislative appropriation bill is practically concluded. It will take but two minutes to complete it, and I ask that it may be disposed of now in order that it may go to the engrossing clerks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reserved amendment will be

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FRYE and Mr. HARRIS addressed the Chair. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. FRYE. Yes, sir. Mr. HARRIS. I ask the Senator from Maine to allow me to call up the pension appropriation bill which is pending here upon an amendment that I offered and an amendment the Senator from Kansas [Mr.

PLUMB] intends to offer, which can be disposed of in less than two minutes

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11658) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. In line 3, on page 2, after the word "separately," it is proposed to insert:

And provided further, That a check or checks drawn by a pension agent in payment of pension due and mailed by him to the address of the pensioner shall constitute payment within the meaning of section 4765 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend that amendment by adding to it what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment by add-

And the amount which may have accrued on the pension of any pensioner subsequent to the last quarterly payment on account thereof and prior to the death of such pensioner shall, in the case of a balance, be paid to his widow, or if there be no widow, to his surviving minor children or the guardan thereof, and in the case of a widow to her minor children.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Kansas if that only applies to the pension for the quarter?

Mr. PLUMB. It applies to so much of the pension as may have accrned after the quarterly payment up to the death of the pensioner, which now goes into the Treasury.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no objection to it.
Mr. PLUMB. I will state that the chairman of the Committee on Pensions is satisfied that the amendment should prevail.

Mr. DOLPH. I inquire whether that would not justly belong to the estate.

Mr. PLUMB. The amendment provides that it shall go to the widow or minor children.

Mr. DOLPH. Why should it go to the widow or minor children?
Mr. PLUMB. That is the general rule of the pension law.
Mr. COCKRELL. Pensions have never been considered property.

Mr. PLUMB. It is not intended that the pension shall inure to the benefit of the estate of the pensioner, but goes to those who are related to him and dependent upon him.

Mr. HAWLEY. I did not quite comprehend the first part of this amendment. I suppose I am not to understand, however, that if a check be sent and the pensioner never gets it, it is treated as a final

mr. PLUMB. Oh, no. The effect is just the opposite. Under the construction of the law now made by the Treasury Department, if a check is issued after the death of the pensioner, or if he dies before the check is cashed, though it is in his hands, the check is not paid, and this is to provide that a check once issued shall be paid, and my subsequent amendment is that whatever pension money accrues before the date of his death shall go to the persons dependent upon him.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Plumb] to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

COURT IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of Senate bill 3401, in relation to the indebtedness of Pacific railroads, on which the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FRYE. Now I yield to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] up to that point where there is no debate, that is to say, to complete the reading of the court bill and action upon it, but I do not yield for the purpose of debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will state that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] is entitled to the floor on the pend-

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield, of course, with the consent of the chairman of the committee, for the purpose indicated.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. It is due to me that I should say to the Senate that I can not agree to have this bill considered and passed without a word of explanation. There are reasons which I have explained to the Senator from Missouri which make it absolutely necessary that there shall be an explanation made as to the circumstances that surround this bill. It will not take long. My colleague and I Senate that I can not agree to have this bill considered and passed both will be compelled to have something to say before this bill can , and I for one will not agree to any unanimous consent that the bill shall be taken up and passed without a word of explanation. It would be unjust to me and to my colleague.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate can proceed only by unanimous consent.

Mr. VEST. I simply wish to state that I shall not engage in any If the Senator from Arkansas wants to make an explanation, as a matter of course I have not the slightest objection. I will keep the promise I made to the Senator from Maine that I will not say a word even in explanation of the bill that I have reported from the Judiciary Committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] to agree that the pending business may be informally laid aside for the consideration of the Indian Territory court bill, provided there is no debate.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, I can not agree to that proposition in that way. The bill as reported from the Committee on the Judiciary is very objectionable in many ways and I am not willing that the vote shall be taken without a chance in a very short way-I shall occupy but a very brief time-to state the reasons why the bill as reported from the Judiciary Committee ought not to pass and why the amendment of my colleague should be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. FRYE. That will inevitably lead to discussion according to the suggestions which have been made.

Mr. BERRY. I shall occupy the floor but a very short time. not wish to delay the bill or defeat the consideration of it, but I am not willing to consent that it shall pass without debate and without explanation. I have no disposition to defeat the consideration of the bill, but I do not think it ought to be passed by the Senate, and I do not think it ought to pass unless Senators know the situation, in any event.

Mr. FRYE. I shall have to ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate resumes the consideration of the unfinished business.

NAVAL OFFICERS' CLAIMS.

Mr. PUGH. Before the Senate took up the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill I was called from my seat by a member of the other House in reference to some matters of importance to him, and I did not have the opportunity of making a statement that I was requested to make in reference to the circular which had been published by Tallmadge & Tallmadge, in which they referred to the Fourth Auditor, General Shelley, in relation to the prosecution of claims in that bureau. I deem it due to General Shelley, and I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to make that statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator will proceed.

Mr. PUGH. During the debate day before yesterday the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] read the circular of Tallmadge & Tallmadge, and made a reflection that I consider was gratuitous and wholly unnecessary, in which he did great injustice to the Fourth Auditor. I have no idea that the Senator from Illinois would do wrong intentionally to any man, but the remark that he made, predicting that in the course of a month or so the Fourth Auditor would go out of his office and become a partner of the Tallmadges in the prosecution of claims before the Treasury Department, did General Shelley great injustice; and that prediction of the Senator was founded solely upon the fact that the Fourth Auditor had permitted the Tallmadges to refer to him in their circular.

Here are the facts given to me this morning by the Fourth Auditor in relation to that matter:

In June last, being acquainted with Messrs. Tallmadge & Tallmadge, they called upon me for permission to refer to me in the prosecution of claims before the Interior Department, known as Indian depredation claims; and knowing that they were trustworthy and reliable, I unhesitatingly gave them permission to use my name.

Their claims were treated as other claims, taken up in their order and settled. A short time ago the first information I had that they were using my name with reference to business in my bureau reached me by the receipt of a letter from a claimant inclosing their card.

The whole amount of claims represented by that firm does not exceed 3 per cent, of the claims adjusted and reported by this office.

In reference to the permission that General Shelley gave these claims lawyers to use his name, he has furnished me with several cards published by claims attorneys in which that practice has been permitted for a long time and never considered reprehensible. Here is the "office of Henry M. Gitt, for the collection of Treasury, quartermaster, pension, and other claims :"

lom, United States Senator, Illinois; Hon. L. E. Payson, Member of Congress, Illinois; Hon. Burton C. Cook; Hon. W. B. Allison, United States Senator; Hon. Philetus Sawyer, United States Senator; Hon. D. M. Sabin, United States Senator; Hon. A. G. Curtin; Hon. J. D. Cameron, United States Senator; Hon. J. I. Mitchell; Col. C. C. Matson, Member of Congress, Indiana; Hon. J. N. Dolph, United States Senator; Hon. J. H. Mitchell, United States Senator; Hon. H. H. Markham.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator, in connection with that, if there is any accounting officer of the Treasury who had to pass upon the claims in the hands of claim agents who gave permission

Mr. PUGH. This man advertises himself as a lawyer "for the collection of Treasury, quartermaster, pension, and other claims." Of course they did not have to pass upon them.

Mr. COCKRELL. Did he refer to any accounting officer of the Treasury who had to pass upon those claims and before whom they would come for consideration?

Mr. PUGH. General Shelley had just said, and that is a part of the statement that I made by his authority, that he never gave any permission to the Tallmadges to refer to him in reference to the prosecution of claims in his bureau, and that the only permission he ever gave them was in regard to the collection of Indian depredation claims, and not the claims he had to consider as Fourth Auditor. That is the statement he has made, and it is no doubt true. I know General Shelley. He is a citizen of my State. I have known him for many years, and I know that he is incapable of wrong-doing in his office.

As to this practice of allowing reference to be made, it has been done for years, and I think without any impropriety. Here is the card of "R. M. Thompson, specialty for rebate on tobacco claims before the Treasury Department," who refers to "Hon. John C. New, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. A. U. Wyman, Treasurer, and R. F. Patterson, Collector of Internal Revenue." Here is the card of "Charles and William B. King, claims attorneys, act of June 3, 1884. Horse claims, bounty, widows' pensions, property taken by the Army, and Indian depredations." This refers to "Hon. F. M. Cockrell, Hon. J. N. Dolph, Hon. John H. MITCHELL, Hon. John H. REAGAN, and Hon. D. M. Sabin."

Here is the card of Allan Rutherford:

Allan Rutherford (late Third Auditor United States Treasury), attorney and counselor at law, Corcoran Building, etc., will practice before the Supreme Court of the United States, Court of Claims, claims commissions, and the different committees of Congress. Being thoroughly familiar with the course of business before the Executive Departments, will give special attention to all matters before the Patent Office, General Land Office, Treasury, War, Interior, and other Departments. Refers to General W. S. Rosecrans, Register of the Treasury; Hon. John C. New, Assistant Secretary United States Treasury, Washington, D.C.—

Who had to pass upon claims that he had prepared himself to prose cute in the Treasury Department-

Hon. James Gilfilan, Treasurer of the United States; Hon. Henry C. Johnson, Commissioner of Customs; Hon. O. Ferriss, Second Auditor United States Treasury; Hon. E. W. Keightley, Third Auditor United States Treasury; Hon. Jacob H. Ela, Sixth Auditor United States Treasury; Hon. Samuel F. Phillips, Solicitor-General United States; General O. O. Howard, United States Army.

And so on. All these officers had to pass upon the claims submitted by these lawyers.

I simply make this statement in justification of what General Shelley has done in respect to this matter. In but one single instance has he allowed any reference to him, and that was in regard to the claims parties might have for Indian depredations. He never authorized the Tallmadges to refer to him in regard to any matter that he had to pass upon as Fourth Auditor.

Here is a letter I neglected to read, that General Shelley wrote to a claimant in his bureau in reference to her claim, stating that it was not worth while for her to go to the expense of employing any attorney:

In reply to your letter of the 25th ultimo, you are informed that there is no necessity whatever for the employment of an attorney to prosecute a claim before this office, but as you have given Mr. Stryker the power of attorney, and he has filed the claim, I can not interfere in the matter.

General Shelley said that in every instance he notified claimants that there was no necessity for them to employ an attorney to prosecute claims before him.

DISPOSAL OF THE PUBLIC LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 2511) to provide for the disposal of certain public lands of the United States under the provisions of the homestead laws only; which were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HAWLEY presented the petition of J. O. Barron and 64 others (26 voters and 39 women), citizens of Newington, Conn.; the petition of J. H. Morris and 85 others (39 voters and 47 women), citizens of East Haven, Conn., and the petition of A. M. He also presented the petition of L. P. Frost and 61 others (23 voters and 39 women), citizens of Medway, Mass., and the petition of T. J. Crossman and 53 others (23 voters and 31 women), citizens of Needham, Mass., praying for the submission to the States of a constitutional prohibitory amendment; which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. TURPIE presented the petition of R. S. Goodman and 42 others
(23 voters and 20 women), citizens of Kendallville, Ind., praying for the submission to the States of a constitutional prohibitory amendment; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SAWYER presented a petition of citizens of Sugar Creek, Wis., and a petition of citizens of Viroqua, Wis., praying for an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the manufacture, importation, exportation, transportation, and sale of all alcoholic liquors as a beverage; which were ordered to lie on the table.

were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have here and present one of the stereotyped petitions, sent to me by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Mrs. J. C. Bateham, Painesville, Ohio, national superintendent, Sabbath observance department, printed, and three names signed to it, Mr. A. F. Slawson, a merchant, Mr. Valentine Metz, a carpenter, and Mr. John L. Downer, a sivil engineer residing in the county of Jeffer. Mr. John L. Downer, a civil engineer, residing in the county of Jefferson, and town of De Soto, in the State of Missouri, praying for the passage of the Sunday-rest bill. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a memorial of the St. Louis Gymnastic Society, "a corporation organized under the laws of Missouri," and which "during the darkest days of the rebellion of 1861 to 1865 stood true to the Union," remonstrating "against the passage of the two measures introduced by Mr. Blair in the United States Senate, to wit: First, the so-called national Sunday bill; and second, the joint resolution proposing an amendment to the Federal Constitution, the object of which seems to be the establishment of the Christian religion as a national religion." The memorialists state that they consider these propositions as an infringement of the liberty of conscience and a violation of the spirit of our Constitution, and state their reasons very cogently against the passage of these two measures. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, introduced a bill (S. 3938) granting the use of certain lands in the Hot Spring reservation, in the State of Arkansas, to the Hot Springs Benevolent Association; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3939) granting a pension to Robert W. Anders; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 3940) granting a pension to Bennett Cooper; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

CARD-INDEX-RECORD OF VOLUNTEER REGIMENT.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved. That the Secretary of War is hereby directed to forward to the Senate the card-index-record of one of the regiments of volunteers recently carded, the same to be arranged in form similar to the examples printed on page 191 of Senate Report No.507, Fiftieth Congress, first session.

FISH AND FISHERIES REPORT.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted the following concurrent resolution;

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Public Printer be, and is hereby, instructed to print three additional volumes of Senate Miscellaneous Document No. 124, Forty-seventh Congress, first session, comprising sections 6, 7, 8, and 9, being necessary for the completion of a report in quarto form by the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries upon the food-fish and fisheries of the United States, work upon which is now in progress under concurrent resolution of the Senate passed July 15-21, 182. The engraving necessary for the additional volumes to be in relief, and to be contracted for by the Public Printer under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, and to receive the approval of the Commissioner before being accepted: the work to be stereotyped, and 10,000 extra copies printed, of which 2,500 shall be for the use of the Senate, 5,000 for the use of the House, and 1,500 for the use of the Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries. There shall also be printed 1,000 extra copies for sale by the Public Printer, under such regulations as the Joint Committee on Printing may prescribe, at a price equal to the cost of publication and 10 per cent. thereon added.

Mr. COCKRELL. This publication has been in progress for some time. In my judgment the Public Printer already has ample authority to go on and complete these valuable publications, but there is some doubt in his mind in regard to it. I therefore present the resolution with the accompanying papers stating the case and ask that they be referred to the Committee on Printing, and that the committee may take very early action upon the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution and accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

and be printed.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. T. O. Towles, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:
A bill (H. R. 331) for the relief of David Meriwether; and

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate, and Mr. Platt, Mr. CULLOM, and Mr. BUTLER were appointed.

INAUGURATION ARRANGEMENTS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Referring to the very proper resolution of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Sherman] yesterday, about taking order in relation to the inauguration of the President in the Senate Chamber, relation to the inauguration of the Fresident in the Senate Chamber, etc., I think it very proper, and therefore move that the President of the Senate be one of that committee. As it relates to the admissions and arrangements here in this wing of the Capitol, I think it is very desirable, and I hope it will be agreeable to my friend from Ohio that the President of the Senate be added to the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Senate head the motion of the Senator from Veryent to add the President ate has heard the motion of the Senator from Vermont to add the President of the Senate to the committee on the inaugural ceremonies. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

PROPOSED ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. GRAY. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next at 12 o'clock.

Mr. HOAR. I hope that motion will not be pressed now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next,

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent to make a suggestion to the Senator from Delaware. We have only a little over twenty days left of this session-Sundays and the Presidential count day come out-and I know that there are gentlemen who have important business in charge who think it very important to use all the time, including Saturdays, and it seems to me that, while of course it is in order to submit the motion, it is not quite fair when so many Senators are absent, in a moment's pause, to bring on that motion. I ask the Senator, therefore, to withhold the motion.

Mr. GRAY. I will defer to the wishes of the Senator from Massachusetts, and as several Senators seem to desire that the Senate should not act upon the motion now, I withdraw it.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to inquire of the Senator who has charge of the bill now under discussion what his wishes are in regard to the

Mr. FRYE. There can be no question about my wishes. This rail-road funding bill has been in the Senate now for two or three weeks, and has given place from time to time to appropriation bills. I have yielded to other bills just so far as it was possible for me to do so and be reasonably consistent in the performance of my duty. This is a very important bill, which, in my judgment, secures the United States absolutely in its debt, as absolutely as human payment can be made secure; and it seems to me it is the duty of the United States Senate to stay here and consider this bill.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to inquire of the Senator whether, if he and his committee had until Monday, they could report the Central Pacific bill so as to get it out of the way?

Mr. FRYE. I do not know whether the committee can or not. The committee meets to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock to consider the Central Pacific bill.

Mr. STEWART. I think it would be well to give the committee to-morrow to consider it, and probably it would be as well to adjourn until Monday to facilitate that important business.

Mr. FRYE. We can determine to-morrow morning before the meeting of the Senate whether or not we can offer a Central Pacific bill in connection with the pending bill.

Mr. HOAR. With a Calendar of twenty-eight pages, with people who have a great many rights, important to them, undetermined, it seems to me not only unfair but I was going to say criminal for the Senate to abandon its duties.

Mr. STEWART. If we can have the Calendar considered to-morrow I shall be willing to have a session.

Mr. HOAR. We shall have whatever is the most important busi-

Mr. STEWART. By unanimous consent the Senate can order that Mr. FRYE. You can not have unanimous consent.

Mr. STEWART. Then let us adjourn over.
Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is not present, and I understood him to say to-day that he desired a session to-morrow.

Mr. CULLOM. I think if it could be understood that the Senate would consider the Pacific railroad funding bill or the Calendar tomorrow, there would be no disposition to press the motion to adjourn over. If it be, therefore, understood that we shall go on with the consideration of this bill or the Calendar generally, we can make progress with the public business.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator will understand—

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is proceeding by unanimous consent. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. DAWES. I gave notice that I would call up immediately after Mr. HALE] gave notice that I would call up immediately after 2 o'clock to-morrow an appropriation bill, and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] gave a similar notice.

Mr. CULLOM. I did not hear that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware insist on his motion?

Mr. DAWES. I desire to ask the Senate to consider the fortification appropriation bill to-morrow.

Mr. GRAY. If it is the wish of the chairman of the Committee on Pacific Railroads to finish the discussion of this bill to-morrow and continue the debate, if there can be an understanding of that kind—

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is impossible to finish the consideration of the Pacific railroad bill by an understanding, to-morrow.

Mr. GRAY. I do not know whether it can be finished or not.

Mr. FRYE. I have no expectation of finishing the consideration of Mr. FRIE. That the expectation of the bill to-morrow.

Mr. GRAY. It will be continued, I suppose.

Mr. FRYE. The difficulty about finishing the consideration of the bill is entirely apparent to Senators. I want to go on with its consideration. It is not a conflict touching the rights of the bill, or the propriety or justice of it. I shall insist to-morrow at 2 o'clock on going on with the regular order, unless there is an appropriation bill which demands the attention of the Senate at that time. I shall permit nothing else to intervene to-morrow, except an appropriation bill, if I can help myself, unless the majority of the Senate overrules me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Delaware insist on his motion?

Mr. GRAY. I do. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware moves that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. ALLISON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays

Mr. HOAR. I ask unanimous consent to inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether his committee can profitably employ the time to-morrow?

Mr. ALLISON. We shall certainly take up to-morrow the appropriation bill which the Senator's colleague [Mr. DAWES] has in charge. There is no telling how long it will take. There are a number of conference reports that must be taken up, even to the exclusion of appropriation bills, and I think some of them will be ready to-morrow. It does not seem to me that we can properly adjourn over until Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is now on the motion of the Senator from Delaware, that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. GRAY. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is withdrawn.

INDESTEDNESS OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

Mr. FRYE. I insist on the regular order, which is Senate bill

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3401) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act; and to provide for a settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain of said railroads, and to secure to the United States the payment of all indebtedness of certain of the companies

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask that the pending question be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to recommit the bill with instructions, submitted by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL], will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 3401) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act; and to provide for a settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain of said railroads, and to secure to the United States the payment of all indebtedness of certain of the companies therein mentioned, with the accompanying report, No. 1950, first session Fiftieth Congress, be, and the same is hereby, recommitted to the Select Committee on the President's Message transmitting the Report of the Pacific Railway Commission, with instructions to include in said bill such proposed legislation as in the judgment of such committee is proper, providing for the ascertainment of the amount of the indebtedness to the Government justly payable, due and to become due, by the Central Pacific ailroad Company as the successor to the Central Pacific Railroad company, in respect of the bonds of the United States here-tofore issued to aid in the construction of the Central Pacific and the Western Pacific Railroad's and for the proper security and funding of the same.

The PRESIDENT men tempore. The Senator from Oregon [Mr.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon [Mr.

MITCHELL] is entitled to the floor on the pending question,
Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, as I was saying when I yielded to a motion to adjourn when this subject was last before the Senate (on Monday last), the legislation heretofore had in regard to the general subject of the Pacific railroad indebtedness has always dealt with the two companies, Union Pacific and Central Pacific, as one general subject. I had further suggested in that connection that all efforts heretofore made by Congress to provide means for the creation of a sinking fund that would eventually and in the end secure to the Government of the United States the payment of the debts due the Government by the Union and Central Pacific Railroad Companies had been failures. In that connection I had rehearsed to a certain extent the history of legislation, and the proposed legislation heretofore enacted and proposed at different times in the Senate in regard to this matter. When I yielded to a motion to adjourn, I had placed in juxtaposition so far as I could the funding act of 1878 known as the Thurman act and the bill known as the Matthews bill reported from the Committee on Railroads of the Senate at about the same time that the Thurman bill was reported from the Judiciary Committee of the Senate.

My purpose in doing that was to show, as I think I can very clearly, that the Congress of the United States when it incorporated the Thurman bill into law instead of the Matthews bill made a very great mistake in so far as the interests of the Government are concerned.

Now, Mr. President, I propose to examine the Thurman act and the Matthews bill. I propose to show, as I think every one now concedes, that the Thurman act, now in operation something over ten years, has been in every essential particular an absolute failure.

Now, Mr. President, let us examine briefly what has been accomplished under the Thurman act; what progress has been made towards the liquidation of the great debt; how much of a sinking fund has been accumulated under its provisions; and I will first inquire as to the situation at the expiration of eight years and five months from the date of its passage or down to October 1, 1886.

According to the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury of January 22, 1887, in answer to a resolution of the House of Representatives of January 20, 1887, there was in the Treasury of the United States a sum total in cash and bonds to the credit of the sinking fund of the Pacific railroads on October 1, 1886, of only $10,173,962.88. Of this amount but $5,467,370.51 were invested in bonds and accumulating interest, while nearly one-half of the whole amount, or the balance of $4,706,-592.37, was uninvested, and just so much dead capital in the vaults of the Treasury credited to the sinking fund, earning nothing, either for the companies or the Treasury of the United States. The account between the two companies, Union and Central Pacific, respectively, according to this letter, is stated as follows:

.$6, 701, 812. 72 . 153, 699. 33

Total to the credit of the Union Pacific ... .. 6, 855, 512, 05

The account of the Central Pacific Company stood as follows: Bonds, the market value of which on that date, October 1, 1888, was. $1,042,004.31 Cash uninvested.....

Total to the credit of the Central Pacific ...

In other words, the sum total of cash and then present market value of bonds of both companies in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the sinking fund on October 1, 1886, was but $10,173,962,88, and of this amount but $5,467,370.51 were invested in bonds and accumulating interest; while the balance of $4,706,592.37 was lying idle in the vaults of the Treasury as unproductive capital, bringing in nothing either to the Government or the railroad companies.

But of the amount then (October 1, 1886) in this sinking fund but a very small proportion had been paid in cash by either the Union Pacific Railway Company or the Central Pacific Railroad Company. siderably over two-thirds of the whole amount had arisen from transportation service, while considerably less than one-third of the amount was cash payments arising from the 25 per cent. on net earnings.

On January 20, 1886, a little over three years ago, according to the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury of that date, the sum total in the sinking fund was $9,229,906.39, made up as follows:

Union Pacific: Transportation service	$4, 267, 364, 33 1, 421, 714, 46 363, 261, 44
Total	6, 052, 340. 23
Central Pacifie: Transportation service. Cash payments. Interest on investments.	$2, 283, 983, 10 633, 992, 48 259, 640, 58
Total	3, 177, 566.16

The exact proportion of each item of transportation service, cash payments, and interest on investments, which in October, 1886, constituted the sum of $10,173,962.88 then in the sinking fund, I am not able to state, but the probability is the proportion is about the same as in the preceding January, which I have just given.

That was the condition of affairs three years ago, or rather two years and four months ago. How do the accounts stand to-day? A correct statement demonstrates conclusively that as the years roll on the situa-tion of the Government in respect of the probability of its ever realizing under the operation of the Thurman act any considerable portion of the immense debt owing from these railroad companies to the United States becomes more and more desperate; and the facts so patent to all, so pregnant with a meaning which can not be misunderstood, appeal to the Congress for such speedy and reasonable action as may result in securing the co-operation of these companies in the establishment and carrying out of such monetary arrangements as may be just and honorable, alike to the Government and the companies, and which will ultimately reimburse the United States for every dollar, principal and interest, justly due her.

How, then, do the accounts stand to-day? What has been the result of the operation of the Thurman sinking-fund act down to the present hour? But I will first attract attention to the situation on November 1, 1887, fifteen months ago. From the report of the United States Pacific Railway Commission of December 1, 1887 (Senate Executive Document No. 51, first session Fiftieth Congress), pages 16 and 17, the condition of the sinking fund of the bond-aided Pacific railroad companies on November 1, 1887, will be seen. I send to the Secretary's desk and ask that the portions I have marked may be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

United States Treasury Department, Washington, D. C., December 1, 1887.

Sir: In reply to the supplementary questions in behalf of the Pacific Railway Commission, proposed by its statistician November 23, to wit:

1. What was the market value as of November 1, 1887, of the securities and eash in the sinking funds of each of the bond-aided Pacific railroads; that is, of the Union Pacificand the Central Pacific?

2. Par value of securities and cash in said sinking funds as of November 1, 1887.

3. Total of amounts paid by each company into said sinking funds, including all credits to them.

4. What will be the present worth, as of July 1, 1888, of the debt due by each of the bond-aided Pacific railroads?

of the bond-aided Pacific railroads?

I would say that my answers to the questions 1, 2, and 3 are expressed in the accompanying Table A.

In answer to fourth question, I would say that the present worth of indebtedness, as of July 1, 1888, not taking into account the disposition of the sinking fund, in which the Government has a contingent interest, is shown in the accompanying Table B, where the data were arrived at, respectively, by the following process: To the principal to be paid at maturity is added the interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the dates of delivery of the bonds to the several companies to maturity. From this are deducted the payments on the bond and interest account to November 1, 1887, increased by estimated additions to July 1, 1888. The remainder is then discounted from maturity to July 1, 1888, at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum.

In my letter of the 19th ultimo the par value of the securities in the sinking funds of the several roads was employed.

Yours, respectfully,

E, B, ELLIOTT,

E. B. ELLIOTT.

E. B. ELLIOTT, Government Actuary.

The United States sinking fund above referred to is the result of the operation of the Thurman act, passed in May, 1878. Its framers expected that this fund would reach much larger proportions, but these anticipations have not been realized. This failure has been due to two prominent causes:

First. The very large decrease in the net earnings of the company, on which the 25 per cent. reserved by the act was to be computed; which decrease has, in the main, been caused by the very large reductions in freight and passenger rates which have occurred during the past four years.

Second. The failure of the fund to earn compound interest at the rate of 5 per cent., as had been expected.

Other causes may have contributed, but the two named are the controlling causes to which the failure of the Thurman act is due. It is universally conceded by every person of intelligence who has given the subject any study, that it is and will be absolutely impossible for the Union Pacific Railway or system to pay the indebtedness to the United States at its maturity.

In approaching an examination of the subject of remedial legislation, we have endeavored to be guided by the directions of the act, and to submit a scheme which shall secure to the United States full payment of all debts due it from said company, with a reasonable rate of interest, having due regard to the financial ability of said company, and the proper conduct of its business, in such manner as shall afford efficient service to the public.

The principal considerations which have moved us are the following:
First. The system requiring annual payments of a percentage of net earnings is undesirable, and should be radically altered. The method of percentage of net earnings leads to endless disputes and difficulties. The distribution of net earnings as between the system and the aided road is a complicated and difficult problem, requiring a vast amount of accounting, and leading, at all points to differences of opinion as to the propriety of including alleged earnings or deducting alleged expenses. These differences of opinion have developed into an incessant course of litigation, recrimination, complaints of unjust dealing on one side, and complaints of unjust avoidance of obligation on the other.

In the bills which are herewith submitted the payments to be made by the respective companies are fixed by the semi-annual amount of the interest accruing on their bonds, and by a fixed percentage of the outstanding bonds, which is directed to be paid annually into a sinking fund. In the event of a refusal on the part of the companies to accept the terms offered to them by these bills, the commission has found it impossible to substitute for the present system a method of fixed payments, however earnestly desiring to do so.

. The method of fixed payments avoids all the difficulties above referred to, avoids the uncertainties arising from fluctuating business, can be so adjusted as to give a much better assurance of a successful result, and is therefore more just to the Government of the United States.

The reservations in the original enactments of 5 per cent of net earnings and one-half the United States transportation earned had but little effect in reducing the amount of the debt. The Thurman act, as we have seen, has not proved much more efficient.

The same considerations which have influenced the action of the commission in regard to the Union Pacific are equally applicable to the Central Pacific Railroad. It is extremely desirable to terminate the system of percentage payment of net earnings and to substitute therefor annual payments of fixed sums. It is equally desirable to terminate the incessant controversies and litigations arising between this company and the Government in relation to their mutual duties and obligations.

It does not seem to the commission that the companies have any right to complain of the percentages proposed. It is true that neither the principal nor the interest due to the United States will mature until 1897; but it is equally true that it is the duty of these companies to make adequate provision for the payment of their obligations at maturity. The percentages called for in no case exceed the amount required to attain the proposed object. Under the decisions of the courts, all sums required to keep the roads in full and efficient operation and in complete repair, and such payments for the construction and betterment as are properly chargeable to income, are to be allowed before the net earnings are ascertained. The only burden, therefore, is placed on the stockholders; and, as is clearly stated in the sinking fund case (99 U. S., 700), it is the duty of the corporation to make provision for the discharge of its obligations before making any division whatever among its stockholders.

Mr. MITCHELL. That the condition of this fund and the effect of its operation may be presented in consecutive order I ask the Secretary to read a short extract from the report of the directors of the Union to read a snort extract from the Appendix Railroad made September 13, 1887.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

CONDITION OF SINKING FUND.

The sinking funds of the Union and Central Pacific companies held by the Treasurer of the United States December 31, 1886, amounted to $10,324,756.68, the Union Pacific having to its credit $6,921,808.74, and the Central Pacific $3,402,-947.94

The premium paid on bonds for the sinking fund of the Union Pacific to December 31, 1886, amounted to $1,322,053.81 and interest received to $572,891.61. For the Central Pacific the premium amounted to $218,963,73 and the interest to month presented to the Senate a resolution calling upon the Secretary month presented to the Senate a resolution caning upon the Secretary of the Treasury for certain information. That resolution was adopted and is incorporated in the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury responding to the same, which was transmitted to the Senate on the 6th of the present month. The document was ordered printed in document form and is Senate Executive Document No. 100, second session Fiftieth Congress. I ask that the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, with the accompanying statement as to the status of the sinking fund on the 1st day of the present month be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, February 5, 1889.

SIR: In compliance with the resolution of the Senate of January 30, 1889—

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate as to the amounts, respectively, in the sinking fund to the credit of the Union Pacific and Central Pacific Railroad Companies, respectively, on the 1st day of February, 1889, under the operation of what is commonly known as the "Thurman sinking-fund act;" stating the amounts of each invested in bonds, the character of bonds, and the amounts in cash to the credit of each company on said date, together with a statement of the market value in cash of the bonds to the credit of each of such companies on said date, and the difference in amount, if any, between such present cash value, including the cash on hand, and the amount of each that would have been in such fund to the credit of each of such companies on February 1, 1889, provided no investments whatever in bonds had been made of any portion of such funds"—

I have the honor to transmit herewith a statement showing the information called for by said resolution.

Mr. MITCHELL. While that statement presents in a certain form the present condition of the sinking fund, it is in a sense misleading; that is to say, there does not appear from this statement very clearly the amount paid by the Government in the way of premiums on the securities in which these investments have been made. It gives simsecurities in which these investments have been made. It gives simply the face value of the securities in which the funds have been invested, and the market value of those same securities on the 1st day of February, 1889; and it gives in another column the receipts from Government transportation withheld under the act of May 7, 1878, and the cash payments by the companies under section 4; but, as I say, it does not appear very plainly, to say the least, from this statement what amount was paid out in premiums.

I have that statement here unofficially, and I propose to call atten-

I have that statement here unofficially, and I propose to call attention to it for the purpose of showing how absolutely absurd and inefficient has been the operation of this sinking fund, and how unjust it word, it may be stated in this wise: These funds were invested in securities at a very high premium. Of course they do not bear interest upon the amount of the face value and the premium, but only upon their nominal value; and not only that, but as the time between the date of purchase of these securities and the date when they mature becomes lessened, as a matter of course the premium on the securities. comes lessened, as a matter of course the premium on the securities becomes gradually lessened from day to day and from year to year, so that the Secretary of the Treasury, conforming of course to the provisions of this funding act, has been from time to time paying immense premiums on securities in order to get an investment for these funds, and then when the bonds are called of course there is an immense loss upon the premium, and the result is that neither the Government nor the railroad companies get any benefit from the investment, but on the contrary suffer an absolute los

For instance, it will be seen from the statement which has just been read at the desk stating the situation on the 1st day of this month that $2,584,000 of Central Pacific funds were invested in United States currency sixes. It does not appear from this statement what premium was paid on that investment, but I have it here in an unofficial statement from the Department, which shows the exact amount paid by way of premium on each investment made.

way of premium on each investment made.

That $2,584,000 was invested at eight different times. July 1, 1887, $119,000 were invested in United States currency sixes, and on that amount a premium of $35,105 was paid. Again, April 12, 1887, $325,-000 were invested in the same securities, on which a premium of $111,-330 was paid. July 21, 1887, $600,000 were invested in the same securities, and a premium of $204,255.61 was paid; and so on. Without stopping to go through the whole list, the matter may be summed up with the statement that on those investments, amounting in the aggregate to $2.544.000 premiums were paid to the extent of $273,120.02 gate to $2,584,000, premiums were paid to the extent of $873,129.92.

Those premiums of course were constantly falling off, becoming less, and will continue to become less from year to year. When they are called in they will perhaps be worth par, and no more. The result is, unless the interest on the securities amounts to more than the loss by way of premiums, there is an absolute loss both to the Government and the railroad companies. In fact there was a loss, as appears from one of the reports made recently, I think it is the report of the Pacific Railway Commission; and I think the same thing is incorporated in the report made by the chairman of the select committee, the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], that on certain securities called at a certain time there was an absolute loss of some $48,000; that is to say, the amount for which the securities sold was less by $48,000 than the interest that accrued on them while they were held in the sinking fund.

But we go a step further and we find that $593,090 of this Central Pacific sinking fund were invested in Central Pacific first-mortgage and Union Pacific first-mortgage bonds, and on those investments premiums were paid to the extent of $94,491.25. What is the result? As the time of maturity approaches the premium constantly goes down, and the result will be when redeemed there will be a loss by way of reduction in premium perhaps nearly or quite to the extent of the interest the result will be when redeemed there will be a loss by way of reduction in premium perhaps nearly or quite to the extent of the interest the securities brought in while held in the sinking fund.

Recapitulating, we find the face value of these securities $3,141,000, whereas the actual cost of which was $4,108,621.17, while the present value is but $3,820,902.50, or a loss to-day, if the matter were closed out, on those investments alone of $287,729.17, while if the matter is not closed out, if these honds are not taken up until maturity, the lose not closed out, if these bonds are not taken up until maturity, the loss to the companies and the Government would be $967,621.17, or the total premium. Of course the interest, whatever it amounted to, would have to be deducted from that in estimating the actual loss. So the effect of the Thurman act of 1878 has been to cause millions of this fund, in the first place, for several years to lie idle in the Treasury, bringing in nothing; and secondly, when by a change in the law the Secretary of the Treasury was permitted to invest in the bonds of the companies instead of United States securities, he was compelled to to pay these immense premiums, all of which, if the securities are not redeemed until they mature, will be lost to the Government.

But, Mr. President, this is not all. Under the Thurman act, owing to the great number of important questions of fact and law left open to determination under its provisions, ever since that act went into operation there has been a continual and aggravating controversy, legislative, judicial, departmental, and otherwise, going on between the Government and these railroad companies as to what constituted the net earnings of the roads, and as to the proper construction of the act in determining what are net earnings and other important matters.

As railroads have sprung into existence throughout the Western country, paralleling in many instances, to a great extent, the aided roads, some of these owned and controlled by persons largely interested in the aided roads, innumerable questions as to good faith upon the part of the companies—questions as to whether the aided roads are being discriminated against and freights diverted to non-aided roads, thus de-priving the aided roads of their legitimate business and consequently reducing the amount of net earnings upon which the 25 per cent. is, under the provisions of the Thurman act, to be paid into the Treasury and all manner and kinds of controversies have arisen, and the result is, and has been, a hand-to-hand conflict between creditor and debtor, no concert of action toward a common, desirable and honorable endthat is, the payment of an honorable, just debt on the one hand, and its collection in a reasonable, just, and proper manner on the other.

Crimination, recrimination, accusation, and resentment have been the order of the day, and as a result, after ten years and over of pro-longed contention, nothing being permanently settled nor any good re-sults achieved, the Government finds itself, under the operation of the Thurman funding act, not only failing to reduce the aggregate of the indebtedness, but actually permitting its increase annually for several years to the tune of over fifteen hundred thousand dollars; and hence after nearly ten years' experience Congress was forced, actually driven, to the necessity, it would seem, in order to ascertain the exact relations between these companies and the Government, which the Government, it seems, has failed to ascertain under the provisions of the Thurman act, to inaugurate an investigation at an expense of $100,000 and over and a delay of over two years. Such has been some of the effects in the interest of the Treasury of the United States, or more properly speaking in direct opposition to such interest, of the originally much-lauded Thurman act.

How that great lawyer and universally conceded honest man, Hon. Allen G. Thurman, and the equally great jurist and conscientious Senator, the present distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, and through whose great efforts it became a law, could have been so fearfully mistaken as to the probable effects of the bill is one of those mysteries not easy of solution. Ten years ago he who dared express an opinion here or elsewhere in opposition to the Thurman bill or the Thurman act was branded inferentially if not directly as a traitor to the best interests of the Government, as being an ally of corporations, as false to his official trust, while to-day not a solitary officer of the Government either high or low in official station, not a statesman in all the realm, can be found to acknowledge it a success, while some of the very men, the able and distinguished Senators who were the authors of that piece of legislation, are, in the light of its practical operations, reluctantly compelled to admit its total inefficiency and absolute worthlessness.

I come now, for the purpose of not only summarizing the salient points in the legislative history of this great controversy, but of illustrating the theory which in my judgment should be adopted in dealing with the railroads, as well also for the purpose of enforcing my contention that the whole subject of Pacific railroad indebtedness should be dealt with at one and the same time, to compare with this Thurman act the bill reported from the railroad committee by Senator Matthews eleven years ago, and then I should be glad to have an intelligent response from any member of any committee of this Senate as to which of the two—the Matthews bill or the Thurman act—would, in the light of the history of the past ten years, have been most to the interest of the Treasury of the United States. Of course I could hardly expect the honorable chairman of the Judiciary Committee even at this late date to admit the claim made by me for the Matthews bill.

And here let it be observed that the principle of the Matthews bill was based upon the theory of co-operation and mutual agreement between creditor and debtor concerning the adjustment and payment by the one and the collection by the other of one of the largest debts ever-incurred by private individuals in the business transactions of the world. It sought a final solution of this gigantic question by an amicable arrangement whereby upon reasonable terms, alike honorable and fair both to the Government and the companies, in view of all the surrounding circumstances, a fund could be created and an arrangement perfected that would secure to the Government a reimbursement of every dollar of this immense indebtedness.

It sought to take this controversy over the collection of a debt bordering on $150,000,000 from the halls of legislation and the political arena, where for years it had been the foot-ball of political and personal conflict and the chess-board of stock-jobbing; from the judicial courts and Executive Departments, where successive contests had been carried forward month after month and year after year, estranging and embittering those whose mutual interests on the contrary imperatively demanded a disposition of mutual concession and friendly co-operation, to the great end that a just and generous Government should receive in due season and on proper and reasonable terms its honest and just dues; and also that those who had been the recipients of the nation's bounty in the construction of the Pacific railroads might honorably and in proper spirit discharge a just and binding obligation of immense magnitude.

And now to a comparison of the provisions and requirements of the Matthews with the Thurman bill; and I know of no better way in which I can illustrate the propriety of my present claim that the Congress should not attempt to deal piece-meal with this important subject, but should grapple the whole controversy at once. The Matthews bill was based on a theory that left it free from all manner of difficulty. It was a plain and direct proposition to the aided companies that they should pay into the United States Treasury so much—a certain specified, fixed sum—on March 31, 1878, to wit, the sum of $2,000,000 toward the commencement of a sinking fund, a nucleus, and then so much more—a certain, definite, specified sum—irrespective of their gross or net carnings, every six months thereafter, on the 1st days of October and April of each succeeding year, commencing October 1, 1878, and ending October 1, 1900; and this I have said irrespective of the amount of either net or gross earnings of either company. That is to say, a sum equal to $2,000,000 was to be paid into the Treasury of the United States March 31, 1878, and placed to the credit of a sinking fund, and then each company was required to pay on the 1st days of October and April of each succeeding year until the bonds were fully matured in 1900 the sum of $500,000; that is, each company—the Union Pacific and Central Pacific—were to pay into the sinking fund annually the sum of $1,000,000, the aggregate to be paid by the two companies semi-annually was to be $1,000,000, and annually $2,000,000 from October 1, 1878, to October 1, 1900—this irrespective of any question as to the cost of operating the roads, as to the amount of business transacted, the cost of maintaining the road, as to the amount of gross or net earnings, or as to what constituted net earnings, as to business connections or rivalries with other roads, or any other matter whatsoever connected with the operation or business of the companies.

These payments of $2,000,000 annually—$1,000,000 semi-annually—were to continue for a period of twenty-two years, and at the expiration of that time, the principal of the bonded indebtedness being then due, any balance remaining due from either of said companies on account of principal and interest, that is to say, on October 1, 1900, was, after deducting the amount standing to the credit of the sinking fund, to be divided into fifty equal semi-annual installments, to be paid by said companies respectively, one of which was to be paid on the 1st day of April and one on the 1st day of October in each year, with all accrued interest from October 1, 1900, on any balance remaining unpaid at the date of maturity of each installment, and at the same rate of interest per annum paid by the United States on the larger part of its public debt on the 1st day of January preceding the date of payment of the several installments.

This bill, as I have stated, was intended as a full and final adjustment between the United States and these railroad companies in reference to this great controversy. It was then generally understood—most certainly was it so understood by the members of the Committee on Railroads in the first session of the Forty-fifth Congress, when this bill was reported from that committee by Senator Matthews with the approval of its every member-that while the representatives of the companies affected by it insisted strenuously, as they did in arguments before the committee, that the terms were more rigorous than they should be; that for the sake of securing a final settlement of the controversy, and of withdrawing it forever from the halls of legislation and the forum of courts, they would, if nothing better could be tendered, accept its terms should it become a law, and take the necessary steps on their own account to invest the required $2,000,000 at once, and to provide a fund from which the sum of $1,000,000 each six months and $2,000,000 every year could be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the sinking fund proposed by the provisions of the Matthews bill. And hence it was that in the fifth section of that bill it was provided as follows:

That this act shall take effect upon its acceptance by said railroad companies, or if accepted by any one of said companies, then as to the companies so accepting the same, which acceptance shall be filed with the Scretary of the Treasury within four months from the passage of this act and shall show that said company or said companies have agreed to the same at a meeting of stockholders.

Suppose, therefore, Mr. President, that this bill, instead of the Thurman bill had become a law, and had been accepted by the companies and its provisions complied with, what manifestly and unquestionably would have been the result as compared with the results actually experienced under the Thurman act? Can any one doubt in the light of the history of the past ten years as to the great advantage the Government would have realized under this bill as compared with that it has realized under the Thurman act; to say nothing of the great importance to all concerned of securing at that time a complete and final settlement of this disturbing and perplaying problem of this disturbing and perplexing problem.

Under the latter we had, as we have seen, in this sinking fund in the Treasury of the United States October 1, 1886, including accumulations of interest on the 25 per cent. of ascertained net earnings paid in, the sum total of but $10,173,962.88, whereas under the Matthews bill we would have had on that date, under a compliance of its provisions upon the part of the companies, exclusive of interest on any part of the different semi-annual payments, the sum of $18,000,000, or nearly double, saying nothing whatever of interest on semi-annual payments, the amount accumulated under the Thurman act, including accumulated interest to that date, while to-day we would under the Matthews bill have had, exclusive of interest on any part of the fund, over $23,000,000 in the sinking fund to the credit of these companies, as against the sum of $11,243,271.14, or less than one-half the amount in that fund on the first day of the present month, exclusive of interest on investments.

But when we come to add the accumulations in the shape of interest, even at 5 per cent., as stipulated in the Thurman act, there would, had the Matthews bill instead of the Thurman act become the law, been a sum total in the sinking fund in October, 1886, of over $26,000,-000 instead of the $10,173,962.88 we then had under the Thurman act; while to-day we would have had nearly $32,000,000 in such fund as against $12,852,226.74, or but little in excess of one-third this amount, including principal and interest, on investments now in such fund under the operation of the Thurman act; while at interest computed according to the rule prescribed in the Matthews bill—that is to say, interest on all sums placed to the credit of the sinking fund, to be credited and added thereto semi-annually, at the rate of 6 per cent per annum—the amount in the sinking fund to-day would be over $35,000,000 as against less than $13,000,000, by nearly $150,000 realized under the Thurman act.

But let us inquire as to how the accounts would stand with the individual companies in respect of amount in sinking fund had the Matthews bill become a law as compared with its present condition under operation of the Thurman Act. Take the Central Pacific Company, for instance. Under the operation of the Thurman Act on October 1, 1886, in the sinking fund to the credit of that company, including cash payments and transportation service and not including interest on investment, the sum was only $2,917,925.58, and including the sum of $259,640.58 interest on investments, a sum total of but $3,177,566.16, while only $1,042,004.31 of this amount was then invested in bonds and bearing interest

Now, then, under the provisions of the Matthews bill, so roundly denounced at the time it was being urged, had it instead of the Thurman bill been enacted, and its provisions complied with, there would have been on October 1, 1886, in the Treasury of the United States in the Pacific Railroad sinking fund to the credit of the Central Pacific company, a sum exclusive of all interest on investments, of $9,000,000, as against the sum of $2,917,925.58 then found there under the Thurman act, while with interest accumulations, as in the Matthews bill provided, the amount would then have been about $10,500,000, as compared with the then sum total including accumulations of interest under the Thurman act.

But not only so. Under the Matthews bill, had it become a law instead of the Thurman bill, there would, to say nothing whatever of interest on semi-annual payments paid in during the forty-four periodic terms of twenty-two years until the principal of the bonds matured, have been paid to the credit of the sinking fund in the Tressury of the United States the sum of $47,000,000 in cash toward the liquidation of the indebtedness; and this, too, irrespective of the question as to whether either of said companies had realized 5 per cent. or 200 per cent. net earnings; but when we come to consider the proper and reasonable accumulations of interest on that fund, even on the principle of determining as to the rule of interest as prescribed in the Thurman act, which suggested as preferable investments in 5 per cent. interest-bearing bonds of the United States, the amount that would have been in the sinking fund in the Treasury of the United States October 1, 1900, to be applied in liquidation of the indebtedness in connection with 1900, to be applied in liquidation of the indebtedness in connection with former repayments of interest by the companies, would have canceled nearly $100,000,000 of the debt; while under the provisions of the Matthews bill, which provided that each semi-annual payment should bear interest at 6 per cent., the then Government rate of interest, the amount in the sinking fund October 1, 1900, would, under the provisions of the Matthews bill, have been, including all repayments of interest by the companies, considerably over $100,000,000, leaving only about $52,-000,000 of the debt remaining unpaid. And it must be remembered that ten years ago 6 per cent. was deemed a reasonable Government rate of interest. And we could then, ten years ago, have secured an arrange. of interest. And we could then, ten years ago, have secured an arrangement with these companies whereby the Government would have realized 4 or 5 per cent. interest on all deferred payments, whereas now we will be fortunate if we get 3, or even 2.

Indeed, so fully and conclusively have the practical workings of the Thurman funding act demonstrated its inefficiency and absolute failure, and at the same time vindicated the policy and plan proposed by the Matthews bill of eleven years ago, and which principle has now been adopted, not only by an important committee of another body, but also by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate in a bill reported from that committee, as I believe, unanimously, during the last Congress for the repeal of the Thurman act and the creation of a sinking fund by fixed semi-annual payments upon the part of each company, instead of a certain per cent. on net earnings, and also by the select committee which reported the pending bill—I am speaking of the principle simply, not of the merits of any particular bill—that all Government officials and others who by authority have recently spoken on the subject unite in recommending new legislation in which shall be in-corporated the principle of the Matthews bill, and in which the principle of the Thurman act and the act itself shall be repudiated. In fact, as I understand it, the per-cent.-on-net-earnings idea, which is the fundamental theory of the Thurman act, is regarded as having been tried and found wanting. The honorable Commissioner of Railroads, in his report for 1884, page 18, said:

In my judgment it is clear that the Government will be best protected by reasonable extension of time, and by funding the whole remaining debt and interest in obligations of fixed amounts and maturity. Such extensions should be coupled with a provision which shall require the companies to pledge for the payment of each maturing installment all earnings for Government service over all lines, aided and non-aided, owned, leased, or operated by such companies, respectively.

While the present Commissioner of Railroads, in his report for 1886,

It is therefore suggested that it might be alike advantageous to the Government and to the Pacific railroad companies to substitute for the present law one fixing an annual or semi-annual payment by the companies concerned, which should extinguish their debts to the Government in a reasonable time.

Congress had timely warning from a source entitled to great weight upon this important subject, and timely and sensible suggestions as to the proper manner to deal with this important subject; and had the Forty-fifth Congress given heed to these suggestions—I refer to the reports of the Government directors of the Union Pacific Railroad of 1876 and 1877-its legislation would not have been stranded on the visionary theories and absurd policies upon which the act of 1878 was based.

Again, I call attention to the report of the Union Pacific Railroad directors of October 12, 1877, as found in Senate Executive Document No. 69, first session Forty-ninth Congress, in reference to this matter. I ask the Secretary to read the portions marked.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

The plan suggested by the Government directors in their report for the year 1876 is believed to be a practicable one, which, if adopted, insures absolutely a full return to the Government of every dollar of its investment in the road. That plan differs from all others that have been proposed by the company in two important respects: It proposes to retain the one-half transportation and 5 per cent. modes of payment now provided for, and a termination of the sinking fund at the maturity of the bonds, and security for the remainder due and unpaid at that time, the same to be discharged at the rate of not less than one-tenth per annum. A further consideration of the subject has led the Government directors to the conclusion that the said plan can be modified to some extent without being unduly burdensome to the company in the conduct of its affairs, and shorten the time for the full reimbursement of the Government.

loss. Can this danger be avoided? The Government directors think it can be. The establishment of a sinking fund is a practical scheme and opens a way out of this difficulty.

A sinking fund, established on the basis of semi-annual payments of $500,000 each, commencing on the list of January, 1878, compounded at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum for the term of twenty years, or until the maturity of the bonds, would give a total result, to be applied to the payment of the Government claim, of $40,418,256.86, and leave still due the Government $9,320,549.84. This balance could be discharged either by the plan suggested in the report of last year or by the simple operation of the half transportation and 5 per cent. of net earnings, as now provided by law.

The adoption of such a plan of adjustment as is here outlined, by the Government and the company with the approval of Congress, would render the payment of the principal and interest of the bonds advanced by the Government absolutely certain. It would be useless to exact more than the company can perform; and it is not unjust to require so much as it can comply with without embarrassing its affairs and depriving the owners of the property of a fair return in form of dividends on the capital invested. It is believed that the company can accept and perform the plan here presented.

Mr. MITCHELLI. I desire now to attract attention to the report

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire now to attract attention to the report of the directors in 1883, page 218 of the same document. I ask the Secretary to read the marked portions.

The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

The relation between the company and the Government growing out of the bonded indebtedness of the consolidated roads to the Government have never been entirely harmonious or satisfactory. Differences of opinion have arisen concerning the amounts due the company for Government service, mail carriage, Army transportation, etc., the terms of payment, construction of charter provisions, and laws of Congress, and other matters of detail, so that there has seemed to be a constant clashing of interests between the two.

The so-called Thurman act, which was intended to be a conclusive settlement of the questions at issue between the Government and the company, has failed to effect its purpose, and a mutual understanding as to its meaning and scope has not yet been reached. That portion of the act which provided for the investment of a fixed proportion of the earnings of the road in certain United States bonds as a sinking fund for the gradual extinction of the debt has been rendered inoperative and null by the action of the Government in taking up the bonds of the class named in the act, so that there are none now to be purchased in market. Hence it happens that the company has paid into the United States Treasury large sums of money which lie idle and uninvested, to the company's loss, and with no gain to the Government. The value of the company's securities is impaired by this condition of things. It seems plain that, for the sake of the Government as well as of the company, there should be some additional legislation on this subject at as early a day as possible.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I desire to have read a short ex-

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I desire to have read a short extract from the report of the directors of the Union Pacific Railroad for the year 1884, page 234 of the same document, and also a small portion on page 235.

The Secretary read as follows:

NET EARNINGS

There is equity in the claim, in the opinion of the Government directors, that in arriving at net earnings there should be deducted such sums as are properly and necessarily expended in improvements and betterments. The high degree of excellence, of speed, and assurances of safety demanded in present railway management dictate the justice of this policy within reasonable limits. It is only by its operation that the Union Pacific could stand to-day, as it does, in the very front rank of first-class roads. In fact, the Supreme Court has affirmed this view; it says:

"We think the true interest of the Government is the same as that of the stockholders, and will be subserved by encouraging a liberal application of the earnings to the improvement of the works. It is better for the ultimate security of the Government."

If the view of the Government directors is correct, however, the argument and decisions of courts that whatever, without some defined limit, may be expended in betterments is an addition presame to the security of the Government is fallacious. The original excessive cost of the road is an element that can not be eliminated by this process. In proportion as the amounts devoted or diverted to this purpose are permitted or increased, the payments to the Government, which in the premises are the only real security the Government has, are reduced. That the bounds of what is proper in this regard may not be exceeded, the interposition of some tribunal other than that simply of the law-making power is imperatively demanded, if the past policy is to be continued.

A commission or a Government directory, in its personnel professionally competent, plenary authority being delegated to it to command the facilities for intelligent information and action, and with power to conclude negotiations, suggests itself as a necessary requisite in the premises. There is no person or department representing the Government that has this needful authority now. The office of Commissioner of Railroads, as at present constituted, has not the time, the clerical or professional force, nor she pecuniary ability at its command to intelligently deal with all the issues involved. Nor is it provided with the legal authority necessary.

time, the clerical or professional force, nor also pecuniary ability at its command to intelligently deal with all the issues involved. Nor is it provided with the legal authority necessary.

SINKING FUND.

The company rightfully protests that the investment of such a sinking fund for the benefit of the Government (or creditors) as has been accumulated is unjust to it. The fund is not so invested as to earn the full measure of its ability, if properly invested. It tends, therefore, in no practical degree to relieve the debt of the staggering proportions it will have assumed when the time arrives for its payment. If the prosent policy of percentage upon net earnings, and the investment of the same in a sinking fund, is to be pursued, experience having dictated that some vital essential is lacking to the successful working of the policy, some additional measures must be adopted. The successful working of the policy presupposes two things—the Government securing the full and entire amount of its proportion of the net earnings, and investment of that amount so as to accumulate with reasonable rapidity.

But if the Government is to be reimbursed out of net earnings, the Government will ever know, for it is practically impossible to definitely arrive at, what those earnings really are or may be until some competent commission or Government directory is empowered by law to supervise continually and constantly the actual concerns and operations of the company. Aside from this being impracticable, there is grave doubt whether results would then be satisfactory, especially to the Government and public. This for the reason, among others, that conditions which this year might prompt and enable the company to comply with certain demands next year might render such concession a physical and financial impossibility.

But the Government directors are by no means assured that this is the view to be taken of this matter. The principal concern of the Government, in its present inancial condition, a matter which should be consider

HOW SHALL THE RIGHTS OF THE GOVERNMENT BE SECURED?

HOW SHALL THE RIGHTS OF THE GOVERNMENT BE SECURED?

The Government directors are reluctant to offer suggestions in this regard. Yet the purpose of their office would seem almost to exact and enjoin the performance of that function.

The Government is now face to face with the proposition that it shall deal justly with this corporation as it now finds it, and at the same time justly with the public and commercial interests. The Government directors have endeavored to present conditions as they exist. The time to deal vigorously with the corporation and to speedily accomplish the purposes now sought, and which the public interest in the past, as now, demanded, was permitted to pass by. This is not offered as a criticism, as the comparative ability required to speak and act in the light of past events as contrasted with those of the future is very slight.

Still this fact, anomalous as it now seems, presents itself, that the Government can not afford to cripple the road by commanding any acts which present conditions render it probably impossible for the company to perform or which would render its securities of uncertain and merely speculative value. Justice to itself, to the public interest, and to the company dictate this much.

But until some practical and intelligent measures, other than those now prevailing, looking to a solution of the complications referred to, are adopted, the controversies between the company and the Government will continue. The hope that "the managers of these large railway enterprises should be allowed to address themselves to the thorough management of their trust, and to that end they should be dismissed from attendance in Washington to defend themselves in never-ceasing Congressional controversies" (Roseoc Conkling in the United States Senate, February 6, 1877), will never be realized.

Mr. MITCHELLL. It will be seen, Mr. President, that the Government of the company is a serious controversies of the controversies of the controversies of the control of the company is a company of t

Mr. MITCHELL. It will be seen, Mr. President, that the Government directors of the Union Pacific Railroad in their annual report for 1886, as well as in several other reports repudiated, not only the principle of the Thurman act, but the act itself, and acting for the Government, and as its officers, and in its interest, recommended the passage of a bill by Congress providing for the payment of that company's debt in fixed semi-annual installments. And again this board of high officials in their report of November 22, 1886, in condemning the Thurman act, as not only comparatively worthless, but strangely and ridiculously unjust, in some respects to both the Government and the companies, and in proposing new legislation based on the theory of fixed semi-annual payments into a sinking fund irrespective of the amount of net earnings, recommend an extension of time of payment, and used this forcible and significant language:

In its last annual report this board earnestly recommended the early passage by Congress of some act which would change and settle the present very unsatisfactory relations between the Government and the railway company. It is admitted upon all sides that existing legislation is insufficient and has utterly failed in several respects.

First. It does not provide an annual sum large enough even to prevent an annual increase of the debt.

The average amount of increase for some years past has been over a half million per annum.

The average amount of increase for some years pass has been continued in per annum.

Second. Existing legislation makes no provision whatever for the large amount of principal and accrued interest which will become due, at the maturity of the debt, in about ten years.

Third. Existing legislation locks up even the annual amounts which it does provide in such manner that they do not earn 2 per cent. per annum, benefiting no one by this low rate, but delaying the Government in the receipt of its dues, and causing serious and permanent loss to the railway company. The present amount thus locked up is about $5,500,000, and the annual loss to the company from the low rate of interest which it earns is over $200,000.

While this relates, of course, only to the Union Pacific, as the jurisdiction of the directors did not extend any further, all that is said here applies in a general way to the condition of affairs connected with the Central Pacific.

applies in a general way to the condition of allairs connected with the Central Pacific.

Fourth. The method of determining the annual amount to be reserved by the company for meeting its debt is vague and uncertain. Differences of opinion constantly arise between the representatives of the Government and those of the company, which create friction and can only be authoritatively settled in the courts after protracted and expensive litigation. New officers of the Government possess and exercise the right of reviewing the methods and rulings of their predecessors in office and reopening the accounts and settlements of former years. The Government in short is made a quasi partner of the company, with an interest in every detail of its business, an unnecessary relationship, and vexatious to both.

Legislation has been suggested, and is now before Congress, which seems well adapted to correct all of these defects in existing laws and to restore it e Government to its true position, that of a creditor.

Its debt is not yet due and is too large for its debtor to pay immediately, if it were due. Meanwhile its present security is insufficient. But the debtor has additional securities which may be pledged, and a solvent business capable of paying the entire interest and a part of the principal each year if he can only be permitted to conduct and manage it in accordance with business principles and with the same freedom enjoyed by his rivals. At present the debtor is hampered both by the partnership and by the cloud upon his credit caused by the attitude of the Government. Surely it is to the great advantage of both parties that this state of affairs should cease, that a permanent adjustment should be made which will give the Government ample security for its debt and pay the interest in full and a part of the principal each year, and give to the company freedom of action in the management of its business and good credit in financial centers.

And of the two the Government will be the greater gainer by the adjustment. It

But not only so, Mr. President, we find the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, of which the honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. ED-MUNDS] is now, as he was eleven years ago, when he and his able colleague and coadjutor on that committee, the then distinguished Senator from Ohio, secured by their able efforts the passage of the Thurman bill, the chairman, submitting a report to the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress (Senate Report No. 1097) in which the following statement is made in reference to the worthlessness and failure of the Thurman act. That report says:

It is further shown by the Commissioner's report, as all who have examined the matter now fully understand, that the act of May 7, 1878 (the Thurman sinking-fund act), has failed to accomplish its ends and purposes, and it is manifest the payment of these debts can not be secured by and under this measure, and this from causes that could not be anticipated when the act was passed.

But, Mr. President, they were not only anticipated when the Thurman bill was under discussion in this body, but were distinctly and plainly brought to the attention of the Senate at that time by more than one Senator, and urged as valid reasons why it should not become a law.

I myself on that occasion, among other things, said this—I quote from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 20, 1878:

While, therefore, Mr. President, I favor the creation of a sinking fund that will fully indemnify the Government dollar for dollar for the $150,000,000 and over that will be due from these companies about the year 1900, I oppose the measure reported from the Judiciary Committee; first, because I believe it to be a measure clearly beyond our constitutional power to enact.

It is true the Supreme Court subsequently, by a bare majority, decided otherwise, but a full minority, including Justices Field, Bradley, and one other justice, which one I do not remember, dissented and held to the view suggested here:

And, second, because I believe it to be one, even had we the power to pass it and compel its enforcement against these companies through the judicial tribunals, that is unjust, oppressive, and contrary to the true spirit of our institutions, and above all one that is not in the true interests of the Government; a measure that the companies could, if disposed, by a manipulation of their various accounts of operating expenses, construction accounts, accounts with branch roads, etc., evade and render inoperative to a very great extent in so far as any good results to the Government are concerned.

That was my prediction as to the effect of the Thurman act when the bill was under discussion here eleven years ago.

I now desire to read from the report submitted by the chairman of the select committee of the Senate [Mr. FRYE] on the same subject. On page 2 he says:

On page 2 he says:

The Thurman act took effect June 30, 1878. Its framers based their calculations upon the assumption that the fund would increase at the rate of 6 per cent, annually through the compounding of interest, but the reduction in the rate of interest which followed the refunding measures of 1879 and the rise in the price of United States bonds, in which alone the sinking fund could be invested, defeated these expectations, and the result is that the sinking fund to-day would be almost as large if the money paid in by the companies had remained uninvested and earning no interest.

The premium on bonds called and bonds remaining in the sinking fund December 31, 1857, exceeded the interest received from such bonds by the sum of $715,282.09, as appears by the following statement—

The excess of premiums on this transaction amounted to $715,282.09; that is to say, the premiums paid on these investments exceeded the interest collected on the investments by $715,282.09, and, as remarked by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES], on my left, if this thing is permitted to go on a few years under the operation of the present funding bill there will not be a cent left; it will be all absorbed.

Mr. DAWES. I will ask the Senator if he can tell how long it will take that frog to get out of the well?

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not think he will ever get out if he slips

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not think he will ever get out if he ships back farther every day than he gets up each night.

While, Mr. President, I am earnestly desirous, and always have been, that the Union and Central Pacific companies should be compelled to reimburse the Government for every dollar of aid, principal and interest, which they or either of them received from the United States, and which by any fair and reasonable interpretation of the laws under and by virtue of which such aid in bonds or interest payments was granted they or either of them are legally or equitably bound to pay or reimburse, I have always held to the opinion, and it is my opinion still, that the true policy to be pursued by Congress, in view of the precarious, subordinate, and flimsy character of the liens held by the Government, and the policy better calculated than any and all others to protect and certainly secure the interests of the Government, and finally the full payment of the debt, principal and interest, is one not finally the full payment of the debt, principal and interest, is one not of violent antagonism, but rather one looking to co-operation, mutual concessions, and an amicable arrangement.

Sometimes a creditor, especially if he hold a first-mortgage lien on property of ample value to secure a present indebtedness already due, principal and interest, is in position to resort to the most radical and violent means imaginable for the purpose of collecting his debt, without caring to consult his debtor or without running any risk of losing his claim or any part of it; but if on the contrary the debt is not due his claim or any part of it; but if, on the contrary, the debt is not due for eight, ten, or fifteen years, if his mortgage lien is on a property constantly depreciating in value, and if, still further, his lien is subordinate to a prior lien covering the same property to the full value of it, what course would a prudent creditor, with ordinary business capacity or judgment, be most likely to pursue?

Would he probably resort to violent means in the first instance, wholly ignoring the debtor, refusing to consult or confer with him, either as to his disposition or ability to make some honorable and just arrangement looking to the creation or security of a fund to meet the debt at maturity; or would he not rather deem it for his best interest-would he rather not regard it as the exercise of true wisdom looking solely to his own interests, before resorting to such vigorous means as would most likely encounter the violent antagonism of the debtor, and thus reduce the chances of final success, to exhaust every reasonable, proper, and honorable effort to secure some amicable arrangement whereby through the mutual co-operation and joint efforts of creditor and debtor finally there might be a discharge of all the obligations on terms alike honorable to both. The failure to adopt such a policy ten years or more ago, when opportunity presented, has, as subsequent history has fully demonstrated, seriously jeopardized the power of this Government to compel the collection of many millions of dollars justly due it. Congress then to a very great extent sacrificed the interests of the United States for the sake of a sentiment.

This thing, Mr. President, of the Government taking great debtor railroad companies by the throat, which was said to have been the case when the passage of the Thurman act was secured, although it must be confessed the sequel has demonstrated that that act was not much of a corporation throat-grappler, and forcing things, in order to secure a debt of over $150,000,000, with a most precarious security, is all very fine in theory, and the very idea, I admit, is palatable to most men, especially those who are unfamiliar with the real state of the case as respects the amount of the debt, the character of the obligation in-volved, and the flimsy, unreal, and unsubstantial nature of the security held by the United States.

But when we pause to consider that this immense debt is not yet due the United States, and will not be for some nine or ten years to come; that it will then, principal and interest (less the amount that will in all probability then be paid), amount to more than $125,000,000, and when it is further remembered that the property on which this amount is secured to the Government is subject to a prior mortgage lien, the principal of which alone, assuming that the interest will be paid by the companies as it falls due, will at maturity amount to $64,613,000, and all of which enormous amount has priority, and must be first paid before the Government can expect a dollar, we can then realize the importance of prudence in whatever step may now be taken looking to the creation of a separate fund and obtaining additional security to meet the obligations of these companies to the Government. Continued, persistent, and malignant controversy, legislative, judicial, departmental, and political, may expedite the collection of this enormous claim; but on the contrary such a policy may, and in my judgment in all probability will, result in its ultimate loss, either in whole or in greater part.

The sum total of the two debts at maturity, that is, the first and second mortgages, granting that all interest on the first mortgages will be paid to maturity by the company, will, as matters are now running, be, exclusive of all certain and all probable payments, about $193,000,000, a sum doubtless more than double, as stated by the Commissioner of Railroads, what it would now cost to build these roads. If, therefore, as stated by him, this controversy proceeds, or if the Congress fails to create a fund by providing for the repeal of the Thurman act and the enactment of a law requiring payment of certain fixed semi-annual amounts by each company, and the property should be sold on a foreclosure of either the first or second mortgage, what would be the result? If any other than the Government became the purchaser, and the property sold for less than this enormous amount of $193,000,000, the Government would lose the full amount of the deficit, whatever it might prove to be.

But if, on the other hand, the Government were to become the purchaser, as it would undoubtedly be compelled to do in self-defense and self-preservation, then in order to have a clear and unincumbered property it would be compelled to go down into its Treasury for the sum of at least $64,613,000 with which to cancel the prior mortgage. And this estimate of the total indebtedness at maturity of $193,000,000 is on the assumption that the companies will in the future be entitled to on the assumption that the companies will in the future be entitled to the average of past annual credits; also, that the companies shall keep down all interest to maturing of principal of first-mortgage bonds, and assuming, also, that the increase in the debt in the future would average about the same as in the past, which for several years a few years ago amounted annually to about $1,600,000; perhaps not so much now. But suppose no further payments should be made before the maturity of the bonds, what then? How would the account then stand?

According to the letter of the Secretary of the Treasury of January 18, 1887 (Senate Executive Document No. 34, second session Forty-ninth Congress)—and this was the claim of the Treasury Department at that time as to the then state of the accounts—there was due from at that time as to the then state of the accounts-there was due from the several Pacific railroad companies for interest paid by the United States to January 1, 1887, the sum of $70,854,325.62, of which amount there had been repaid by the companies at that date the sum of $21,-552,144.14, leaving due on account of interest the sum of $49,302,-181.48; and further, that there will be due on the same account at maturity on the subsidy bonds September 11, 1897, the average date or maturity, the further sum of $43,406,921.88, making a total of $92,-709,103.36 due and to become due on account of interest alone, which, with the principal of the bonds added of $64,623,513, would reach the enormous aggregate of $157,332,615.36, to which we must add the principal of the first-mortgage bonds of $64,613,000, which must first be paid before the Government can come in, and we have in that view an aggregate indebtedness on this basis of calculation, all falling due nine years hence, according to the Secretary of the Treasury, of $221,945,-

Is the Government of the United States, I inquire, in the presence of these appalling figures and in view of the unreal and inadequate character of the security it holds, in a position either to postpone consideration of the entire controversy or to inaugurate such measures as will result in throwing these roads, or either of them, into the hands of a receiver? Once in that condition what becomes of the enormous debt owing and in eight or nine years hence to become due from these companies to the United States? With the payment of all those extravagant charges incident to court management of railroad properties the depreciation in condition and value of assets which invariably follow in the train of proceedings of that character, and finally the payment of a prior lien of $64,613,000 to preferred creditors, what could we hope or expect would remain to apply in discharge of the companies' indebtedness to the Government? edness to the Government!

In conclusion, Mr. President, whatever may be said in just criticism on the management of the Pacific roads that received aid in bonds from the United States, and whatever may be said to-day as to the liberal character of the legislation through whose beneficence it was made possible to connect with bands of steel the two grand civilizations of the Atlantic and Pacific coasts some twenty years ago, I have never been among the number, and am not now, who believe, and never expect to believe, that any very great mistake was made upon the part of the Congress which extended this gracious bounty in behalf of one of the grandest and most herculean of business enterprises ever conceived by the genius or consummated by the energy, perseverance, and skill of man or government.

And even were the United States so unfortunate, either through its own mistakes, delays, and mismanagement, or the failure or refusal of these companies to do their duty, as to lose every dollar of the gigantic debt which is its just due and now under consideration, still this great Government, this mighty age in which we live, this grand citizenship of America, humanity in its every aspect, science, art, religion, commerce, national and international; internal and foreign trade, trans-continental and trans-oceanic, and civilization itself in this and other hemispheres, all would be promoted and their best and most sacred interests advanced in a measure and to an extent beyond all comprehension or computation in value by the construction across the American continent, over rugged, 'rock-ribbed' mountains and sterile plains, of the pioneer trans-continental roads of this country.

The saving to the Government in the cost of transportation of mails and of Government supplies, and for military protection on the over-land, to say nothing of the infinite number of other important considerations, would of itself justify the expenditure of every dollar the Government has ever invested in these roads. But when we come to consider all the various other benefits accruing to the Government, to say nothing of those inuring to its individual citizens, to commerce, trade, material development, and the general welfare, we find they are almost beyond conception.

The cost of transporting United States through mails alone, for the ear ending eighteen months prior to the opening of the Pacific roads, Union and Central Pacific between the Missouri River and Placerville, in California, reached the enormous sum of $2,129,550. From June 30, 1861, to June 30, 1864, a period of three years, this through mail service overland cost the United States the sum of $3,210,000, or an average of $1,070,000 annually, not including the sum of $200,000 per annum paid by the Government during this time for steam-ship mail service via the Isthmus, and the further sum of $50,000 per annum from Placerville to San Francisco. So that the average cost of mail service for the four years previous to June 30, 1864, between the Missouri River and the Pacific coast, was $1,296,213 per annum. And in like proportion was the cost of this service during the whole period between the time when the mail service was first established between the two extremes of this continent, East and West, up to the opening of the Pacific roads in 1869.

But what was the result on the completion of the railroad? The whole cost of this same mail service, or rather a very largely increased service, for the year ending June 30, 1870, the first year after the completion of the road, was, including the sum of $100,000 paid the steamships for twenty-four trips by the Isthmus, only $566,250, or a saving of $1,563,300 in a single year over that paid the same service for the year ending June 30, 1868. But this saving in actual cash to the Government is a mere bagatelle compared with the untold advantages that result, not alone to the Government, but all the people interested and every department of business life by reason of the expedition in time and manner of service as now performed on these and other Pacific roads, compared with the service by the old stage-coach. Who can estimate the vast superiority in the value of the mail service performed in four days in splendid railroad coaches with promptness and dispatch and without the delays, with that of a service by wagons occupying from three to four weeks in a single trip, and subjected to all the delays and obstacles and inconveniences and dangers incident to travel across a wilderness inhabited by a hostile foe of savages?

But, Mr. President, not only so. While it is true the price charged by these roads for Government transportation may seem extravagantly high, averaging, perhaps, on the whole time since these roads were opened, as much as from 15 to 25 cents per 100 pounds for each 100 miles—and up to the year 1872 it averaged fully 25 cents per 100 pounds for that distance; yet the rate paid by the Government before the roads were built, before the war, was over five times this latter amount, averaging on all Government transportation in the West $1.30 per 100 pounds for each 100 miles.

The amount charged by these Pacific roads for Government transportation at the average rate of 25 cents for 100 miles from the beginning up to October 1, 1870, less than two years after the roads were opened, was, according to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury of that date, and not including mail service, $4,178,967.90, as I find from a report on this subject heretofore made to this Senate. What, let me inquire, would have been the cost of this service at rates of transportation ruling before the war, by means of wagons? Simply over five times that amount, or reaching the enormous sum of $22,000,000 on the amount of transportation during that short period; and thus a saving to the Government up to that date alone is shown by the actual figures of nearly $18,000,000, while the saving in the eighteen years that have elapsed since then is still in much greater proportion over the amounts paid for transportation prior to the completion of the roads, from the fact that the Government rates of transportation on the roads have gradually decreased, especially since these roads have been brought into competition with other trans-continental lines.

But this is not all. In 1871 this Senate adopted a resolution calling on the Secretary of War for his estimate of the cost to the United States of the military service through the War Department in guarding and protecting the overland route west of the Missouri River, from the date of the acquisition of California to 1864, a period of sixteen years, and in his letter in response to such resolution the Secretary, on February 15, 1871, estimates such cost for such service during that period at about $100,000,000, accompanying his report with the remark that this sum is rather below than above the true cost of the service.'

To this add the further annual sum paid during the same period for transportation of Indian supplies of over $500,000, including an average, as I have shown, of considerably over $1,000,000 per annum for this period for the mail service, and we have an average annual expense to the United States on these items for transportation alone, including the cost of this military service from 1848 to the opening of the Pacific roads, of over $8,000,000. And we find by reference to the Senate debates when the Pacific railroad bill was under discussion here in 1862. that the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Pacific Railroads asserted that the cost of this service, as estimated by him, was at that time $7,500,000 per annum.

The amount of interest being paid by the Government on the $64,-618,832 of bonds issued in aid of the Pacific roads is $3,877,129.92, less than one-half the amount it cost the Government annually for Government transportation and military service on the overland route prior to the opening of the Pacific roads, while the effect of the opening of these roads has been to reduce the total annual cost of the same, with largely increased transportation and all necessary military service, to less than one-fifth of that paid before the roads were open.

Now, it may occur to some that these considerations are foreign to the subject-matter under discussion. I insist not. Congress did not seem to think so two years ago when it passed a bill authorizing the investigation and when it incorporated into that very act an amendment reciting matters bearing upon this question and directed the commission to look into them.

I contend that in dealing with these companies all the circumstances connected with the construction and management of these roads and surrounding the incorporation of the companies by which they were built, the controlling motives as we may gather them from their acts which operated on the public mind, and the mind of Congress in inducing the legislation of 1862 and the amendatory act of 1864, the intention of those Congresses in reference to the duty or lack of obligation of the companies under the law to refund to the United States interest payments until the maturity of the principal of the bonds, the difficulties with which the companies were, at a time when the nation was in the throes of civil war, compelled to contend in launching and carrying forward this great enterprise to successful completion, and in completing it several years before the time designated by Congress for its consummation, the marvelous benefits that have accrued to the Government and all its people, the reclamation of an empire from the solitudes of a wilderness and its conversion into vast and fertile fields of grain, peopled with myriad hosts of industrious, enterprising, energetic men and women; studded with unnumbered happy homes, humble hamlets, growing towns, rising cities and budding States, and uniting in one grand result by adding strength, vitality, intelligence, wealth, independence, dignity, grandeur, and power to our common country and our glorious nationality. The completion of the first line of trans-continental railroad was a mighty instrumentality in the beginning of a grand work in the extension of our empire, the consummation of which is rapidly approaching and will soon be hastened onward, when all the Territories of the mighty West shall be swallowed up in as many or more American States. All of these considerations, I insist, including also those relating to the magnitude of the debt involved, the frail character of the security held by the Government, the failure of the companies, if any such there be, to conform to the demands of the legislation that gave them corporate existence and conferred on them a princely bounty, their violations of law, if any, their indisposition, if such is the fact, to voluntarily take the necessary and proper action looking to the creation of a fund to meet their just obligations to the Government—all these, Mr. President, I assert and confidently insist are considerations not only proper but necessary to be considered in legislating upon this, one of the most important subjects of a quasi public nature that ever engaged the attention of this or any other Congress of this or any other Government on the face of the earth.

And in conclusion. Inasmuch as the Congressional aid to these roads was originally given by one act for the purpose of securing one great trans-continental railroad from the Missouri River to the waters of the Pacific, and in view of all the subsequent legislation to which I have attracted attention, by all of which this great question has been treated as one subject, and inasmuch as the pending bill includes in its provisions but one portion of the subject-matter involved, I insist my motion to refer with instructions to include the whole controversy in one bill should be received with favor by the Senate, and should be moreover accepted by the select committee having this business in

FILING OF REPORTS.

The following reports were filed by being handed in at the Clerk's

LIFE-SAVING STATION ON COAST OF MAINE.

Mr. THOMAS H. B. BROWNE, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 12434) to establish a life-saving station on the Atlantic coast at or near the mouth of St. George River, Maine; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GUANO ISLANDS.

Mr. RAYNER, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back favorably the bill (S. 3516) to further suspend the operation of section 5574 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, Title LXXII, in relation to Guano Islands; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGES ACROSS GREEN RIVER.

Mr. CRISP, from the Committee on Commerce, reported as a substitute for bill H. R. 11996, a bill (H. R. 12524) to authorize the construction of bridges over Green and Barren Rivers, in the State of Kentucky, by the Henderson State Line Railroad Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bill H. R. 11996 was reported back with a recommendation that it be laid on the table.

SUSAN P. MURDOCK.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2758) granting a pension to Susan P. Murdock; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SPECIAL-ASSESSMENT LIEN CERTIFICATES.

Mr. GROUT, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with amendment the bill (H. R. 3737) for the relief of the holders of District of Columbia special-assessment lien certificates, and for other purposes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of general appropriation bills. The Clerk will report the title of the unfinished business.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12383) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I have but a few words to submit in support of the position I have taken in opposition to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], to which I will ask the attention of the Chair. I have carefully examined the decisions that were rendered at the last session of this Congress bearing upon the proposition of my colleague from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT]. The most that can be said of the decisions in these cases is that they have taken the view that the Committee on Appropriations had not been altogether deprived of jurisdiction over the appropriations contained in the fortifications bill which they reported to the House and against which the point of order was made. It may be conceded, for the sake of the discussion, that the decisions were correct. I differed then, as I now differ, with the gentlemen who were then in the chair as to the conclusions reached.

But suppose, sir, that we concede to the fullest extent what has been claimed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania in those decisions. How far do they go? Simply to the effect that the Committee on Approprifar do they go? Simply to the elect that the Committee on Appropriations has not altogether parted with its jurisdiction over the appropriations they report in that bill. Take, for instance, the decision upon the fortifications bill in the last session. The point of order was made against the appropriations for torpedoes therein provided that were to be used in defense of harbors or fortifications. It has been held by the Chair under the practice of the House, not under the rules of the House, but the committee on Appropriations still thair under the practice of the House, not under the rules of the House, but the common practice, that the Committee on Appropriations still had power to report appropriations in the fortifications bill looking to the armament of forts or defense of harbors.

Now, I insist that the most that can be said in behalf of the Committee on Appropriations is that it may have concurrent jurisdiction with the Committee on Military Affairs of such appropriations. The Chair did not go so far as to hold that the Committee on Military Affairs was denied jurisdiction on this question. If the question had arisen on the Army bill, or any bill reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, I doubt whether the gentleman from Georgia would have contended, and I doubt whether he would contend now, whilst upon the floor, that the Committee on Military Affairs did not have equal and concurrent jurisdiction with the Committee on Appropriations over such subjects. Now, sir, I do not see how he or any one can hold that this Committee on Military Affairs does not at least have concurrent jurisdiction. Why do I hold, sir, that the Committee on Military Affairs, if it has not exclusive jurisdiction, has concurrent jurisdiction with the Committee on Appropriations over appropriations of this character? Clause 12 of Rule 11 says in explicit terms:

All subjects which relate to the military establishment and the public defense, including the appropriations for its support and for that of the Military Academy, shall be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Clause 3 of the same rule in defining the jurisdiction of the Committee on Appropriations, among other things, declares that all subjects relating to "fortifications" may be referred to that committee. Now, sir, the rule that I have read in relation to the Committee on Military Affairs goes further than the rule as laid down in clause 3, Rule 11.

Now, the most that can in my judgment be said by gentlemen is that both of these committees have concurrent jurisdiction over this subject; but if any doubt could be left on the mind of any one as to the jurisdiction, or at least the concurrent jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs, he would certainly yield to the resolution adopted by this House by unanimous consent directly and specifically referring all subjects of that character to the Committee on Military Affairs.

I again ask the Chair to give his attention to the resolution which was reported by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. McMillin] as a member of the Committee on Ways and Means in the distribution of the various subjects included in the President's message passed on the 6th of December last. It reads as follows: both of these committees have concurrent jurisdiction over this subject;

6th of December last. It reads as follows:

Resolved, That so much of the annual message of the President of the United States to Congress at the present session as relates to the Army of the United States, including appropriations therefor, and to provide an armament—

This includes any proposition making appropriations for guns, tor-pedoes, or any arms intended for coast defense and armament. The

Providing for the defense of the seacoast be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

I do not believe, sir, that there can be any doubts upon the point that I have made, and the most that can be said in behalf of the Committee on Appropriations is that it has concurrent jurisdiction with the Committee on Military Affairs in appropriations for fortifications for the seacoast and for the public defense.

Now, in order to show that I am correct in this assumption I will call attention to the decisions that were rendered—the two decisions to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania referred. First to the one rendered by my colleague from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]. The decision is this:

The attention of the Chair has also been called to the decision of the gentleman who occupied the chair when the naval appropriation bill was under consideration at the last session of Congress. At that time the chairman of the committee held that a proposition for the purchase of guns for the use of the Navy was an object previously provided for by law, and that the appropriation was a continuation of such work.

The same point is raised here—that this appropriation has not been authorized by law, and therefore is not in order upon this bill.

authorized by law, and therefore is not in order upon this bill.

The present occupant of the chair, had he presided at that time, would doubtless have made a similar decision; but if it were now proposed to appropriate a sum of money for the armament of ships it certainly would not be contended that that was in order upon this bill, although it might be held to be necessary for the public defense. The words "the public defense," in clause I of Rule XI, refer to such defense as is committed to the Army of the United States, and as clause 3 of this rule has committed the subject of fortifications to the Appropriations Committee, all provisions for public defense to be made by fortification, should go to that committee, just as all provisions for the public defense relating to the Navy should go to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The Secretary of War has transmitted to the committee certain letters, among them one from the Chief of Ordanace, to the effect that this appropriation is desired for the armament of fortifications. The Chair will take cognizance of the fact that the proper officials of the Government who have communicated this matter to Congress have stated that the appropriation is for the purpose of providing armament for fortifications, and such being its object, it should be reported in the fortifications bill, as provided in clause 3 of Rule XI.

Mr. Chairman, the provision in the bill does not anywhere upon its

Mr. Chairman, the provision in the bill does not anywhere upon its This weapon may be used to defend fortifications, but it is not necessarily so used. It may be used many miles away from any fortification or fort; it may be used in the river at any point. As I illustrated yesterday, it might be used anywhere from the mouth of the Potomac River to the city of Washington, a distance exceeding 100 miles. There is not a single fort between this city and the mouth of the Potomac is not a single fort between this city and the mouth of the Potamac, except the old dismantled Fort Washington where no troops are maintained. As I have said, these weapons could be used at any point between this city and the mouth of the river to defend the river approach to the capital.

One point which I made yesterday I wish the Chair to keep distinctly before it, and that is that this is a part of the armament that is desired for the Army and not necessarily to be used in connection with the defense of forts, for, as I have said, the weapon may be used at an entirely different and distinct point from any fort. I desire to call the particular attention of the Chair also to this point, that the military establishment having been authorized by law, it is in order for the Committee on Military Affairs to report any amendment in support of the military establishment. That principle was laid down by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] when he was in the chair some week or ten days

I do not know what opinion other gentlemen may entertain of the learning and knowledge of the rules possessed by the distinguished gentleman from New York, but so far as I am concerned I regard him as one of the ablest parliamentarians, and as having as accurate knowledge of parliamentary principles and as thorough an understanding of the rules of this House as any gentleman who occupies a position upon this floor. With one exception I believe he has served longer than any member of this House. I feel that great weight ought to be given to his opinion. I ask now that the Clerk read from his decision on the occasion to which I refer, a decision which, in my judgment, fully answers the point of order made in this case. In the case upon which the gentleman from New York ruled there was an amendment in the Military Academy bill providing for the construction of an entirely new building at West Point, and in that instance the point of order would really have had more force than it has in relation to the matter now before the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Charreman. Without entering upon the question of the jurisdiction of one committee as related to that of any other, the Chair holds that under clause 12 of Rule XI, "to the military establishment and public defense, including the appropriation for its support and for that of the Military Academy," the Committee on Military Affairs has jurisdiction of this matter; and therefore they have properly jurisdiction of this subject-matter as to the erection of buildings. The Chair will cause to be read the third clause of Rule XXI.

The Cherk read as follows:

"No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto."

The Chairman. Without regard to the precedent cited by the gentleman from Illinois, the Chair decides that, within the meaning of the provision just read, the building proposed to be erected—"fire-proof building on site of public grounds at West Point"—is within the purview of the rule. The construction of a building is an incident to the maintenance of the Academy itself, the object being already in progress—the main object contemplated not only by the bill but by the very institution of the Academy itself.

Without reference to other decisions made from the Chair either in Committee of the Whole or otherwise, the present occupant of the chair is informed that the Speaker of the House on a former appropriation bill held that an appropriation for the construction of a new vessel was in continuation of the general object of maintaining a navy; and that decision of the Speaker "runs on all fours" with the decision which the Chair now makes when he overrules the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, what do we learn from that

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, what do we learn from that decision? First, that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] when occupying the chair followed directly in the footsteps of the Speaker of the House, who had held that the construction of a new vessel was properly to be considered as in support of the naval establishment, and was in order and might be reported in a general appropriation bill for the support of the Navy. As the gentleman rendering the decision states, his decision runs on all fours with that decision of the Speaker. He holds that the construction of an entirely new building, being in the nature of a support of the military establishment, it being author-ized by law, is in order, and that the Committee on Military Affairs, in furnishing means to that extent for the support of the Military Academy, could report a paragraph providing for an entirely new building. Now as to the decision of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT]. I will not take time to read his decision in full, but the gentleman from Georgia had an entirely different question before him. The question before him arose upon the fortifications bill reported by the Committee on Appropriations.

The provision in the fortifications bill expressly declared that the torpedoes proposed in that bill were to be purchased for use as a part of the fortifications. The appropriation was confined by its language specifically to torpedoes for use on fortifications.

Mr. CUTCHEON. It was for fixed mines only.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes; it was for fixed mines, which were a part The provision in this bill, on the contrary, is for of the fortifications. the purpose of purchasing a weapon; is for the purpose of purchasing material for the use of the Army—not necessarily in connection with a fort. If it is in order for the Committee on Military Affairs to report a provision for an entirely new building, and if that can be conceded to be a part of the military establishment, who can deny that a gun, that a torpedo, is not also essentially and properly a part of the military establishment? Can any one conceive of anything which can be more essentially considered as a part of the military establishment than torpedoes and guns, projectiles and arms?

I do not wish to occupy any further time.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. DOCKERY). The Chair is ready to rule upon this question. The point of order submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] raises the question of jurisdiction and is directed to the clause of this bill which provides-

For the purchase, under the direction and at the option of the Secretary of War, of movable submarine torpedoes propelled and controlled at will by power transmitted from shore stations, such torpedoes to have a speed of not less than 15 miles an hour on a 1½-mile test, to carry 11,000 feet of cable, to steer to the right or left within a radius of 300 feet before or after diving under a spar or log, to carry not less than 400 pounds of dynamite or other high explosive, and before acceptance to meet the approval of the Board of Engineers, and the appro-priation thereof shall be available until exhausted, $500,000.

Since the close of the session yesterday the Chair has made a some-what careful investigation of this question; and as a result of that investigation will say that even if he entertained a doubt as to the correctness of former rulings in respect to this controversy he would be inclined to follow those rulings, for the reason that the contrary course would involve the appropriation bills in much confusion and lead to a duplication of items. The Chair, however, entertains no doubt whatever as to the question of jurisdiction raised by the point of order. The distribution of the appropriation bills at the beginning of the first session of the last Congress made no change in the phraseology of the rule. The only effect of the change was to provide that certain appropria-tion bills which prior to that time had been under the control of the Appropriations Committee should be given to other committees. this connection the Chair desires to submit an extract from a recent decision of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the fortification bill, which decision in the opinion of the Chair reflects some light on this question and aids us in the endeavor to see our way to a proper conclusion.

In that decision it is stated that-

In that decision it is stated that—

An examination of the statutes and of the practice of the House for a long series of years shows that prior to the adoption of the present rules the rules simply assigned the work of appropriations to the Committee on Appropriations. That committee subdivided their work into various general appropriation bills, not by virtue of any rule of the House, but for their own convenience. They were designated as the legislative, executive, and judicial bill, the sundry civil bill, the fortification bill, the District of Columbia bill, the pension bill, the deficiency bill, the military bill, the naval bill, and the bill in relation to post-offices and post-roads, etc.

The subject-matter of these several bills was designated by the Committee on Appropriations itself, and the Chair thinks that the only way of ascertaining the nature of these bills is by an examination of the substance of them. Under these designations they have been crystallized in the practice of the House until they have a significance as pregnant as the strongest language could give them. In the light of this practice the subjects contained in the paragraph—have almost from the beginning been assigned to the fortification bill.

Being the paragraph of the bill then under consideration-House bill 11917-

The question at issue here is a question as to the jurisdiction over what is known as the "torpedo item" of this appropriation bill. Where does it belong, and what appropriation bill should carry it? In endeavoring to reach a just conclusion it occurs to the Chair that it is well to go back to the practice of the House in respect to this item before the change of rules distributed the appropriation bills; for that change of rules made no change in their phraseology, but simply assigned certain appropriation bills to committees which prior to that time had not been given the consideration of them. We find that beginning with 1874, without a single exception the item providing for torondees her bear without a single exception, the item providing for torpedoes has been carried in the fortification bill. Not only this, but since the adoption of the change of rules this item, as the Chair understands, though he is not quite positive as to this, has been carried in the fortification bill. The Chair thinks this is the fact, though it is not material to the question at issue.

Mr. CUTCHEON. There was no fortification bill in the Forty-ninth Congress

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was not certain as to that, but made the statement simply-

Mr. RANDALL. There was.
Mr. CUTCHEON. There was none that became a law.
Mr. RANDALL. In the Forty-ninth Congress there was a bill nevertheless

The CHAIRMAN. The statement was made on the floor yesterday without contradiction to the effect that the "torpedo item" had been carried in the fortification bill of the Forty-ninth Congress. The Chair has not, however, investigated that question.

The Chair therefore thinks that the intent of the House in distributing these appropriation bills was to give to the fortification bill that which it carried prior to the distribution, to the Post-Office appropriation bill that which it carried prior to the distribution, and so with respect to the bills assigned to the other committees.

The Chair does not think it necessary to pass upon the question of order raised by the gentleman from Indiana. For these reasons the Chair sustains the point of order submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to take the place of that portion of the bill ruled out on the point of

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase, under direction and at the option of the Secretary of War, of movable submarine torpedoes propelled and controlled at will by power transmitted from shore stations, such torpedoes to have a speed of not less than 15 miles an hour on a 14-mile test, to carry 11,000 feet of cable, to steer to the right or left within a radius of 300 feet before or after diving under a spar or log, to carry not less than 400 pounds of dynamite or other high explosive, and before acceptance to meet the approval of the Board of Engineers, the same to be used and operated by the Engineer Corps of the Army at points upon navigable waters and at entrances of harbors where permanent fortifications do not exist. $500,000.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to raise the same point of order which has just been decided.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the difference between the amendment and the paragraph which has gone out on the point of order. In the first place, it leaves out that part embraced by the point of order made by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] in regard to the expenditure of the money; the next difference is, it requires this arm to be used and operated by the Engineer Corps of the United States Army; and in the next place it requires it to be operated by the Engineer Corps of the Army "at points upon navigable waters and at entrances of harbors where permanent fortifications do not exist."

This amendment, therefore, excludes the points raised and decided in the ruling of the Chair. It is absolutely certain it refers to a part of the military establishment. It is to be used and operated by the Engineer Corps of the regular Army. It excludes the possibility of this being claimed to be a fortification or to be used in connection with a fortification, because it expressly provides it shall be "at points upon navigable waters and at entrances of harbors where permanent fortifications do not exist."

This, then, Mr. Chairman, brings us down to the question, is a fish movable torpedo a fortification, and therefore to be appropriated for in the regular fortification bill, or is it merely an arm or weapon of the military establishment to be provided in the bill making appropriations for the support of the Army?

Mr. Chairman, let us take for illustration a difficulty which may occur at the present moment. Suppose we were to get into difficulty with a foreign nation and it should attempt to send a fleet up the Potomac River in order to attack this capital. Now we have no fortification either on Chesapeake Bay or on the Potomac River to stay the progress of that fleet. We have no means of defense for this city except by the Engineer Corps of the Army, which has been drilled in the use of the fish movable torpedoes. At any point on the river and operating for a distance of 2 miles, if a hostile fleet approaches they can propel these torpedoes against the enemy and destroy his vessels. This makes it apparent therefore, Mr. Chairman, to my mind that this is simply a weapon; that it is not a fortification nor anything that is to-day called a fortification.

To illustrate further: We have a treaty with Great Britain whereby we are excluded from maintaining upon the Great Lakes upon our northern border to exceed three revenue-cutters, carrying, I believe, one gun apiece. Suppose we should get into difficulty and the British should attempt to send a fleet into the Lakes. We have no vessel there to reach them or contend against them. We have no fort which could stay them; but we could ship a cargo of these movable torpedoes upon say them; but we could sinp a cargo of these movable torpedoes upon a freight-car, and with the Engineer Corps of the Army to operate them "at points upon navigable waters, and at entrances of harbors where permanent fortifications do not exist," in the language of the amendment, we could destroy that fleet or prevent it doing us any serious damage. We could plant these torpedoes on the Detroit where, where there is now no fortification, or upon the coast of St. Clair where there there is now no fortification, or upon the coast of St. Clair, where there is no fortification, or the Sault Ste. Marie, or the straits of Mackinaw, where there is no fortification. With these movable torpedoes planted at the entrance of harbors, and along the shores of navigable waters, making 15 miles, capable of rising, diving, and being deflected, we could, by merely digging a cellar in which the operator could be protected and command the situation, with twenty or thirty of these movable torpedoes destroy the enemy's fleet.

It is not an armament or fortification. It is simply a weapon of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army, and belongs in this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Gentlemen should not confuse the question. The decision of the Chair was as to where this appropriation belonged. All he decided was that it belonged in the fortification bill. He has not decided who shall make the contract for these torpedoes, or how they shall be used. The naked question ruled upon by the Chairman is that this appropriation belongs on the fortification bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. One word. I may misunderstand what was the ruling of the Chair a few moments ago, but if I understood the Chair he does not base his ruling on the rules, but upon what was the practice, and that the practice was to put into the fortification bill appropriations for torpedoes to be used for harbor defense.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois allow an interruption just there?

Mr. TOWNSHEND.

. Certainly. That is the language used in every fortification The CHAIRMAN. bill except two. The Chair would not hold it material to the main question of jurisdiction, but that is the phraseology in respect to tor-pedoes of every appropriation bill except that for the fiscal year 1885 and the fiscal year 1886, in which bills the language, in substance, is the language of the "torpedo section" of the bill now under considera-

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then, if it may please the Chair, the language, with the exception of the acts of 1885 and 1886, has continuously been as stated, and the practice, with exceptions mentioned, has been unbroken, that no appropriations for torpedoes have been made in the appropriation bill except for harbor defense. The unbroken practice has been to confine the appropriations for torpedoes in this bill for harbor

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON] now presents a proposition for an appropriation not to be used in harbor defense or in connection with fortifications. It is for a very different branch of the service. As I have said, the unbroken practice has been to confine the appropriation in the fortifications bill to those torpedoes used only and solely in harbor defense.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Permit me to call the attention of the Chair to a single point that has not been adverted to, I think, in the discussion so far, that the first appropriation for $100,000 for movable torpedoes was carried in the naval appropriation bill, in the act of 1883, passed by the Forty-seventh Congress, and for a very good reason, Mr. Chairman, as will be seen by considering the fact that a vessel of the Navy may take out a supply of naval torpedoes to sea and launch them from the vessel against the opposing fleet. It was carried then in the naval bill, which demonstrates the fact that it was not necessarily a matter for the fortifications bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would say in response to that suggestion that he intended, when delivering the opinion on the point of order submitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], to state that should the Appropriations Committee be deprived of its jurisdiction over this question it would seem that the entire proviso as to submarine torpedoes would more properly appear in the naval appropriation bill rather than the Army bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. There are torpedoes and there are torpedoes. There are naval torpedoes to be used in connection with vessels, and there are land torpedoes to be used by the engineer forces operating from the land. This is not what may be called a land torpedo, but it is projected from the land against the opposing vessel.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the language of the last fortifications appropriation bill, which used these

For practical instruction of engineer troops in details of the service and for the purchase of submarine torpedoes controlled at will by power transmitted from shore stations, etc.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. From what is the gentleman reading? Mr. SAYERS. I am reading from the fortifications appropriation act of the last Congress.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will the gentleman be kind enough to read from the beginning of that paragraph?

Mr. SAYERS. These words are of general signification—

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The beginning of the paragraph is this: For torpedoes for harbor defense,

The gentleman did not read that.

Mr. RANDALL. Oh, you can not do indirectly what by the decision of the Chair you are not permitted under the rules of the House to do directly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has endeavored, in deciding the question of order, to make clear his opinion that the jurisdiction of the torpedo service under the practice of the House properly belongs to the fortifications bill. That was intended to be the decision of the Chair; but if the Chair did not so express himself in unmistakable language he was unfortunate in the use of the terms employed. That was the idea in the mind of the Chair at the time the decision was rendered. The Chair sees no reason to depart from the opinion then entertained, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I offer a further amendment to this paragraph.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will send it to the desk.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to offer the following amendment. In lieu of the paragraph stricken out on the point of order just decided by the Chair insert these words:

For purchase, under the direction and at the option of the Secretary of War, of torpedoes, $500,000.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I raise the same point of order against

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of Mr. RANDALL. It is triffing with the question.

Mr. SPINOLA. It does not seem like trifling with the question—the resist of order that there is nothing be: Mr. SPINOLA. It does not seem like triffing with the question— Mr. SAYERS. I raise the point of order that there is nothing before the committee.

Mr. SPINOLA. I move to strike out the last word. The CHAIRMAN. What was the point of order rai

What was the point of order raised by the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. SAYERS. I made the point of order that the gentleman from New York was proceeding to address the committee when there was nothing pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman had just risen, and of course the Chair had no means of determining for what purpose the gentleman had risen. The Chair understands the gentleman from New York now to move a pro forma amendment.

Mr. SPINOLA. I was about to state, Mr. Chairman, in view of the suggestion made a moment ago, that there is trifling with the decision under the decision of the Chair here, that there appears to be a disposition on the part of one or two of our friends to strike out all of the appropriation for torpedoes, and to strike it out upon the technical ground that it has not been recommended by a proper committee, looking at it from their standpoint. Now, must the country and its safety be jeop-ardized and placed in peril; must the seaboard cities be undefended simply to cater to a technicality on the part of a few of our friends; or should we do that, sir, in a statesmanlike way which the people of the whole country are looking for us to do-that is, to give ample protection to the dozen or fifteen of our great seaboard cities now so entirely unprotected?

You can commence, sir, away in the State of Maine and follow the coast all the way down as far as it extends, and there is no seaport city along that long line but what is left in such a position that in the event of a difficulty with any other country the city may be taken and held for ransom at an enormous sum.

We know that there is trouble of a great and serious character by which we might be brought into conflict with Germany, and under existing circumstances, let me say to my friends here, the great city of New York is unprotected, with its billions of money, and if once captured the ransom would be so high that it would almost stagger the whole Government of the country. But my friend says he does not live there. They live a long way from here. How does it affect my friends, the gentleman from Texas, or the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who lives away up at the head of a small river that is continually asking for appropriations to remove obstructions and remove islands?

Mr. RANDALL. But we have never asked to remove the garbage out of the harbor.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. You asked for an appropriation to remove an

Mr. SPINOLA. You asked for money to remove an island at a cost of two or three hundred thousand dollars last year. Now, I can only ask this of this House in the interest of the great commercial interests of the country, for the protection of all who live upon the seaboard, and for the Pacific coast as well as the Atlantic coast. The Chair has admitted in the decision that he has made that he was in some doubt, that he is not absolutely clear in his judgment; and when we have shaped the proposition in a new form so as to overcome the objection that he entertained, again objection is raised upon the same ground. I therefore think it is a fit subject to appeal to the judgment of this House upon, with all respect to the Chair, who has decided that it is not in order, as to whether we shall leave the people in this imperiled condition in case of difficulty with any nation or whether we shall do that which the whole country is looking for us to do and give such protection to our seaboard cities as will be warranted by our duty to them. I regret exceedingly to differ with my friend from Philadelphia [Mr. RANDALL], as well as with my friend from Texas [Mr. SAYERS].

This is a great public question, and it should not be treated upon a technical point. It is stricken out on a mere point of technicality as it stands before us to-day, and both my friends have placed it in that shape, and not upon its merits. I believe that it should be settled upon its merits, and I have no fear of the representatives of the American people deciding whether they shall place the country in such position, in case that we should have a difficulty with another country, as will fully guaranty the protection of our seacoast on both seas. I will say to my friends that if they do not let it rest upon this bill it will come in in some form. It may come in from the Senate, or it may come back in this very bill, and if it does you will have a great deal of trouble in getting it off.

Mr. SAYERS. You will have trouble in passing it. Mr. SPINOLA. My friend from Texas says that My friend from Texas says that we will have trouble in passing it; but I am speaking to-day to this House, and I appeal to both the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Pennsylvania to let us take the question upon its merits in the House and let it decide it. If it decides that it is not of sufficient merit to be provided for, I will say amen to their judgment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For purchase and repairs of instruments to be issued to officers of the Corps of Engineers, for use on public works and surveys, $4,000.

Library of the Engineer School of Application: Purchase and binding of professional works of recent date treating of military and civil engineering, $500.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I raise the point of order against the paragraph just read. The appropriation is for a library for the Engineer School of Application, stationed at Willets Point, New York. I was about to remark that I am surprised that that item escaped the vigilant attention of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS]. That item is to make an appropriation for the School of Application at Willets Point, New York. It is known as the Torpedo School. The object of that school is to experiment with and to prepare the submerged mines, and to instruct the Army officers in the use of these torpedoes which it has been decided are exclusively to be provided for in the fortification bill. Now, if appropriation can not be made in the Army appropriation bill for the pur chase of a single one of these torpedoes or the material out of which they are made, I certainly hold that the Committee on Military Affairs should not be burdened with an appropriation for the torpedo system. This is a part of the torpedo system, and a necessary part of that system; and the responsibility for the appropriation should rest where the Chair and the gentleman from Pennsylvania decided it belongs. I insist on the point of order under the ruling which has just been made by the Chair.

Mr. RANDALL. If I understand that, I concur in the statement of the gentleman from Illinois. It is new legislation, and it is subject to the point of order.

I insist upon the point of order. Mr. TOWNSHEND.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Can I be heard for a moment?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will say, however, in this connection that it has been the practice of the House to insert this matter in this bill. It has always been put there ever since it was started. But if the ruling is correct upon the last item ruled upon, this should go out upon the point of order that I have raised.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I apprehend, Mr. Chairman, that the point of order is rather argumentative than otherwise. This library and Engineer School of Application is for the instruction of one branch of the military establishment, the Engineer Corps, who are posted at Willets Point. There can be no doubt at all but that this is for the support of a part of the military establishment, and although I do not like to differ with my chairman, yet I think the provision is rightly in this bill, both in theory and in practice, and I should stultify myself not to say so. I differ entirely with the Chairman's ruling on the last point of order; I think that item belongs in this bill, too, but I do not think that two wrongs make one right.

Mr. RANDALL. I simply said that if this changed existing law it was subject to the point of order. The gentleman from Michigan now states that this same paragraph is in the existing law.

Mr. CUTCHEON. It has been customary to make this appropriation on this bill.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, if it does not change existing law the point of order does not apply.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For a building to contain engineer models, $8,000, or so much thereof as may

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I raise the point of order upon that item. There is no existing law authorizing it. It is part of the torpedo system, and it belongs to the Committee on Fortifications, who it is claimed have exclusive charge of appropriations for torpedoes. That runs on all fours with the views of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. RANDALL. We will express our own views without having them filtered through the mind of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, talking about "all fours," this is on all fours with the Military Academy item involved in the decision made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox]. At the present time there is an old tumble-down building at this place which is entirely unfit for the purpose, and we propose to give them a better one, a new brick building, in which to carry on their school and store their I am inclined to think that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] are getting some light on the scope of previous points of order, but at the same time I want to see this provision kept in this bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I wish to add, Mr. Chairman, that there is no question as to the merits of this appropriation or as to the necessity for Upon those points I have not the slightest doubt in my mind, but, as I desire that this bill may be confined to appropriations that are strictly in order, and as the Committee on Appropriations has constituted itself a guardian of this bill-a thing that the Committee on Military Affairs has never done with any billemanating from the Committee on Appropriations-this shows that my committee has more confidence in their judgment than they seem to have in the judgment of the Committee on Military Affairs [laughter]-I feel bound to make the point of order.

Mr. Chairman, while I am on my feet I beg leave to congratulate my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL]. He has robbed the Committee on Ways and Means of the very essence of its jurisdiction and had it transferred to his own committee. He did not do it upon his own motion, but it was the spirit that animated him which induced others to rob that committee of its jurisdiction and transfer it to the Committee on Appropriations. I am not surprised, therefore, that he has become envious of the remnant of jurisdiction left with the Committee on Military Affairs and seeks to take away all that is left with I warn my friend who will soon bring in the Post-Office appropriation bill that he may find himself in the same predicament with the rest of us. It is not so very long since an effort was made here to emasculate the committee over which the gentleman from Pennsylvania presides and deprive it of its most important jurisdiction. He was then powerless to save his committee.

I stood with him hand in hand, shoulder to shoulder, and sought to prevent it from being emasculated of its power, but I find to-day that, Phoenix-like, he has risen up here with more power than he ever before possessed in this House. He has triumphed over the leading and what we all regarded, during the last summer at least, as the most potent committee in this House, the Committee on Ways and Means. I do not therefore wonder that he is encouraged to go on and make new conquests, nor am I ashamed to acknowledge that the Committee on Military Affairs is forced to submit to the conqueror [Laughter.]

Mr. RANDALL. I only want to leave you to your own reflections after the meanness of such a speech.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Oh, the gentleman entirely misapprehends my speech. There was no meanness in it. There was simply a purpose on my part to express my admiration for the gentleman's power and influence, which dominate this House and override the established rules and practices of the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I am afraid you make that last remark at the expense of your sincerity. [Laughter.]
Mr. TOWNSHEND. My friend is again very much mistaken. He knows I am always sincere.

Mr. BUCHANAN. A single suggestion as to the point of order. Of course the point is not made seriously, because it can not be possible that the chairman of the committee which frames this bill would raise this point of order against the provisions of his own bill. But if it be this point of order against the provisions of his own bill. But if it be true that it is made in sincerity, it certainly can not be possible that because for the time being a gentleman who happens to be chairman of the committee is temporarily dispossessed, as it were, of his ordinary stock of patience, the interests of the country should suffer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would suggest, in response to the observations of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CUTCHEON], that the clause here is not only "on all fours" with the decision of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COX], but it is "on all fours" with the decision of the present occupant of the chair rendered on yesterday when he admitted the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. OUTHWAITE] to provide for "officers' quarters" for the post at Columbus, Ohio. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For repairing and preserving ordnance and ordnance stores in the hands of cops and for issue at the arsenals and depots, $5,000.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The Committee on Military Affairs have instructed me to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting the following after the word "dollars," in line 10, page 21:

For the purchase of machine-guns, musket caliber, American manufacture, $20,000.

Mr. SAYERS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois what is to be the size of these guns.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask that a communication from the War Department and a telegram be read which show the caliber of the guns. Mr. SAYERS. My object in the inquiry was to determine whether

I would raise a point of order. I will reserve the point.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the point of order is to be made, we had better have it disposed of before going into the merits of this matter.

Mr. SAYERS. I simply made the inquiry in order to determine whether the amendment was subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas raise a point of

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to know the character of these proposed guns; when I have ascertained that I may not press the point. I reserve the point of order. If, as a gentleman suggests to me, these guns are to be musket caliber, then of course I do not raise the point of or-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the amendment so provides.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I ask that it may be again read; I think the Clerk omitted one word.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not wish to be understood as acquiescing in the assumption that we do not have jurisdiction over all calibers of Gatling guns, if such an assumption is made; that we cannot authorize the purchase of these guns of any caliber for field service. I desire to contest that assumption before reaching the merits of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be again reported.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. SAYERS. I do not raise any point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For manufacture of arms at the national armories, $400,000: Provided. That no more than $60,000 of the money appropriated for the Ordnance Department in all its branches shall be applied to the payment of civilian clerks in said department: Provided further, That hereafter the cost to the Ordnance Department of all ordnance stores issued to the States, Territories, and District of Columbia under the act of February 12, 1887, shall be credited to the appropriation for "manufacture of arms at national armories," and that said appropriation shall be available until exhausted: And provided further, That section 3709 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to the purchase of supplies in the War Department, if the Secretary of War shall so order, when the amount actually needed shall not exceed in value the sum of $200.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to reserve a point of order on this paragraph.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let the amendment be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the word "armories," in line 20, the words "and used to procure like ordnance stores."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I desire to have read a letter from the War Department on this subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] to state that he desired to submit a point of or-

Mr. HOLMAN. I object to unlimited appropriations of money for the War Department.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let the letter be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Very well.

The Clerk read as follows:

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., February 2, 1889.

Washington, D. C., February 2, 1889.

Sir: I have the honor to invite your attention to the proviso in the Army appropriation bill of the past and present sessions of Congress, which requires that the value of all the ordnance stores issued to the militia be refunded to the appropriation "Manufacture of arms."

The Department, of course, intended that the money value of the stores taken from the Army supplies for issue to the militia should be used to replace to the Army those supplies, otherwise the appropriations for the Army for ordnance stores other than small arms would annually have to be increased about $200,000 or more. In order to remove a certain ambiguity in the proviso I request that you will have the proviso amended by inserting, after line 20, on page 12, the words "and used to procure like ordnance stores." This will remove all ambiguity and doubt as to the intent of the law.

A copy of H. R. 12383 showing the desired amendment is inclosed.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. V. BENÉT,

S. V. BENÉT, Brigadier-General, Chief of Ordnance.

Hon. R. W. Townshend,
Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
House of Representatives,

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The War Department does not wish to increase this fund appropriated for manufacture of arms at national armories, but desires authority to use it for like purposes as proposed in this

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to state my point of order. Line 21 reads: And that said appropriation shall be available until exhausted.

And that said appropriation shall be available until exhausted.

Although this does not involve a very large sum of money, the amount being $400,000, yet the provision is subject to the objection that it is in conflict with the Constitution. As to the next proposition, that embraced in the proviso "that section 3709 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to the purchase of supplies in the War Department," it is clearly a new provision of law. That section of the Revised Statutes was adopted after long and very careful consideration. The language of the bill proposes to declare that this provision of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to a given case.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have no desire to say anything more. I do not care to discuss it further.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist upon

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist upon done in violation of the Constitution.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist upon his point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. I certainly do.

Mr. CUTCHEON. With regard to the availability of the appropriation it would be easy to avoid that objection, but in fact it is entirely unnecessary, as the general law covers that point.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Why, it is in the law of the present year.

Mr. HOLMAN. My attention was not called to it at the time, but I certainly do object most strenuously to the inauguration of any system of continuing, in opposition to the provision of the Constitution, appropriations for the Army beyond two years. Continuing indefinitely propriations for the Army beyond two years. Continuing indefinitely appropriations for the Army can not be done in this way, unless it is

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Does the gentleman say that is not in the present law

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not care where it is; it is in violation of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that no appropriation for the Army shall be for a longer period than two years.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If it is against the Constitution then it will not be available after two years.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is against the Constitution.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. But it is the present law, and if unconstitutional, as the gentleman alleges, it can not continue for longer than two years.

Mr. HOLMAN. The attention of the House was not called to it at the time.

Mr. McADOO. Mr. Chairman, I believe the point of order to be well taken. This second proviso virtually repeals the militia law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not hear what the gentleman from New Jersey is saying.

Mr. McADOO. I say that the second proviso virtually repeals the militia law enacted by the Forty-ninth Congress. I have that law before me at this time and will read it if the Chair desires me to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would be glad to hear what the law is.

· Mr. McADOO. It is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1661 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended and re-enacted so as to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. That the sum of $400,000 is hereby annually appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of providing arms, ordnance stores, quartermaster's stores, and camp equipage for issue to the militia."

Now, the gentleman from Illinois, who has been complaining of usurpations by other committees, on the Committee on Military Affairs, has undertaken by this second proviso to turn over this appropriation of $400,000 for the militia to the regular Army. In that act of February 12, 1887, it is provided expressly that it shall be for the purpose of providing arms, ordnance stores, quartermaster's stores, and camp equipage for issuance to the militia. If the Chair has any doubt upon the subject, I will send up the act.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The provision in the present law is the same, with this exception, that the words perpetuating the statute appear in a different part of the proviso. Now the proviso of the present law is

For manufacture, repair, and issue of arms at the national armories, $400,000: Provided, That not more than $60,000 of the money appropriated for the Ordnance Department in all its branches shall be applied to the payment of civilian clerks in said department: Provided further, That the cost to the Ordnance Department of all ordnance and ordnance stores issued to the States, Territories, and District of Columbia, under the act of February 12, 1887, shall be credited to the appropriation for "manufacture of arms at national armories," which appropriation for 1889 and thereafter shall be available until exhausted.

That is the law to-day. The militia law was repealed at the last session. If you strike out the proviso under the law of to-day the appropriation is made available as proposed in the pending bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please send up the provision to which he refers.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is the present law, and I call attention to the fact that the militia law has, to the extent mentioned in the bill, been repealed.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentle-man from Illinois to the fact that the word "hereafter" does not appear in the law of last year.

Mr. CUTCHEON. It says "and thereafter."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It includes the word "thereafter," as I have said, and makes the appropriation available as stated.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is possible, and I take it for granted, that the statement is correct, though I have not examined the matter, that the appropriation bill for the current year contains just such a provision. But if it does, Mr. Chairman, it shows more clearly the necessity of the Chair interposing when a point of order is raised, and the House interposing if the point of order is sustained, to prevent the adoption of any provision which is manifestly in violation of the Constitution. I concede as to the other departments of the Government that this practice has been in existence for many years. We appropriate in this form for the other departments, but the constitutional provision as to the limitation of appropriations for the military department of the Government can not be overlooked.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to have this constitutional provision read, which is higher than any rule of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman to submit that provision of the Constitution is in support of the point of order; but in view of the fact that the proviso is in the last bill the Chair would prefer to let the House decide the question for itself.

Mr. HOLMAN. But it is palpably in contravention of the Consti-

Mr. McADOO. I submit, Mr. Chairman, the further point that it is new legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. If this is to remain in the bill there certainly ought to be some language put in limiting the appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit an amendment that no expenditure of Mr. HOLMAN. I submit all authentic that the special state of the said sum of money shall extend beyond two years.

Mr. RANDALL. From the date of the act?

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course, from the date of the passage of the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am perfectly willing that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana may be accepted, though I see no necessity for it whatever. If it is unconstitutional to make the provision the expenditure could not be made after two years. But to avoid controversy and further discussion, and to enable us to get through with the bill, I accept the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "exhausted," in line 21, insert " not exceeding two years;" so that it will read:
"And that said appropriation shall be available until exhausted, not exceeding two years."

Mr. McADOO. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana, with the consent of the chairman of the Military Committee, has submitted an amendment to this proviso which it seems is designed to limit its operation to two years. As I understand it, this proviso in itself is a change of the whole statute relating to the militia. The statute makes an appropriation of $400,000 a year for the militia, and is a permanent one; but if this proviso against which the point of order was made is to remain in the bill, and the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is accepted, you repeal or limit the operation of the statute to two years, and instead of its being a permanent statute you make it depend years, and instead of its being a permanent statute you make it depend altogether upon the language embodied in the appropriation bill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I think the gentleman is unnecessarily alarmed about the appropriation for the militia. It is a mere question of book-keeping. They get an appropriation of $400,000 every year anyhow; and while I am heartily in favor of the appropriation for the militia system, which the gentleman has advocated so strenuously here, I do not see that there is anything in this provision which can affect it in

Mr. McADOO. The proviso limits it to two years; and if the bill is adopted with that proviso in it, it manifestly takes the place of the existing statutes. Now, if I had known that this provision was in the last bill I should have opposed it with all the ability which I may pos sess. It is in this bill; the Chair has ruled upon it as being admissible under the rule, because of the fact that it is based upon a proviso embodied in the last appropriation bill. But if the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is accepted, that, I take it, repeals the perpetuity of the present law and limits its operation to two years.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me ask, Mr. Chairman, if the Chair has ruled

Mr. HOLMAN. Let me ask, Mr. Chairman, it the chair has ruled upon the proviso to this paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The first proviso on page 21, or the second one? Mr. HOLMAN. I refer to the proviso commencing with line 22. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has not ruled upon that. Mr. HOLMAN. The point of order extends to that as well as to the other, that it changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order? Mr. HOLMAN. I made it, or intended to make it, when I made the other.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will pass upon that question after the pending amendment is disposed of. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, as to the third proviso. There has been no decision given on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will please state his point of order against that proviso again.

Mr. HOLMAN. The point of order—

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I submit that the gentleman from Indiana has waived his point of order by submitting an amendment to that pro-

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserved the point of order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I understand that the gentleman from Indiana offered his point of order against the third proviso of the paragraph; but I have an amendment which I offer to the paragraph that has been read—the second proviso—which has not been disposed of.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report that amendment; and the Chair will hear the gentleman.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after line 20, page 21, the words "and used to procure like ordnance stores."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana will please state the point of order again.

Mr. HOLMAN. I stated the point of order, if the Chair please, at the beginning, and will state it again. This is a proviso that section 3709 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to the purchase of supplies, etc. It is clearly a new law, because it provides that this proviso of the Revised Statutes shall not have the application it now has. The proviso of the Revised Statutes referred to refers to supplies purchased by the War Department, while this proviso declares that the Revised Statutes shall not apply to that.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Before the Chair rules upon the point of order

I desire that he may allow me to have read the reason for this amendment. It is in the interest of economy, and I will ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is thought best by the committee to make permanent the provision that the cost to the Ordnance Department of ordnance stores issued to the States, etc., under the act of February 12, 1887, shall be credited to the appropriation for manufacture for arms at the national armories. The committee, after a very careful investigation and with considerable hesitation, have reported an amendment to section 3709 of the Revised Statutes so far as said section affects the War Department, and in support of the amendment submit the following correspondence of that Department:

ORDNANCE OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington, D. C., October 12, 1888,

SIR: The Chief of Ordnance has recommended that section 3709 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to purchases of supplies of less value than $200, and he requests that you will make report based on your experience in making small purchases by the present method of advertising for proposals.

It has been stated that these small purchases can not be made as economically by the present method as by resort to open-market purchase, and moreover that the responsible business houses which furnish acceptable materials in many cases refuse to make bids under advertisements for small orders, being unwilling to incur the trouble and the formality the present system requires, and that when induced by personal requests to send in proposals they are generally above the prices at which they offer to sell like supplies over their counters for cash.

cash.

He requests that you will give your experience in the matter and generally submit any evidence you possess or arguments you may have to offer as to why the open-market purchase of small quantities of supplies would be more advantageous to the United States than by purchasing them under advertisement!

vantageous to the United States than by purchasing them under advertisements as now practiced.

Where it is practicable to give facts and figures, please do so.

He requests that you will please forward your reports on this subject with the least practicable delay.

It is proposed to submit these reports to Congress in asking the exemption of small purchases from the operation of existing laws.

Respectfully, your obedient servant,

WILLIAM CROZIER.

WILLIAM CROZIER,
Lieutenant Ordnance Department, United States Army. The COMMANDING OFFICER.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have had the communication read hoping that the gentleman from Indiana would listen to it, in order that he might fully understand the motive of the Department and of the committee in inserting this provise in this bill. It is in the interest of economy. When the Department desires to purchase a small amount of supplies they are required to advertise and go through all the expense they would have to go through if they were to purchase a large amount. Now, the Department feels that it would be great economy to dispense with the advertising for supplies when the amount needed does not exceed $200.

It is unquestionably in the interest of economy. Sometimes it will cost nearly as much, and in some instances more, to pay for the advertisement than the articles purchased. If $50 worth or less is required they have to advertise thirty days; and the Department may be required to pay more than $50 for the advertisement. I do not know exactly how much the advertisements cost. Now, we have confined this to expenditures of $200 or less; and we felt that we ought to have sufficient confidence in the integrity and the discretion of the officers of the War Department to at least permit them to buy $200 worth without advertising for the lowest bidder.

I have no doubt that the point of order is good. The Committee on Military Affairs put the item upon this bill with great hesitation; and it was solely in the interest of economy we placed it there. If the gentleman from Indiana insists upon the point of order, and inflicts upon the Government such an enormous expenditure as would be required to advertise when the Department wants to buy $10, $20, $30, or $40 worth of supplies, he will have to take the responsibility of insisting upon his point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the section proposed in effect to be modified shall be read, and that will show who is in favor of economy in that matter. It was put upon the statute-book to prevent abuse in the purchase of supplies in connection with the Army, and has remained on the statute-book for twenty-four years.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3709. All purchases and contracts for supplies or services in any of the Departments of the Government, except for personal services, shall be made by advertising a sufficient time previously for proposals respecting the same when the public exigencies do not require the immediate delivery of the articles or performance of the service. When immediate delivery or performance is required by the public exigency the articles or service required may be procured by open purchase or contract at the places and in the manner in which such articles are usually bought and sold or such services engaged between individuals.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to the fact that this amendment is proposed on the recommendation of the War Department, and that its operation is made entirely contingent upon the order of the Secretary of War. Unless he so orders this will not be done, and it is to be presumed that he will not so order unless in a case of urgency.

Mr. HOLMAN. But ought the Secretary of War, or any executive officer of the Government, to be permitted to make purchases in open market in this loose way, unless there is an emergency, and if there is an emergency, can not he do it under the law which I have just had read?

Mr. CUTCHEON. If $200 is too wide a range of discretion, let the amount be reduced.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, when once you begin to break down a statute it soon disappears entirely.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order presented by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

For manufacture of arms at the national armories, $400,000: Provided, That not more than $60,000 of the money appropriated for the Ordnance Department in all its branches shall be applied to the payment of civilian clerks in said Department: Provided further, That hereafter the cost to the Ordnance Department of all ordnance stores issued to the States, Territories, and District of Columbia under the act of February 12, 1837, shall be credited to the appropriation for "manufacture of arms at national armories," and that said appropriation shall be available until exhausted: And provided further, That section 3709 of the Revised Statutes shall not apply to the purchase of supplies in the War Department, if the Secretary of War shall so order, when the amount actually needed shall not exceed in value the sum of $200.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to come in at that point.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

After line 2, on page 22, insert:

"For the purchase by the Secretary of War of four pneumatic dynamite guns of 15-inch caliber, and the necessary machinery to fire and handle the same, ammunition and carriages for the same, to be delivered free of cost to the Government at such point or points in the harbor of San Francisco as may be designated by the Secretary of War, $250,000, or so much thereof as he may deem proper."

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order on that. The committee has no such jurisdiction.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, upon the point of order I wish to be heard. Mr. RANDALL. The point has been decided two or three times to-

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope the gentleman will speak loud enough to be heard or else that the Chair will preserve order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad if the gentleman from Pennsylvania will indicate the bill in which he thinks this item should

Ar. RANDALL. The fortifications bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the only point the gentleman makes is that this ought to be on the fortification.

I will not now discuss the merits of the amendment. The Committee on Military Affairs have not reported it; the amendment has been offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. Morrow] on his own responsibility.

But I wish to call the attention of the Chair to this fact. During the last session the Army appropriation bill was fought with the same stubbornness and ability by the members of the Committee on Appropriations that they now display in fighting this bill, yet the Army bill at that time contained just such a provision as the one now offered by the gentleman from California, and they did not succeed in striking it from the bill. The members of the Committee on Appropriations contested every feature which was in the nature of an appropriation that belonged, in their judgment, to the fortifications bill, and they succeeded in striking from the bill of last session everything that either they, or the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, regarded as properly belonging to the fortifications bill. This provision, however, stood that test at the last session of the House and remained in the bill. mained in the bill; it became a law upon that bill; a contract has been made under that law; and now the gentleman from California seeks only to do here what was done upon the bill of last session. Can a provision like this be held to be in order at one session of a Congress and be held to be out of order at the next session? This weapon is as much in order on the Army appropriation bill as a pro-vision for the purchase of small-arms at the armories, or for the purchase of any field-piece that might be needed for the operations of the Army in the interior. It is not necessarily a weapon to be used in defense of a fort. It is an offensive as well as a defensive weapon. It has been purchased by the Navy. The Secretary of the Navy recommends that a vessel be built and that her armament shall consist of these guns. The dynamite cruiser Vesuvius was constructed at a cost of nearly $400,000 to carry an armament of these guns. These guns may be used out on the sea, a thousand miles away from our own coast; they may be used out on the plains; they may be used anywhere that fieldpieces can be used.

I am now discussing simply the point of order. I feel, sir, that it is my duty to stand here and defend as much of the jurisdiction of our my duty to stand here and defend as much of the jurisdiction of our committee as I can. I know that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has been very successful in making inroads upon that committee in instances that every member of the Committee on Military Affairs regards as clearly belonging to that committee. If he is able to prevent us from reporting upon this bill appropriations for guns, then he ought to be permitted to strike from this bill every item coming under the to be permitted to strike from this bill every item coming under the head of "Ordnance" or "Engineer's Department." I repeat, Mr. Chairman, if this provision was regarded as in order last session, why is it not in order this session? It was the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] himself who made the point of order against this item in the Army bill last session. It carried the same amendment. He objected then, claiming that it belonged to the fortifications bill. He sat in his seat when the Army appropriation bill was tions bill. He sat in his seat when the Army appropriation bill was then under consideration, and when this very item was under consideration he suggested an amendment to it which was adopted.

Now, sir, if it was considered by him and by the Chair and by the House to be in order then, how can he stultify himself to-day by making an assault upon it? Does he feel that it is easier at this session to deprive the Committee on Military Affairs of its rightful jurisdiction than at the last session? Why did he not bring up his point of order when he sought to amend this provision last session? My memory when he sought to amend this provision last session? My memory being refreshed, I will go further and will remind the Chair that the gentleman himself [Mr. RANDALL] did raise the point of order against this provision and his point of order was overruled.

I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that a point of order was raised against that item of the bill by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and his point of order was overruled.

Mr. MORROW. I desire to suggest that the objection raised at that time by the gentleman from Pennsylvania was based upon the fact that the provision contained the word "plants," and upon that word being stricken out the gentleman from Pennsylvania withdrew his objection. I ask the Clerk to read from the RECORD the proceedings in reference to that matter, showing the objection which was made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania at that time, and showing that on the provision being modified in accordance with his suggestion it was adopted as a part of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

"For the purchase by the Secretary of War of pneumatic dynamite guns of different calibers, and the necessary plants, ammunition, and carriages for the same, for armaments and military use, $400,000, or so much thereof as he may deem proper."

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to make the point of order against that paragraph. From time immemorial, or at least as far back as I remember, appropriations for this character of armament have been embraced in the fortification bill. I make the point of order against this paragraph, and I object especially to the words "and the necessary plants." It will not be contended that there is any law providing for a plant in this connection, and I can not view this provision in any other light than as an attempt to edge in the beginning of a plant for the manufacture of these guns by the Government. I need not go now into the merits of such an undertaking. I make the point of order against the paragraph, and more particularly against the words "and the necessary plants," on the ground that there is no law authorizing a necessary plant for any such purpose.

Mr. Townshend. There is no question, in my judgment, but that it is in order on this bill to appropriate for the purchase of arms, small or large; but under the construction which the gentleman from Pennsylvania puts upon the provisi n in the bill, namely, that it contemplates establishing a plant to manufacture these guns, it is possible that his point of order may be good, and to obviate that objection I will agree to strike out the word "plants." It was not contemplated at all to provide for the establishment of such a plant as the gentleman has in mind. The only purpose was to provide the machinery necessary for handling and firing the guns.

Mr. RANDALL. Then why not say so?

Mr. TOWNSHEED. I am willing to strike out "plants" and insert instead "machinery to fire and handle the same."

Mr. RANDALL. That will obviate the objection I have made to the language in the bill.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Illinois has argued that this amendment is designed to purchase weapons to be used anywhere on land. Now, the amendment in its very language states that these weapons are to be used in the harbor of San Francisco.

Mr. MORROW. To be delivered at the harbor of San Francisco. Mr. RANDALL. To be delivered there?

Mr. RANDALL. To be delivered there?

Mr. MORROW. To be delivered there. I may say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that the investigation I have made leads me to suppose that these guns will not be placed upon any fortification or in the immediate vicinity of any fortification.

Mr. RANDALL. If they are to be used at San Francisco, as the gentleman seems now to hesitate to say, then they belong, of course, to the coast defenses. Either they are intended for coast defense or, in my judgment, they will be useless; and, if intended for coast defense, they belong to the subject of fortifications.

Mr. MORROW. The object of the amendment is to do precisely what is proposed in the original act, namely, to provide pneumatic dynamite guns for the defense of the country. It is a matter belonging to the military establishment and the defense of the country, of which, as provided in the rule, the Committee on Military Affairs had jurisdiction. The jurisdiction of the Committee on Military Affairs in this matter was conceded last year when this provision was incorporated in the Army bill. It then went through with a simple suggestion from the gentleman from Pennsylvania that under the word "plants," as first embraced in this provision, it was possibly the purpose of the War Department to establish a plant for the manufacture of these guns, and on that ground he made objection. That particular objection has been obviated in this amendment.

It is not proposed to establish any plant for the manufacture of these guns; but it is proposed to procure four of these guns-not necessarily for the purpose of being used in connection with the fortification of San Francisco. On the contrary, it is more than likely, it is almost certain, so far as I understand the matter from those who have charge of it and who understand what will be done with these guns, that it is not intended to use them in connection with forts, but that they are intended to defend the country.

Mr. SAYERS. I would like to ask the gentleman one question.
Mr. MORROW. Very well.
Mr. SAYERS. The gentleman does not intend by what he has said to convey the idea that these guns will be used for field purposes, does he?

Mr. MORROW. I do not know that they will be used for field pur-

Mr. SAYERS. Is the gentleman prepared to say that they will not be used for field purposes?

Mr. MORROW. I am not an engineer of the Army Mr. TOWNSHEND. I can not understand the bearing of this controversy as to the use which may be made of these guns. The principle for which I contend is that these are a part of the military establishment, a weapon which the Army is entitled to have if Congress deems it proper to make an appropriation for the purchase of them, as much so as any other kind of gun proper for the use of the Army. I can not understand why the Chair should inquire into the motives of the gentleman from California or what may be his views as to the use which the Army will make of these guns. The only question to be considered is, is the provision germane; is it in order on this bill? That has been answered by the ruling made at the last session, overruling the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SAYERS. Is there any estimate for this?
Mr. TOWNSHEND. There was no estimate for it; and for that reason it was not embraced in the bill as reported. But I understand from the gentleman from California that he has a letter from the Secretary of War recommending the appropriation.

Mr. MORROW. The matter has been submitted to the Secretary of War and an estimate has been made of some $250,000 for the pur-of War and the Chase of additional guns.

A. RANDALL. Where is the estimate?

Mr. RANDALL. Where is the estimate?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It did not come to the committee in time for them to take action upon it before the bill was reported.

Mr. MORROW. There is an estimate in this respect: The Secretary of War has furnished a letter in which he states the necessity for these guns and indorses the propriety of an appropriation for the purpose.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Estimates are not necessary to lay the foundation for jurisdiction.

Mr. SAYERS. Iask the gentleman from California [Mr. Morrow], if he has the letter in his possession, to send it up and have it read by the Clerk

Mr. MORROW.

Mr. MORROW. It has been mislaid, but I will try to find it. Mr. CUTCHEON. Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to say in regard to the merits of the amendment of the gentleman from California. has not been considered by the Committee on Military Affairs. I concede an appropriation for a dynamite gun would be in order on the Navy appropriation bill, provided it was to be used on one of our naval vessels, as in the case of the Vesuvius.

I concede that it would be in order as a provision on the fortification bill provided it was a necessary part of our fortifications, unless the House had given that subject to another committee, as at the present. session it has done. I concede that it would be strictly in order on an Army appropriation bill if it was to be operated by the military establishment. As nothing appears to the contrary I think it is in order and that it is to be taken for granted it will be operated by the military establishment. The appropriation made for the present year is as

For the purchase by the Secretary of War of pneumatic dynamite guns of different calibers, and the necessary machinery to fire and handle the same, ammunition, and carriages for the same, all complete and mounted in place ready for military use, $400,000, or so much thereof as he may deem proper.

The only point of difference in that law from the pending amendment is that it should be for military use; not for naval, but for military use.

There should be some of these pneumatic dynamite guns on the Pacific coast. We have a great city there. We have a magnificent commerce and it is inadequately defended. We have no high-power guns. We did own one there, but on the first fire it broke the carriage and was dumped into the ditch.

Mr. MORROW. Yes; when they fired it it broke the gun-carriage and relled down the hill.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The first time it was fired it broke the carriage and is still left in the ditch. We ought to have some of these highpower guns for use on that coast, and we will have them if we can satisfy the scruples of the Committee on Appropriations

Mr. Chairman, we certainly ought to be under obligations to the members of that committee for the care with which they scrutinized the work of the Committee on Military Affairs. I do not know really how the Committee on Military Affairs would get along if we did not have these gentlemen interested in our work and ready to scrutinize. If we can satisfy their scruples I am willing to let in the amendment of the gentleman from California [Mr. Morrow] provided it shall be limited to military use.

Mr. RANDALL. I am sorry the members of the Military Committee show so much temper about this matter.

Mr. CUTCHEON. No; they are the best-tempered men in the world.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to say there was an appropriation last year. Mr. TOWNSHEND. Last session.

Mr. RANDALL. That is last year. Under that act there was advertisement made for pneumatic dynamite guns. There was but one bidder. There was no competition. This amendment comes here without an estimate. It does not come with the approval of the Committee on Military Affairs. Mr. TOWNSHEND.

The question did not come before the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. RANDALL. You acknowledge you did not have jurisdiction over it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not admit that. It was not presented to the committee by the gentleman from California until after the Army appropriation bill had been reported to the House

Mr. RANDALL. It could not have been reported in the bill, because there was no estimate for it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Estimates are not necessary to give jurisdiction according to the statement made the other day by the gentleman from Teunessee [Mr. McMillin].

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman from Illinois say his committee can take jurisdiction without receiving any estimates?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes; at the last session of Congress the estimates were sent to the committee.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word in reference to the origin of this amendment. An appropriation of $400,000 was contained in the act of last year, and was intended to include the placing of guns on the Pacific coast.

When this contract was let, or rather when the bids were invited some time ago, it was ascertained that they could only place guns at New York, Boston, and another point, and that the placing of guns on the Pacific coast under that appropriation could not be done. Upon consultation with the Secretary of War in regard to the matter he stated to me the facts; and in the letter to which I have referred, but which has been mislaid, although I will find it and have it inserted in the RECORD in connection with my remarks, the Secretary of War states distinctly and strongly that this gun is required on the Pacific coast, and that under the appropriation of last year it was impossible to provide such a gun.

Furthermore, permit me to say, and perhaps it may be intrenching a little on the merits of the case, but it at least shows the good faith in the origin of this amendment, that San Francisco is perhaps the best place within the limits of the United States to-day for testing the value of this gun. It has been found from experiment that this gun is effective, as admitted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania two years ago last July, when the discussion of the fortifications bill took place, and when he called attention to the fact that the proposed gun would probably be one of the best defenses the country could have.

Now, at San Francisco you can place this gun at a reasonable eleva-tion upon the hills surrounding that harbor where the shell can be dropped upon an incoming vessel, and it has been found that the effectiveness of the gun depends upon its elevation. If, therefore, the gun is to be effective it must be on the hills overlooking the bay or harbor of San Francisco, and there it will be of greater service as a defense than anything else that can be devised.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to ask the gentleman from California

Mr. MORROW. If the Chair will permit me, I am not addressing myself to the merits except to show that the point of order should not be allowed to prevail against the amendment, because it is a fact that the Secretary of War has sent the communication to which I have referred, and which bears directly upon the necessity of the appropria-

The CHAIRMAN. That is important in its relation to the point of order, and the Chair thinks that, in the absence of an estimate, it would not be improper to inquire into the character of the gun proposed by the amendment, and to ask the gentleman from California to state frankly to the Chair whether this gun is to be used as a field gun or for fortifications.

Mr. MORROW. I do not know, Mr. Chairman, that I could claim sufficient experience in military affairs or in military engineering to say what the Secretary of War will do or ought to do with the gun after it has been provided; but I want to answer the question as far as I can.

Mr. RANDALL. Common sense would be a good guide.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from California repeat his answer to the question of the Chair? The attention of the Chair was answer to the question of the Chair? The attention of the Chair was momentarily directed to a remark of the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MORROW. No doubt, Mr. Chairman, as a military maneuver common sense is a very good institution, and I think that common sense would suggest to the House now, as it did to the gentleman from Pennsylvania two years ago, that this gun will be a most admirable thing for the defenses of this country.

Now, whether we are to take this gun up and handle it with horses in the field, I do not pretend to determine. That would be a question for the Army engineers, I take it.

The CHAIRMAN. But the Chair will state that the fact as to whether or not the gun is to be used in a fortification or in the field will, in the absence of an estimate, have some influence in determining the bill in which this item should appear. If the estimate was here it would of course be a guide for the Chair, and therefore the Chair has requested the gentleman from California, who is doubtless familiar with the details of the proposition, to state the purpose of the amend-

Mr. RANDALL. Obviously the only place it can be used is as a part of the fortifications of the harbor.

Mr. MORROW. It is impossible for me to state to the Chair what use will be made of this gun after it has been provided, except simply that it will be used as an arm of defense. My own judgment would be, and from the best information I can gather, that it would not be advisable to place this gun in the present fortifications of San Francisco if you mean to connect it with the fortifications already erected there. It will not be and could not be advantageously a part of them. It will,

It will not be and could not be advantageously a part of them. It will, however, be a part of our harbor defenses.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. MORROW. Certainly.

Mr. REED. All of this trouble could be obviated by the gentleman withdrawing the point of order.

Mr. CUTCHEON. The question of jurisdiction, Mr. Chairman, does not come in here at all, because this appropriation does not come from the committee. It is simply for the Committee of the Whole to say whether it will place the amendment offered by the gentleman from California as an independent provision upon the bill or not. The House California as an independent provision upon the bill or not. The House may say it will put it here or anywhere else. The Committee on Military Affairs does not, therefore, assume any jurisdiction of the matter, but it will be an assumption of jurisdiction by the House itself acting in Committee of the Whole if it should be held that the proposition does not legitimately belong to this bill. The Committee on Military Affairs having no estimate, leave this to the Committee of the Whole to say, under the ruling of the Chair and in all deference to the Chair, whether or not it will also the appropriation of this bill. whether or not it will place the appropriation on this bill as the only available vehicle for carrying it at the present time.

Mr. REED. If it depends on a question of fact, ought the Chair to decide that question? If it depends on a question of fact, I suggest that the committee should decide it, and not the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was endeavoring to get at the facts in so far only as they relate to the point of order. The Chair, with some

Mr. MORROW. Is that ruling on the character of the gun?

The CHAIRMAN. It is not a field gun.

Mr. MORROW. As I understood, the Chair stated that the point of order was sustained with reluctance.

The CHAIRMAN. The reluctance arises only from the fact that this provision is substantially the same as that which appears in the Army appropriation bill of last year.

Mr. MORROW. I think that this matter is in that sort of condition that the House, with no disrespect to the Chair, might pass upon this subject; and I therefore appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would call the attention of the Chair for a moment to the fact that as this is for armament for the coast defenses, which has been conferred upon the Committee on Military Affairs, it would come in on this bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. Before the submission of the question on the appeal, I would like to ask what is to be submitted—whether the ruling shall stand or whether it is upon the merits of the question?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has sustained the point of order presented by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Mr. RANDALL. This belongs to fortifications, and the Chair could not decide in any other way. Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman from Pennsylvania decided, himself, last session that it belonged to the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I understood the gentleman from California to ap peal from the decision of the Chair, and that it is now asked before the matter be put that the merits be discussed before the House.

Mr. MORROW. The Chair intimated that he was in doubt as to the

Mr. BLOUNT. I wanted to know whether it was in a position that the committee could reach it in accordance with parliamentary law.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was put, and the Chair announced that he was in doubt as to the result.

Mr. MORROW. Division.

The committee divided; and there were-ayes 80, noes 19.

So the decision of the Chair stands as the judgment of the committee. The Clerk read as follows:

For overhauling, cleaning, and preserving new ordnance stores on hand at

For overhauting, cleaning, and preserving new ordinance stores on hand at the arsenals, $5,000.

For firing the morning and evening gun at military posts, prescribed by General Orders No. 70, Headquarters of the Army, dated July 23, 1867, $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

For targets for artillery practice, $5,000.

Mr. MAISH. By direction of the Committee on Military Affairs I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the sum of $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to enable the Secretary of War to cause examinations and tests to be made in converting the existing ordnance of the War Department into steel-lined torpedo howitzers for throwing high explosives according to the plans of Stephen H. Emmons as stated in his memorial of February 2, 1889, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order upon that.

The CHAIRMAN. What point of order does the gentleman make?

Mr. RANDALL. That it belongs to the fortification bill?

Mr. MAISH. This does not state what the caliber of these guns

Mr. RANDALL. This matter of conversions has always been provided for in the fortification bills.

Mr. MAISH. These examinations and tests may be made of fieldpieces as well as guns for fortifications, and if it is in order to make an appropriation to make such examinations for the larger ordnance of the Government, it certainly will not be out of order in making examina-tion and making a test of one field-piece of the Army; I suppose that would be a question for the Secretary of War. How the gentleman can raise a question of order upon a mere proposition to make a test of the ordnance where the caliber and size of the gun are not stated, I do not understand. Of course it is not stated, I do not understand. Of course it is only contemplated that the test shall be made in accordance with the rules of the House. That is all. The Committee on Military Affairs ask that at least $15,000 may be appropriated to determine whether the scheme of Professor Emmons will convert these useless and obsolete guns to very effective weapons, which I believe it will do.

The committee informally rose to receive a message from the President, Mr. HOLMAN in the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message, in writing, from the President, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, was received.

The message also announced approval of a bill and joint resolutions of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 2557) for the relief of W. W. Welch;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 181) accepting the invitation of the Imperial German Government to the United States to become a party to the International Geodetic Association; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 246) authorizing the Secretaries of War and the Navy to loan the committee on inaugural ceremonies flags, etc.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ENLOE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum being made, the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MAISH] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAVERS].

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania is going to filibuster on this bill perhaps the committee had better rise.

The memorial is as follows:

HARRISON, N. Y., February 2, 1889.

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled: GENTLEMEN: In view of the attention now being paid to tha subject of the national defenses I beg leave to submit for your consideration the accompanying paper and drawings; and in the hope that the information and suggestions therein contained may prove of some service, petition that it be referred to appropriate committee and have due consideration.

I am, gentlemen, your obedient servant,

THE UTILIZATION OF EXISTING ARMAMENTS.

The utilization of existing armanerms.

It is often assumed that unless a nation possesses a store of ordnance of the most modern type it is necessarily in a defenseless condition; and, inasmuch as such guns can not be made or procured at short notice, the inference is deduced that the coast line of the United States and many other countries must, for at least some years to come, remain at the mercy of the great European powers. There is, of course, much truth in this view. To manufacture a large built-up steel gun is a work of many months under the most favorable circumstances, and of some years in countries where no first-class gun factories exist, and where, consequently, the heavy parts of ordnance have to be supplied from abroad. This point is clearly brought out in the following passage from General S. V. Benét's report as Chief of Ordnance for the United States for the year 1884:

eral S. V. Benét's report as Chief of Ordnance for the United States for the year 1884:

"The difficulties above recounted in procuring steel from abroad, even for experimental guns, makes manifest, without lengthy comment, the necessity for home production. It is hoped that the very pressing need of the Department and the difficulties under which it now labors in attempting to secure suitable material for gun-construction may b: relieved through the prompt and energetic action of Congress at its next secsion. The steel-makers of this country will not undertake the production of steel on a scale adequate to our wants without the inducement of being fairly remunerated for their outlays, and the immediate action on the part of Congress for holding out such inducements by liberal appropriations can not be overestimated. The truth of this statement is apparent when it is considered that, even after ample encouragement has been afforded, considerable time must elapse, say two years or more, before the requisite plant can be designed, constructed, and set up, and the production of steel in masses of sufficient size and of suitable quality for gun-construction can become a practical success. Then the manufacture and test of the experimental or typical guns will require at least two years more, even for the more moderate-sized calibers, before the manufacture of guns in quantity can be proceeded with."

In General Benét's report for 1887 the subject was again alluded to in terms so ate-sized calibers, before the manufacture of guns in quantity can be proceeded with."

In General Benét's report for 1887 the subject was again alluded to in terms so luminous and pregnant that I feel it incumbent upon me to make the following further quotation:

"It is believed to be to the vital interest of the whole country that such liberal appropriations be made by Congress from year to year, until our present utter destitution as to modern guns be relieved, as shall furnish the substantial encouragement and aid that our steel industry demands. As a step in this direction I have asked in my annual estimate for an appropriation of $1,500,000 for the procurement of forgings for 8-inch and 10-inch breech-loading steel guns. This sum should procure the steel for about fifty 8-inch guns and about forty 10-inch guns, and to allow the necessary time to erect additional plant this appropriation should be made available until expended.

"It is not necessary to enter into a discussion of the necessity for seacoast armament, nor of the possibility of future disbandment of armies and the settlement of international controversies with the pen instead of the sword. What may be in the near or distant future in this regard the most astute statesman can not divine. Our dealings, however, are with the immediate present, and if the recurrence of war is likely to follow ample preparation, Europe in arm-would seem to indicate that the days of peaceful arbitration have not yet been reached. It can hardly be recommended that while waiting for this future possibility our shores should continue unguarded and at the mercy of the most insignificant belligerent.

"Rams and torpedoes and dynamite guns are powerful auxiliaries in harbor defense, but the war conditions yet obtaining will not dispense with the hard hammering of heavy shot moving with a high velocity, because these auxiliaries themselves need protection and of the most perfect character. The dynamite guns with a limited range can not be left to the mercy of the much longer-reaching guns of the enemy's ships. The attacking ships must be kept at a distance by heavy guns and long-range mortars—the comparatively low cost of mortars enabling us to compensate by numbers any lack of accuracy of fire. As a projectile force gunpowder yet stands supreme. It strikes a terrific blow at long distances; its arm reaches many miles; it plants its blow with unerring certainty. We can not dispense with such a force, so readily handled, so thoroughly understood.

"Heavy cannon are therefore a necessity, and must be provided, and our un-long distances; its arm reaches many miles; it plants its blow with unerring certainty. We can not dispense with such a force, so readily handled, so thoroughly understood.

"Heavy cannon are therefore a necessity, and must be provided, and our unprotected coasts demand that they be provided speedily. These necessities also demand that they be of the most approved quality; cannon of steel which have been adopted by the world after most thorough and satisfactory experiment and trial; cannon that will place this nation on an equality with the most powerful. It will cost money, but not more than the loss to the cities of New York and Brooklyn from one day's bombardment. All this and more is known to Congress and the country. Reports of board and committee, reports of official experts, the writings in the public press, individual views, all have kept this important matter before the people, and the responsibility for weal or woe, for success or disaster, must remain with the people. At this time no half measures will do. Congress should decide, and decide at once. Another year ought not to pass without a settled and well-defined policy in regard to the national defense."

If Congress have hitherto hesitated to adopt this policy in its entirety the hesi ation has not arisen from any difference of opinion as to the urgent necessity of arming the national seaboard. All political parties and all authorities, whether military or civil, whether in offices of state, in the chambers of Legi atures, or in halls of commerce, are alike agreed on so vital a question. But it may well be that from the height of the Capitol a broader and more farreaching view is taken than in circles of more limited observation. To deliberately compete in armaments with the leading European nations would be to enter upon a policy of vast and uncontrollable expenditure with the certainty that by far the greater portion would produce results of but ephemeral value; and even to enter upon the purchase or manufacture of any considerable number of the

SEC. 1 .- The distinguishing feature of modern ordnance.

SEC, 1.—The distinguishing feature of modern ordnance.

Among the earliest guns of which we have any account, or of which specimens are still to be found in military museums, we find breech-loading built-up rifles of great length, and we know that these weapons were used in combination with very slow-burning gunpowder. In other words, modern ordnance is but a reversion to ancient types.

Probably the only absolutely new features to be met with in the heavy artillery of the present day are, first, the projection of shells charged with high explosives; and, secondly, the employment of carriages that cause the guns to automatically disappear from sight after delivering their fire. But there is also much that is relatively new in the details and methods now adopted in connection, with the old devices of rifling, hooping, breech-loading, length of chase, and slow-burning powder; and it will be found on examination that these novelties are all more or less founded on a better understanding and conception of guns in general considered as machines for developing and utilizing mechanical energy. This is indeed the main distinction between the artillery of the present day and that of either ancient or recent times.

The ideal gun indicated by theory is a tube of equal thickness from breech to muzzle, and the ideal gunpowder is a substance capable of generating gas at a rate corresponding to the increasing space opened up by the passage of the shot along the chase of the gun.

Suppose, for example, that it is desired to impress an energy of 5,000 foot-tons upon a shot having a cross-sectional area of 50 square inches and a travel of 10 feet in the gun. It is evident that a uniform pressure of 10 tons per square inch operating during the whole travel of the shot will give the energy in question; assuming, of course, that no allowance is to be made for friction, atmospheric resistance, and the like.

But the same result may equally well be attained by employing a volume of gas giving an initial pressure of 16.76 tons per sq

Charge.	Maximum pressure.	Minimum pressure.	Average pressure.
A	10	10	10
	16.76	4.19	10
	21.49	3.58	10
	11.81	5.90	10

All of these charges produce an equal effect upon the shot and will give us the desired 5,000 foot-tons of energy; and if this were the only point to be considered it would not matter which of the four charges we used. But when we consider the question of the strength of our gun the case is very different. The power of the gun is limited by the maximum strain it will bear without bursting; and a gun in which Charge A could be safely fired might not suffice for Charge C. Our choice must therefore be guided solely by the column of maximum pressures, and as the lowest possible figure in this column must always be equal to the average pressure, we find the ideal condition of working to be, as above stated, the employment of uniform pressure, which in its turn calls for uniform strength throughout the whole length of the gun.

The recognition of this principle of maximum power combined with minimum strain must be regarded as the distinguishing feature par excellence of modern ordnance. Its translation into practice has necessarily been attended by gradual approximation to the uniform-tube type, recent guns tapering towards the muzzle much less than was formerly the case. There is, indeed, one example of the ideal being actually attained. The pneumatic dynamite gun is a tube of equal thickness from breech to muzzle; and the avowed principle of its operation is the maintenance of an equal pressure from the commencement to the end of the shot's travel in the gun. It is true that this uniformity of pressure has not yet been attained and may never be found entirely practicable in a pneumatic apparatus; but the fact remains that for any limitation of maximun pressure the maximun power is attained when such pressure is kept up until the shot leaves the gun.

shot leaves the gun.

The feature in question is of especial importance to nations desirous of rapidly and economically bringing their armaments up to a modern level of power without entering upon the construction of the costly type of guns recently adopted by the great European states.

Let us take the case of the famous Italian gun, having the following dimensions and powers, namely:

Caliber	45 centimeters (=17.7 inches).
Weight	99,9 tons.
Length of bore	30 feet 1½ inches.
Length of shot-travel	25 feet 5 inches.
	507.1 pounds.
Weight of projectile	2,001.8 pounds.
Muzzle velocity
Muzzle energy	36,178 foot-tons, and let us consider what kind of an "ideal" gun would suffice to compete with and let us consider what kind of an "ideal" gun would suffice to compete with this formidable weapon.

Taking the cross-sectional area at 246 square inches and the travel of the shot at 25,417 feet, the muzzle energy of 36,178 foot-tons is found to be equivalent to an average pressure of 5,785 tons per square inch, or say 12,963 pounds. But as the muzzle energy represents only a portion of the total force exerted by the charge, the remainder being absorbed by forcing the projectile through the riffing and in other ways, we must add, say, 40per cent, to the foregoing pressure. The average thus obtained is 18,144 pounds; and therefore if we can contrive to produce this pressure uniformly in a gun during a shot-travel of about 25 feet we shall be able to send a projectile on its course with all the energy of the shot from the Italian 100-ton gun.

The strain upon the metal forming the wall of a gun is found by multiplying Italian 100-ton gun.

The strain upon the metal forming the wall of a gun is found by multiplying the pressure per square inch by the number of inches in the radius of the bore; so that in the above case if our ideal gun have a bore of 17.7 inches diameter the pressure on the metal of the wall will be 18,14×8.85; and this divided by the tensile strength per square inch of any metal will show how many inches in thickness the wall of the gun must be if made of such metal. Cast-steel, for example, may be taken as representing an available strength of 30,000 pounds per square inch. Hence

Accordingly a cast-steel gun having walls of, say, 5½ inches in thickness for its whole length and being of the same caliber and length as the Italian 100-ton gun should be a weapon of equal power. Such a gun would weigh about 25 tons and would cost say $25,000.

If the estimate be made for a cast-iron gun lined and banded with steel the requisite thickness of metal may be taken at 8 inches, and the weight of the gun would be about 40 tons and the probable cost about $12,000.

Startling though these figures may appear to be in their promise of a cheap, rapid, and efficient development of the national ordinance, no artillerist will dispute their accuracy. The objection urged will be raised not against he figures, but against the assumption on which they are based. It will be admitted that a cast-steel or cast-iron gun of the dimensions above stated would be a match for the Italian 100-ton gun if it were possible to so burn its charge as to keep up a uniform pressure of 18,144 pounds per square inch; but that this can be done will be a matter of doubt.

It may, however, be shown both theoretically and practically, that the prob-will be a matter of doubt.

It may, however, be shown both theoretically and practically, that the problem is by no means of an insoluble character.

For the purpose of a theoretical demonstration I will adopt the customary assumption that the force exerted by fired gunpowder is in the nature of a static pressure, and may be investigated by reference to the well-known laws of thermodynamics and gaseous matter. This assumption is not equally correct with that which is based on the laws of molecular impact, and which in another statement, drawn up at the request of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification, I have termed the "dynamic theory of explosion-stress;" but as the present case is concerned with the action of slow-burning gunpowder, and not with the sudden disruption of high explosives, the ordinary view may be adopted without involving any serious inaccuracy, and the conclusions to which it leads will be accepted without controversy.

A gas must expand in order to do work. So long as it is confined in any given space it simply presses upon the walls around it and sets upa certain condition of strain on such walls, and it is not until all or part of the wall gives way that it performs work—4. e., the impressing of motion upon mass. In a gun the projectile may be regarded as one of the chamber-walls, and its caused to move by the expansion of the gases generated by the gunpowder. If the gun were long enough any initial volume of gas would go on expanding and pushing forward the projectile until its pressure had fallen to that of the atmosphere in front of the projectile—is measured by time and space as well as by pressure, it mass of the projectile—is measured by time and space as well as by pressure, it greater will be the energy imparted. Hence the same amount of gases the greater will be the energy imparted. Hence the same amount of gas may be calculated for all other degrees. This calculation has been made for the gases generated by the firing of gunpowder. In a memoir entitled "Researches in Explosives," by Captain Noble (late R. A.) and Sir F. Abel, "greater will be the energy imparted degrees. This calculation has been made for the gases generated by the firing of gunpowder. In a memoir entitled "Researches in Explosives," by Captain Noble (late R. A.) and Sir F. Abel, "showing the work capable of being performed in the 1570, a table was given young worker of the Waltham Abbey standard. The accompanying diagram (Drawing No. 1) is in part based upon the data contained in such table. It will be seen from the diagram in question that the amount of work to be obtained from one pound of gunpowder depends not only upon the space allowed for expansion of the gases while propelling the shot, but also upon the data at any given temperature and pressure the gases generated by a civen that at any given temperature and pressure the gases generated by a civen quantity of gunpowder occupy a given space, 27 73 cubic inches per pound, that at any given temperature and pressure the gases generated by a civen that at any given temperature and pressure the gases generated by a civen that at any given temperature and pressure the gases that 27.73 cubic inches per pound, the excess represe

It will surely be admitted that by following the lines indicated in the practical experience here set forth a much closer approach may yet be made to an "ideal" gun; and in confirmation of this view I may point to an accomplished fact. I refer to the "multicharge" gun tried at Sandy Hook in 1853 and 1884. With respect to this gun I find the following emphatic report by the Ordnance Board, printed on page 232 of the report of the Chief of Ordnance for 1884: "There seems to be no doubt that a higher energy has been obtained with this gun with its successive charges and with moderate and safer pressures than can result from any gun of the same caliber using only one charge."

It is true that in other respects the opinion of the board was adverse to the gun; but these features were quite apart from that which alone is here being considered. My purpose is accomplished by the citation of so eminent an authority as the Board of Ordnance of the United States in testimony of the fact that it is possible in practice to lower the maximum pressure in guns and maintain a relatively uniform propulsion without necessarily falling below the modern standards of muzzle energy.

As the firing records of the multicharge gun are of great practical interest, I have, in drawing No. 2, added a diagram prepared from the data in question. I doubt, though, if the effective working pressure were really those shown by the gauges; and my reasons for so doubting are as follows:

First. Taking the nine shots with the 110-pound projectile recorded on page 148 of the report of the Chief of Ordnance for 1885, I find the average muzzle energy to be 2,908 foot-tons; and as the charge of powder was 120 pounds, it follows that the duty per pound of powder was only 24,23 foot-tons. Now, if the charge were of unit density of loading the total expansion would have been about 3,3 volumes, and the theoretical duty of the powder would therefore have been about 74 foot-tons per pound: so that the factor of effect can only have been alout 74 foot-tons per p of only 10,266 pounds, whereas the gauges represent the average as 23,422 pounds.

It will be noted that in this particular gun the powder duty was extremely low; but there is nothing in the nature of the case in general to prevent a much higher result being attained. An actual muzzle energy of 50 tons per pound of powder may reasonably be looked for when a charge is exploded in sections or burnt with comparative slowness. Nor, as I have before shown, is it necessary for the gun in which such a charge is fired to be of any exceptional magnitude or weight.

SEC. 2.-High explosives.

No armament is worthy of the name in these days unless it provide for the utilization of the prodigious forces placed by modern science at the disposition of the soldier and sailor and military engineer. Every student of the art of war must concur with General H. L. Abbot's recently expressed opinion that "high explosives will doubtless be used with armies in the field, in regular sieges, in naval battles upon the ocean, and in contests between ships and forts." And if any doubt could possibly remain I think it would disappear from the mind of any one considering the facts cited in General Abbot's paper (Forum, September, 1888); as an example of which I may perhaps be permitted to quote the following passage:

of any one considering the facts cited in General Addoct's paper (Forum, September, 1888); as an example of which I may perhaps be permitted to quote the following passage:

"Much larger calibers are used in siege operations, and the defense will have to face a vastly more formidable fire than ever before. The French have adopted melinite for charging shells, and are rumored to throw enormous quantities, namely 200 pounds. The Germans, after several years of experimenting, have selected Walsrode wet gun-cotton for this purpose. Charged with the latter a 6-inch shell, 6 calibers long, carries 22 pounds; and under favorable conditions throws out 9 cubic yards of sand from its crater, 13 feet in diameter and 4 feet deep. An 8-inch mortar shell 6 calibers low , carries gun-cotton charged from 42 to 57 pounds in weight, and throws out 20 cubic yards of sand. The 11-inch mortar shell is charged with 110 pounds of this high explosive, and its use has been proved to be entirely practicable.

Missiles like this will entail extensive modifications even in the most recent types of perm nent fortifications erected for land defense; and the subject is now discussed among European engineers in what appears to be almost a spirit of panic. * * Very recently a series of experiments has been conducted at Kummersdorf upon a fort modeled after the pattern used by France upon her German frontier, and, it is claimed, with results which proved that the parts best covered, even the 16 feet which General Brialmont has considered sufficient, is trusted, the first shells blow out such enormous craters that the weak masonry arch is soon reached and penetrated; but in the case of the largest shells (11-inch) even 16 feet of earth cover is deemed hardly adequate against the first projectile.

Such shells are, indeed, aerial torpedoes; and compared with the slow movement of even the swiftest submarine torpedo yet invented, or with the necessarily restricted utility of stationary mines, their employment must greatly simplify the problem of coast defense and can not be dispensed with in any adequate system of fortification. It becomes a matter of urgent practical importance, therefore, to determine the conditions under which the use of aerial projectiles charged with high explosives is practicable.

The first point for consideration is the question of whether the choice of the artillerist and military engineer is limited to any particular class or classes of explosives, or whether all high explosives are alike applicable.

We can at once eliminate the fulminates, the dynamites, and the chlorate mixtures from the list. Their sensibility to shock is too great to allow of their being hurled from any apparatus with a velocity sufficient for reasonable range and accuracy; and the dynamites and chlorate mixtures are moreover subject to rapid deterioration or dangerous changes of molecular structure when kept for any length of time. It is true that dynamite prepared with nitro-glycerine of absolute purity has been preserved apparently unchanged for years; but under practical conditions it is generally found that a period of from three to six months is sufficient to produce a marked unfavorable change. The same observations apply with almost equal force to explosive gelatine, and in fact to all explosives in which nitro-glycerine is the active ingredient.

The remaining high explosives at present known may be divided into two classe, the gun-cotton and the nitro-hydrocarbons. Both kinds are adopted in practice, but some doubt still attaches to the former. The experience of the British Government was distinctly unfavorable to the employment of gun-cotton as a bursting charge for shells, and though the Germans have now tenatively adopted the Walsrode goun-cotton for this purpose, it must be remembered that after it; and it should also be borne in mind that the special variety of the French melinite, in which gun-cotton was understood to be incorporated, gave rise to serious accidents.

Of the nitro-hydrocarbon class two explosives have been practically tested, namely, melinite and roburite; and according to the meager accounts yet made public the results have been of a satisfactory character—so much so, in fact that both the British and Italian authorities are understood to be seriously contemplating the adoption of some form of melinite as the standard high explosive for the charging of shells and similar uses. Roburite is probably regarded with some distrust, owing to its containing chlorine.

The exact composition of melinite as at present manufactured is not known, but the original specification of its inventor described it as consisting simply of fused pieric acid. and it seems to be generally understood that the main ingredient is still pieric acid or some closely allied body. On the whole, therefore, it is correct to assert that of all the high explosives hitherto introduced the phenol group (pieric acid being trinitrophenol) has alone been found fully equal to the practical requirements of the military and naval services. I say the "phenol" rather than the "pieric acid. It contains at least one other allied nitro-hydrocarbon (cresylite), and as I have been informed that the "pieric acid." of commerce formerly employed by the French Government has been within the last year replaced by a "specially purified" variety, I think it probable that the new substance is not pieric acid at all, but is "eacid."

This is a new acid which I discovered in 1885, which is prepared from pieric acid. and concerning which I in 1887 gave information (with a sample) to an officer dispatched by the French Government to this country. If, then, the United States authorities should think fit to adopt a high explosive of the phenol class there will be no difficulty in procuring the same, as the emmensite now made in this country is the p sary.

Accordingly we are here again brought face to face with what I have in the preceding section of this paper denominated the "distinguishing feature of modern ordnance." Whether we regard rapidity and economy of construction combined with maximum power for a given weight of material, or whether we regard the conditions essential for employing ordnance in the projection of aerial torpedoes, we are alike led to the conclusion that our guns should be so fashioned and operated as to work with low and continued pressures rather than with those that are high at first and then rapidly diminish,

SEC. 3.-The conversion of existing ordnance.

SEC. 3.—The conversion of existing ordnance.

It by no means follows from what has preceded that a nation desirous of rapidly providing itself with a formidable armament need at once construct a large quantity of guns of the new type referred to. Every nation of any importance has a considerable store of smooth-bore cast-iron ordnance; and the conversion of these guns into vastly more powerful weapons is a simple, speedy, and economical operation.

As a practical illustration I will take the case of the United States, and will show how all the important parts of the coast may, in a few months and at a most moderate cost, be put into a state of comparatively good defense; so far, that is to say, as a provision of powerful torpedo-howitzers is concerned.

The material already exists. I allude to the 308 15-inch Rodman guns which not many years ago stood in the very forefront of the world's artillery. They are admittedly magnificent specimens of their type. They cost some millions of dollars; they are in excellent condition; and it will be a reproach to the good sense and ingenuity of the nation if they be simply discarded as old iron, and not made to do the yeoman's service of which they are yet abundantly capable.

The accompanying drawing, No. 3, shows how a Rodman 15-inch muzzle-loading gun may be converted into a breech-loading torpedo-howitzer of tremendous power. All that is necessary is to bore through the existing breech and insert a comparatively short lining tube of steel screwed into the metal of the gun as is customary in such cases. This lining-tube is fitted internally with an interrupted screw for the reception of a movable breech-plug, the construction of which constitutes the main feature of the converted gun. A central cylindrical hole extends through the plug and other cylindrical chambers of larger diameter extend from the front of the plug rearwardly into its substance. These chambers contain the gunpowder forming the propelling charge; and a starting charge is placed in the central cavity, which is closed in the rear by a subsidiary breech-block carrying a firing-pin or other suitable ignition device.

stance. These chambers contain the gunpowder forming the propelling charge; and a starting charge is placed in the central cavity, which is closed in the rear by a subsidiary breech-block carrying a firing-pin or other suitable ignition device.

The torpedo to be fired from the gun is an elongated shell charged with high explosive and having its base extended backward in the form of a stud which fits in the central cavity of the main breech-plug. Hence, when the starting charge is exploded, a relatively weak impulse is communicated to the torpedo, which commences to move forward at a moderate rate of speed, and then, immediately the stud leaves the central tube, the heated gas inflames the main portions of the charge in the surrounding chambers, and these burn from the front backward, keeping up an evolution of gas which urges the projectile forward throughout the whole length of the gun.

By this device the shock of firing is reduced to a minimum and a comparatively uniform pressure is maintained until the shot leaves the gun. It will also be obvious that by suitably adjusting the air-spacing of the several sections of the charge and by properly selecting the character of the powder employed the pressure may be fixed at 10 tons per square inch or at any other possible amount; while, owing to the front ignition of the main sections, the whole of the powder may be utilized instead of being blown out in a partially consumed state, as is almost invariably the case in guns of ordinary types.

If a still further nicety of adjustment be at any time desirable the same may be attained by providing studs of varying lengths to fit in the front end of all the cavities so that the sections may all be successively discharged, or by carrying the main chambers through the breech-plug and fitting each one with a subsidiary breech-block they may be loaded and fired as independent charges.

It is not necessary for the stud or studs to be attached directly to the base of the projectile.

If the dimensions and details shown by the

It will probably be considered by artillerists that with these muzzle velocities the effective range of the gun may be considered as extending to 3 miles. I have purposely worked out the design on the basis of employing projectiles of maximi size; but much smaller shells may be used as desired, either by adopting a sub-caliber form, as originally proposed and employed by Stafford during the late war, or by reducing the caliber of the gun by carrying the lining tube forward through the whole bore, as in the case of the conversions hitherto effected.

effected.

I have also purposely retained the gun as a smooth-bore; first, because for a torpedo of maximum size it is essential to employ the full caliber of 15 inches; and, secondly, because it has been admitted both by the action of Congress and by the reports of the Chief of Ordnance and other authorities that a smooth-bore torpedo gun may be accepted in practice as a valuable adjunct to any system of seacoast defense. But if a reduction of caliber from 15 to, say, 12 inches be permissible, the converted gun may be rifled and thus made available for long-range shooting.

missible, the converted gun may be rifled and thus made available for long-range shooting.

It will be understood that, owing to the Rodman guns having been originally constructed for firing spherical shot, they were made much shorter than modern guns of the same caliber which fire elongated projectiles. Hence the converted weapons must be regarded as howitzers or mortars rather than as guns proper; and if shells of maximum size are to be fired they will, of course, nearly fill the bore of the piece, as shown in my drawing. This, however, is a circumstance of no practical moment except in so far as the employment of so huge and heavy a projectile may limit the velocity attainable with the moderate pressure proposed. Still the velocity even of the largest torpedo will be considerable enough for practical requirements, and in the event of higher velocities being desired, they can always be attained by diminishing the size of the torpedo.

SEC. 4.-New guns.

Should the converted Rodmans be found to work well, an important step forward will have been taken towards the solution of the problem of the construction of the new ordnance so urgently required. The success of the torpedohowitzer will place beyond a doubt the possibility of constructing and efficiently operating long-range rifled-guns upon the same principle of moderate and continued powder-pressure. It will be seen that with a very moderate expenditure, and in a relatively short period, the country may be supplied with breechloading rifled ordnance, capable of exerting even greater power, and having much greater endurance than the costly guns now being fabricated by European nations.

SEC. 5 .- Gun-carriages and fortifications.

The mere construction of a gun is but one-half of the task to be accomplished before a shot can be fired. The gun must be mounted, and the combined gun and mount must be so placed as to be in some measure protected from hostile fire.

fire.

It may be said broadly that the United States at present have no gun-carriages or fortifications available for use in the event of any part of the coast being attacked by an enemy armed with modern high-power guns and high-explosive shells. And the vast expense attendant upon the carriages and defenses now deemed necessary by most of the European military engineers is calculated to induce great caution in adopting any such plans. What is needed is some system of a simple and economical character which can be at once adopted, and which will provide for the principal requirements of the case and will constitute a safe resting stage at which to await the future developments of the military art.

tute a safe resting stage at which to await the future developments of the military art.

The requirements in question are as follows;
First. The gun must be so mounted as not to remain exposed to hostile fire for more than the time required for its discharge. It must be loaded and trained under cover. In other words, its carriage must be of what is known as the "disappearing" type.

Second. The gunners while firing must be protected from rifle bullets and the fire of machine guns and light ordnance, which otherwise may inflict great damage even during the short periods during which alone the gun is visible.

Third. The mechanism for the "disappearance," raising, and running out of the gun must all be self-contained and automatic. It must be free from all accessaries such as steam-engines, hydraulic pumps, air-compressors, and the like, On this condition alone can a gun be mounted at a moderate expense and in any situation. any situation.

Fourth. The whole of the working arrangements, whether for loading, trayersing, elevating, disappearing, raising or running out, must be so devised as to be capable of being carried out by the gunners alone without the aid of extra sersing, elevating, disappearing, raising or running out, must be so devised as to be capable of being carried out by the gunners alone without the aid of extra machinery.

Fifth. The fortification must not present any part exposed to horizontal or slightly curved hostile fire.

A study of these requirements must compel the conclusion that the only thoroughly efficient method of gun-mounting and fortification is to adopt a "disappearing" carriage in a sunken emplacement. In accordance with this view I have prepared the accompanying drawings, Nos. 4 and 5, which show in side elevation and plan respectively a gun-carriage and fortification complying with the aforesaid conditions, while drawing No. 3, previously referred to, shows the devices for loading the gun and protecting the gunner when the weapon is in the firing position.

The fort, it will be observed, is simply a circular pit in the ground, having a tunnel shelter for the gunners and their munitions, etc. It can not be struck except by high-angle fire of extreme accuracy, and may, therefor, be deemed invulnerable against a seacoast attack; while the all-round fire of its gun should protect it from any flank or rear assault attempted by a landing party.

The power required for depressing and raising the gun-platform is obtained by utilizing the recoil flat-wire ropes being attached to a brace behind the mount and carried over rollers forward, downward, backward, and upward to a fastening affixed to the underside of the platform. Hence, when the gun recoils, it pulls the platform downwards, and in so doing it lifts the counterpoises, which somewhat more than balance the gun, mount, and platform. A self-acting check, not shown in the drawing, prevents the counterpoises from descending until it is released, when the loading and training are finished. The platform then rises, and, while ascending the gun is automatically run out into the firing position.

The loading devices will be clearly understood by an inspection of drawing No. 3. The breech-plug is draw

Mr. TRACEY. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the ilesk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 10, on page 22, insert:
"For the purchase, under the direction of the Secretary of War, of land convenient to the Watervliet arsenal suitable for proof and firing of seacoast guns, $15,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to appoint a board of not exceeding five officers of the Army to examine and report upon a site for an ordnance testing and proving ground, to be used in the testing and proving of heavy ordnance, having in view in the selection of said site its accessibility by land and water, means of transportation, and suitability for the purpose intended, and also the actual and reasonable cost and value of the land and the least sum for which the same can be procured. And said board shall report therefore to the Secretary of War, to be submitted to Congress at its next session. And in case the said board shall select a site and recommend its purchase, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to secure written proposals for the sale of the tract so recommended, until such time as Congress may act upon the recommendation of said board and of the Secretary of War.

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to make the point of order against that

Mr. SAYERS. I desire to make the point of order against that amendment, that it proposes new legislation. There is no law authorizing the purchase of such grounds and that provision has no place upon an appropriation bill. If it is desired to make such a purchase it will be necessary for the committee to report a bill and let it become a law before the appropriation can be made.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I have been unable to hear what the gentleman says as to the ground of his point of order.

Mr. SAYERS. The point of order is that there is no law which authoriz s the purchase of such grounds.

Mr. CUTCHEON. This amendment does not authorize the purchase, either.

Mr. SAYERS. Yes, sir.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman from Texas has wholly miscon-Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentieman from Texas has whonly insconceived the nature of this amendment. The amendment does not involve the expenditure of one single dollar. The reasons for bringing it in here are these: A bill was introduced by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Hires] providing for the purchase of a particular tract of land some 10 miles in length and 2 miles wide, and designating the boundaries of the tract. The War Department has declared that it is necessary for the Government to own a new proving-ground in order to test the long-range guns which were ordered last session. The only proving-ground that the Government now has is at Sandy Hook. Its range is only a few miles on land, and in endeavoring to test long-range guns they are very much interfered with by passing vessels, because the ocean there is a thoroughfare for many vessels. The Secretary of War has been anxious, therefore, to secure a proving-ground of sufficient ex-has been anxious, therefore, to secure a proving-ground of sufficient extent in the interior to test properly long-range, nine and ten mile guns.

That proposition of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Hires] came before the committee designating the particular tract and specifying the amount which should be paid for it. The committee was unwilling to bring in a bill limiting the choice of the Department to any particular locality. It was also unwilling, with such light as it had, to recommend any appropriation; but in order that some steps might be taken to guard the Government against extravagance in this matter, and at the content to make matter, and at the same time to enable the War Department to make proper inquiry as to where a suitable proving-ground might be obtained at the cheapest price, we have proposed this amendment. It is the desire of the Department that this provision shall become a part of the Army bill. Under the ruling made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox], when the Military Academy bill was before the House, this amendment is in order.

A similar proposition has just been adopted by the Committee of the Whole for the purchase of ground near Watervliet arsenal, to be used for a like purpose. What was the amount of the appropriation?

Mr. TRACEY. Fifteen thousand dollars.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. This proposition does not contemplate the expenditure of one dollar; and I can not understand why gentlemen who were willing to allow an appropriation of $15,000 for the purchase of ground for a similar purpose near the Watervliet arsenal should raise a point of order upon a proposition which does not provide for any appropriation whatever, but simply seeks to guard the Government against extravagant expenditure. If I did not know what lovers of economy these gentlemen are, I would imagine that they were willing that this ground, which the gentleman's amendment specifically designated, should be purchased; but I believe that they desire to accomplish as much economy as possible. The point of order, in my judgment, has no foundation whatever. The amendment is in the interest of economy, it is designed for the benefit of the public service, and it makes no appropriation whatever.

Mr. SAYERS. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether there is any law authorizing the purchase of this ground?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. As much so as in the case embraced in the amendment to which I have just referred.

Mr. RANDALL. This is an entering wedge for the purchase of a new testing-ground; otherwise it has no object.

MR. TOWNSHEND. UNLESS A PROVING-GROUND OF PROPER LENGTH IS OBTAINED ON LAND THE LONG-RANGE GUNS FOR WHICH YOU APPROPRIATED MILLIONS AT THE LAST SESSION CAN NOT BE PROPERLY TESTED.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman now acknowledges what I have just stated.

Just stated.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. This is for the purpose of enabling the War Department to detail its officers to go and find the cheapest and most eligible proving-ground, instead of providing in the bill for the purchase of what might afterwards be found to be a high-priced proving-ground, such as we believe to be contemplated in the proposition of my friend from New Jersey. I am satisfied that a better proving-ground than he proposes can be found at far less cost. This proposition is in the interest of the Government. The Committee on Military Affairs proposes it as a substitute for that of the gentleman from New Jersey. If gentlemen want to guard the Treasury let them show their Jersey. If gentlemen want to guard the Treasury let them show their patriotism by helping the Committee on Military Affairs in this endeavor.

Mr. HOOKER. I rise for the purpose of asking that a letter of the Secretary of War on this subject be read.

Mr. RANDALL. What has become of the point of order?

Mr. HOOKER. The point of order will be decided after this letter has been read; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania will no doubt accept the decision with his usual placidity and amiability.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, January 23, 1889.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 11th instant, requesting the views of this Department upon House resolution 248, Fiftieth Congress, second session, to authorize the Secretary of War to purchase a certain tract of land in Atlantic and Cumberland Counties, New Jersey, as a site for testing heavy ordnance and making experiments in gunnery.

In reply I beg to transmit a report of the 17th instant, on the subject, with its inclosures, from the Chief of Ordnance, from which it appears that the Government reservation a Sandy Hook, now used as a proving-ground, is entirely too contracted in its dimensions, and that while it serves its purpose admirably for experiments over and into deep water to try the power and efficacy of dynamite and other high explosives, yet in view of the fact that the first step has been taken to manufacture high-power guns, a suitable range over which to test the powerful guns of the near future ought to be provided.

A board of ordnance officers having been ordered last summer to select a favorable site for the purpose, it inspected a number of sites, but was most favorably impressed with the tract of land mentioned in the resolution, it appearing to furnish a good and sufficient firing line from $\frac{1}{2}$ to 9 miles in length, and being sufficiently remote from settlements to avoid probable danger of accident or damage to private property, while facilities for rail communication are such that guns weighing 120 tons may be transported without transshipment from Watervillet arsenal to Richland, $\frac{1}{2}$ miles distant from the northern boundary of the tract.

tract.

It appears that this site and the one at the east end of Long Island are the only ones now available for a proving-ground, and the opportunity of securing such ground within a reasonable distance of New York City should not be lost.

I therefore recommend the purchase of the tract in question.

I also inclose a report of the 7th instant on the subject, from the major-general commending the Army, together with two maps of the proposed proving-ground and its vicinity.

Very respectfully,

WM. C. ENDICOTT, Secretary of War.

Hon. R. W. TOWNSHEND, Chairman Committee on Military Affairs, House of Representatives.

Mr. SAYERS. I now call for the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Townshend] to the fact that this provision is obnoxious to the rule in that it proposes new legislation. It carries no appropriation; nevertheless the proposition is new legislation, and if the point of order is insisted upon-

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must sustain it.

The Clerk proceded with the reading of the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am authorized by the committee to send up another amendment, but will refrain from doing so. I know it will meet with opposition from the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and therefore, in order to save the time of the House, I will not present it

Mr. RANDALL. That is a violent presumption on the part of the

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. DOCKERY reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and

Mr. TOWNSHEND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ENLOE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 1860) to amend section 1683 of the Revised Statutes;

A bill (H. R. 331) for the relief of David Meriwether.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Itransmit herewith a further report of the Secretary of State, with accompanying correspondence, relating to Samoa, and the joint protocols of a conference held in this city in the summer of 1887, to the publication of which the Governments of Germany and Great Britain have consented.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 8, 1889.

Mr. HOOKER. I ask that the message just read, together with the accompanying documents, be printed in the RECORD. This is a matter of importance and of great interest to the whole country.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

To the President:

To the President:

In further supplement to the information heretofore laid by you before the Congress in relation to affairs in Samoa, your last message being under date of February I, the undersigned now has the honor to submit, with a view of their transmission to Congress, certain documents and correspondence on the subject referred to.

The inclosures consist of the reply of our minister at Berlin to my telegraphic instructions of January 31, 1889, and a note from me to Count Arco, the German minister, in relation thereto, under date of February I, 1889; the proposal of Prince Bismarck for a resumption of the conference of 1887 between the representatives of the three treaty powers for the pacification of Samoa on the basis of native independence and the equality of rights among the treaty powers, and my response, under your instructions, thereto.

I have also the honor to report that the Governments of Germany and Great Britain have expressed their consent to the publication of the joint protocols of the conference held in this city in the summer of 1887, and which was suspended at my suggestion, for reasons stated, on July 28, 1887.

The subject of our relations to Samoa and our rights and duties under treaty stipulations with that country and with the other treaty powers of Great Britain and Germany, under the comity of international law, having been placed by you before the Congress, it seems proper that the fullest information in the hands of the Executive should be furnished, and the agreement to consider the discussions of the conference of 1887 as confidential has alone caused the papers now sent to have been up to this time withheld from publication.

Respectfully submitted.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES, Berlin, February 1, 1889.

A telegram from Mr. Pendleton on February 1, 1889, informed the Department that the reported action of the German consul at Apia, who, it appeared, against the protest of the British consul, had declared foreigners under martial law was contrary to instructions, was regretted, and had been rebuked; and that the German Government would adhere strictly to treaty status. Mr. Pendleton added that this statement from the German secretary of state for foreign affairs anticipated the representations Mr. Pendleton was instructed to make, and he would therefore withhold them for the present.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February I, 1889.

My Dear Count Arco: Referring to my note of yesterday, I have now the pleasure to inform you that a telegram just received from Mr. Pendleton, at Ferlin, states that the object of my instruction to him in reference to the declaration of martial law by the German consul at Apia had been anticipated, and at the foreign office he had been informed that the assumptions of the German consul at Apia were disavowed, and that such action, if it had been taken, was regretted and rebuked by the German Government.

This was wholly in the line of the note verbale you read me this morning.

Believe me, very truly, yours,

T. F. BAYARD.

Prince Bismarck to Count Arco.

Prince Bismarck to Count Arco.

[Memorandum of instructions of Prince Bismarck to the minister of Germany, read by the latter to the Secretary of State February 4, 1889.]

The present situation in Samoa regarding the interests of the three treaty powers renders it necessary to renew the attempt to bring the future of those islands to an understanding.

The position of the three treaty powers in the civilized world makes it their duty to stop the bloody combat accompanied by barbarous customs of those not numerous tribes, for whose welfare, according to the judgment of the civilized world, it is a duty of the treaty powers to provide.

Prince Bismarck, in consequence, considers it a duty of the participating Governments to put an end, by the agreement of the treaty powers, to the troubles which have originated in Samoa, and by restitution of peace among the Samoans themselves, and so make an end of future bloodshed and the horrors of a civil war conducted with barbarous cruelty among the natives.

The best remedy seems to be a resumption of the consultation which took place between the representative of Germany, England, and the United States in the year 1887, at Washington, and at that time adjourned without any possibility of their representatives coming to any agreement.

In consequence, I have been requested by Prince Bismarck to propose to you to resume with Germany and the British Government the consultation regarding the Samoan question.

The last conference took place at Washington. According to the equal rights of the three treaty powers, it seems proper that the place for the negotiations should change in regular turn. Based upon this opinion, I am directed to invite the Government of the United States to a conference regarding Samoa, to take place at Berlin, and a similar invitation has been sent to the British Government.

I am also directed to declare that any supposition that Germany would not feel satisfied with a neutral position in the Samoan Islands is unfounded, as we Frament.

I am also directed to declare that any supposition that Germany would not feel satisfied with a neutral position in the Samoan Islands is unfounded, as we have already declared in the last conference (of 1887) it is neither our intention to put in question the independence of the island group nor the equal rights of the treaty powers. We simply desire to create a condition which offers permanent security for bringing to an end bloodshed and decapitation, and which grants permanent safety to the commercial interests of the three treaty powers in Samoa.

Mr. Bayard to Count Arco.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 5, 1889.

Sir: The President having been made acquainted fully with the tenor of the instructions received by you from Prince Bismarck and read by you yesterday for my transcription, he requests me to say that he fully shares in the desire expressed by the Prince Chancellor to bring the blessings of peace and order to the remote and feeble community of semi-civilized people inhabiting the islands of Samoa; and that he clearly recognizes the duty of the powerful nations of Christendom to deal with these people in a spirit of magnanimity and because recognize.

nations of Christendom to deal with these people in a spirit of magnanimity and benevolence.

On behalf of the United States Government the President instructs me to express his acceptance of the proposal of the Government of Germany to resume the consultation held in this city between the representatives of the United States, Germany, and Great Britain, which was suspended on the 26th day of July, 1887, such consultation to be renewed, as it was undertaken, for the purpose of establishing peace and an orderly stable government in the Samoan Islands on the basis of their recognized independence and the equal rights of the three treaty powers. The resumption of such conference as it is now proposed by Prince Bismarck, upon the general lines advanced by each of the three powers, as set forth in the protocols of the conference as far as it has progressed, and embracing certain points of agreement, appears to present a hopeful prospect for securing the welfare of the Samoan people and such a neutralization of territorial jurisdiction as will prevent preponderant control by any nation and secure equal rights of commerce and navigation to all.

The sooner this conference can be resumed the better. And in view of the late deplorable seenes of bloodshed which have been exhibited upon Samoan soil, entailing deeply regrettable loss to Germany, it appears to be essential that a truce should be forthwith proclaimed and further armed action should be arrested. A contention of arms by such a scanty band as the Samoans against the yast armaments of Germany has, of course, but one result assured in advance, and would be manifestly futile. There is no feature of equality in such a struggle.

As the assurance of Prince Bismarck that the pacification of the Samoan group and the occupation of a neutral position are his only objects, is as frankly accepted by the United States as it is tendered by Germany, it is suggested, in furtherance of the desired result of the conference, that instructions to suspend belligerent action, and await the action of such conference, should at once be telegraphed to their respective officers in Samoa by the three treaty powers.

To continue to prosecute a war of destruction and reprisal, even upon admitted provocation, would surely not consist with the objects of any of the three powers. It is hoped, therefore, that orders of the nature indicated will be forwarded to Samoa without delay.

The announcement of the conference between the treaty powers, it is confidently expected, will at once cause a cessation of hostility among the natives; and their speedy election of a king would certainly be a long step towards harmony. Except as the condition may be changed by a free election of a king by the natives, it is deemed essential that affairs in Samoa should remain in state quo pending the conference.

If we may indulge the hope which the adoption of these suggestions promises for a successful issue of the conference, the Government of the United States will at once take steps to be properly represented at the meetings of such conference in Berlin.

will at once take steps to be properly represented at the meetings of such conference in Berlin.

The statements you read to me as emanating from the German consul at Samoa, in which he finds fault with the conduct of Captain Leary of the Nipsie, and of Mr. Blacklock, the United States consul, as violative of the instructions of this Government to maintain an impartial attitude in the conflicts in Samoa, do not appear to be substantiated by an averment of any personal knowledge of the facts, but must have been based upon information and belief only, or are reported at second hand, and must be classed as merely hearsay evidence.

These conflicting statements of the German consul will be brought to the attention of Captain Leary and Mr. Blacklock, and their reply will be communicated. Much allowance must be made for the excitement prevailing in Samoa, which is not favorable to accuracy or moderation of statement, especially of hien is not involved to account of account of the second o

Protocol of first-Samoan conference,

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, June 25, 1887.

Department of State, Washington, June 25, 1887.

The conference was formally opened by Mr. Bayard inquiring whether the Rritish and German ministers had received his note inclosing a draught of a plan for the settlement of Samoan affairs, and whether they had prepared any comments upon it. Both had received it.

Mr von Alvensleben then stated that he had made a memorandum, which he would read, but could not give out of his hand. His Government had sent him general instructions before knowing Mr. Bayard's suggestions, and those instructions therefore did not cover all the different points suggested. He was, however, willing that the views of his Government should be put down in the protocol of the conference as he read them.

Mr. Bayard said the conference was suggested a year ago; that the three Governments had sent out commissioners to make investigation and report; that reports had been made and exchanged; that an expression of the views of the United States had been desired; that an informal conference had been held, which ended in the request by the ministers of Great Britain and Germany that those views should be reduced to writing; that this had been done and the plan placed in their hands, and that it seemed proper that the views of the other two Governments should be handed him in the same way.

This however, Mr. von Alvensleben declined to do, and for this reason Sir Lionel West also decided not to give a copy of the memorandum which he had prepared; but they agreed that their statements, as read by them, should be taken down by a stenographer and embodied in the protocol of the conference. The plan previously submitted by Mr. Bayard on the part of the United States, and which is to be taken as if read at the conference, is as follows:

PLAN FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF PEACE AND CIVILIZATION IN SAMOA UNDER

PLAN FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF PEACE AND CIVILIZATION IN SAMOA UNDER THE CO-OPERATIVE SUPPORT OF THE GOVERNMENTS OF THE UNITED STATES, GERMANY, AND GREAT ERITAIN.

1. The independence and autonomy of the kingdom composed of these islands are to be preserved free from the control or preponderating influence of any foreign government, and it was in pursuance of this understanding that commissioners were recently sent by the three powers respectively to investigate and report upon the condition of the islands, and that the respective consuls of the three powers at the islands were changed.

2. It is the desire of the United States, and equally of Germany and Great Britain, to assist the natives of Samoa to form and administer their government.

2. It is the desire of the United States, and equally of Germany and Great Britain, to assist the natives of Samoa to form and administer their government.

3. The due and orderly commencement of the new government will be the recognition of a native king; and a respect for native customs and traditions, which the three powers have recognized by their several existing treaties, would seem to require the continuance of Malietoa Laupepa as king and of Tamascese as vice-king. The kingship of the islands has for many years been filled by the election of the head of the Malietoa family, of Malietoa Talavoa, until his death in 1880, and of Malietoa Laupepa in March, 1881, in which same year Tamasces was elected vice-king. These voluntary native elections and the governments so established were severally recognized by the United States, Germany, and Great Britain, and the treaties now existing between these powers and Samoa should have all the binding force attendant upon such formal obligations.

4. A written constitution of government should be adopted, and on the following lines: An election by the native inhabitants should be held at once for chiefs from the several districts of Samoa who are to be the council of the king. The number of these chiefs may be as follows: From Aana, 2; from Atua, 2; from Apolima and Manono, 1; from Savaii, 6; from Taumasaga, 2; from Tutuila, Mauna, Olosega, Ofa, and Aunuu, 2. By the king and these chiefs the constitution should be adopted and proclaimed. This constitution should provide for a legislature which should, as heretofore, consist of a king's council or timua, and a legislative assembly or faipule. The former should consist of the king, the vice-king, three ministers to be nominated by the three treaty powers, and chiefs from the several districts of Samoa, the latter to be elected for life. The faipule should be elected by the people in the ratio of one representative for every 2,000 of the population and for the term of three years. Those chosen at the first election shoul minister of the interior, should be appointed by the king upon the nomination of the three treaty powers, and should serve for a term of ——years, unless removed by the king upon the application of the three treaty powers. These ministers should have seats on the floor of the Faipule and take part in the debates, 6. A municipal government shall be formed for Apia without interference by the foreign consuls. The government of the municipality shall consist of a council with local legislative powers, and a mayor or chief executive officer, to be appointed by the king and council.

7. Foreign consuls shall retain criminal jurisdiction over their own countrymen, respectively, as heretofore.

8. A court, for the administration of instite among the natives shall be constimen, respectively, as heretofore.

8. A court for the administration of justice among the natives shall be constituted, the judges to be appointed by the king and council without regard to their nationality, and the police officers and minor officials of the court shall be selected from the natives.

9. The constitution should prohibit the imposition of pecuniary fines upon natives, and sentences for criminal offenses should be terms of imprisonment with labor on the public roads, buildings, and grounds.

10. The sale of deadly weapons or ammunition therefor should be prohibited, as well as the sale of intoxicating liquors.

11. A land commission should forthwith be organized before whom all claims of title to land by foreigners shall be submitted and whose judgment shall be final.

of title to land by foreigners shall be submitted and whose judgment when final.

This commission shall consist of five members appointed by the king, of whom three shall be nominated by the three treaty powers, i. e., one by each of the said powers, and the remaining two selected by the king. They shall obtain the services of a competent engineer and assistants, who shall make correct survey and plots of land respectively claimed, the cost of which survey and plots shall be paid by the claimants respectively. The said land commission shall inquire into the nature and extent of each and every land claim by foreigners, and whether good or valuable consideration was paid therefor, and no land shall be awarded to any claimant unless it be prov d that at least value to the extent of — per acre had been paid therefor, and in all cases where an illegal or immoral consideration has been given, where liquor, or fire-arms or weapons of any description form the consideration such claims shall be declared invalid and the land shall forthwith be restored to the control of the Government of Samoa.

weapons of any description form the consideration such claims shall be declared invalid and the land shall forthwith be restored to the control of the Government of Samoa.

12. The judges of the land commission shall each receive a salary of ——per annum, to be paid out of the revenues of the kingdom, and shall appoint a clerk who shall duly keep the records of their proceedings.

13. It shall be the duty of the said land commission to survey and set apart of the unclaimed or unoccupied land one-tenth part thereof to be rented for the use and support of the public schools.

14. To assist in raising revenue for the support of the government, customs and tonnage dues shall be levied at the several ports of entry, and to this end each of the treaty powers will negotiate identic treaties with Samoa in which the rates of said duties shall be established.

15. Each of the treaty powers will alternately keep four months in each year a man-of-war in Samoan waters to assist in maintaining the government so to be established and to preserve peace and order.

Mr. von Alvensleben then read his memorandum, which was as follows:

The unsettled condition of affairs on the Samoan Islands having gradually become more and more injurious to the foreign residents and to the commercial interests of the three treaty powers, the latter had to take into serious consideration the means by which the lasting peace and order could be restored there. With this view and the understanding that the independence of Samoa under a native government was to be maintained, and that no monopolies should be created there by any foreign power, the three treaty powers have agreed to the proposition of the Government of the United States of America to hold a conference of pleuipotentiaries. It was further agreed that, in order to get complete and network of the proposition of the Government of the United States of America to hold a conference of pleuipotentiaries. It was further agreed that, in order to get complete and proposition of the Government of t

2. As far as merely Samoan affairs are concerned, the administration of the country to be carried on, as was hitherto the case, by the king assisted by the native council, composed of the most prominent-chiefs. The competence of the king and the co-operation of the native council will have to be defined by special king and the ec-operation of the native council will have to be defined by special agreement.

3. Experience having shown the incapability of the Samoans to maintain order and peace in thei country, a foreign representative to be appointed as adviser to the king in order to strengthen the latter's authority.

This adviser, who is to act as the mandatary of the three treaty powers, will have to discharge, under the nominal responsibility of the king, the government affairs. He will have to control all necessary measures with regard to the maintenance of public order in general, and especially to the security of any kind of property of foreign residents. This adviser, whose position would be virtually that of a prime minister, to be nominated by the treaty power having for the time being the preponderating interests in Samoa. The nomination needs the approval of the two other powers. The first appointment to be made for the term of five years in the first instance, and at the expiration of that period a fresh appointment becoming vacant during the said term of five years, through the death, resignation, or removal of the advisor, another person shall be similarly appointed to hold the office for the remainder of the said term.

4. In order to avoid every misapprehension of the situation by the placing of the representative of one of the treaty powers in the most prominent position of the Samoan admini-tration, it will be expedient to formally acknowledge anew the principle, already contained in the existing treaties with Samoa, of absolute equality of treatment in respect of commerce, navigation, jurisdiction, and all other matters whatsoever to be secured to the three powers and to the achieve and editzens.

5. The irregularities which are known to have occurred in regard to the acquisition of land, and the disputes to which they have led between foreigners and natives make, it appear expedient to consider the establishment of a special international court for the decision of claims and disputes relating to land. For the composition of this court due consideration will have to be given to the nationality of the parties.

6. It will have to be one of the principal tasks of the new administration to regulate the finances and to draw up a budget in accordance with the needs of foreign rade and commerce, the question of levying taxes on foreigners and natives. For this purpose, and in order to raise the requisite foreign trade and commerce, the question of levying taxes on foreigners with the consent of the three treaty powers will have to be considered.

7. As the German interests in Samoa outweigh actually those of the two othership of the provisions established above under No. 3.

Under any circumstances, in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, exist-ing treaties should be maintained. These treaties, it may be remarked, are not signed by Malietoa, but are in the name of the Government of Samoa. Sir Lionel West said he was ready to discuss the various points suggested in the memorandums.

Mr. Bayard said he would not be ready to discuss them until an opportunity had been given him of reading the British and German views as taken down by the stenographer.

The conference then adjourned to meet at a time subsequently to be agreed

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, July 2, 1887.

Mr. Bayard said he understood that all agreed upon the following points:
That there should be no annexation of the islands by any of the treaty powers; that the independence and autonomy of the islands were to be preserved, with equality of rights of commerce and navigation for the citizens or subjects of the treaty powers; that a native government was to be established and assisted to maintain itself; that the present jurisdiction of consuls over their own countrymen should be preserved; that the present treaties be maintained so far as the rights of the three powers under them are concerned; that means of raising revenue for the support of the government should be devised, and that the question of taxing foreigners should be considered; that impost and tonnage duties should be established by identic treaties between the three powers and the Samoan Government; that a land court should be formed to settle titles and holdings of lands in the group. It had been admitted that the claims of foreigners to lands exceeded the entire area of the islands, and this was the best proof that the claims required overhauling by a court whose decision should be final.

Mr. Bayard further said that while it had been agreed that a native government should be established and assisted to maintain itself, the powers were not agreed as to its details. Great Britain and Germany proposed that there should be only a king and a council of chiefs. The United States suggested a king, a council of chiefs, and a legislative assembly, composed of representatives elected by the people of the islands. He was, however, inclined to believe that the greater the simplicity of the framework of the government the better, and he was disposed to place among the points of agreement that the native government should consist of the king and his council of chiefs.

Mr. von Alvensleben said if there was such a legislative assembly as Mr. Bayard replied that Germany had proposed its omission, and that it was in order not to stand upon form, but to get a substantial agreement, that he had deferred to that proposal. He desired to facilitate agreement, and that the same time thought it not unadvisable to simplify the government as much as possible.

Sir Lionel West said he did not think his memorandum referred to the subsible.

Sir Lionel West said he did not think his memorandum referred to the subject of identic treaties respecting impost and tonnage duties. He saw, however, no objection to the idea of identic treaties. After some further discussion it was decided that this should be taken as agreed upon in conference.

Mr. Bayard said there were some other points on which the propositions of the powers did not run so closely together. The first was as to the kingship. The United States, in view of existing treaties, and of the declarations continuously made, until within a very few months, by the consuls of the three treaty powers, had proposed the continued recognition of Malietoa Laupepa as king, and of Tamasses as vice-king. The British and German Governments proposed a new election. In this, for the sake of coming to an agreement, he was disposed to concur. The United States would not object to a new election, but it should be a native election, free and unawed. The customs of the Samoans should prevail in it, and the result of the election should be announced to and declared by the three consuls, who should not otherwise participate in the proceedings. ceedings.

Mr, von Alvensleben inquired whether that could be prevented.

Mr. Bayard replied that that comment would apply to the whole of the transaction. The islands were very remote from the countries whose representatives were now considering their government, and unless the agents of the three Governments were actuated by a sense of absolute fairness to each other and a desire to carry it out there would be little hope, and he proposed that the agent of the United States should do nothing inconsistent with its action in the matter.

of the United States should do nothing inconsistent with its account the feet.

Sir Lionel West said he could assent to that proposition. The natives must elect the king, and the election must be free.

Mr. von Alvensleben inquired whether they should not take into consideration the probability of the natives not arriving at an election. Malietoa's party might say they had elected their man; Tamasese's party might say; !'We have our man; we won't proceed to an election.' It was not unlikely, according to report, that the natives would proceed to an election. Should not a certain time be fixed within which the election should take place? If it should not take place within that time, then the three powers should agree on a king.

Mr. Bayard said he did not anticipate the failure of the election; but it was in order to avoid any difficulty that he had proposed to let Malietoa remain as king, to which Germany and Great Britain objected.

Sir Lionel West said his Government had expressed no opinion hostile or adverse to Malietoa.

Mr. Bayard said he had not the slightest objection to the election of Malietoa.

Mr. Bayard said he had not the slightest objection to the election of Malietoa.

Mr. Bayard said he had not the slightest objection to the election of Malietoa if the people of Samoa should choose him. At present, however, there seemed to be no chance for him, if the statement made by Mr. von Alvensleben, that he was in a small minority, was just. But there was a difference of opinion on that

Mr. von Alvensleben asked whether the newly-elected king should not be approved by the powers.

Mr. Bayard answered, no; that, on the contrary, there was to be a free elec-

Mr. von Alvensleben said the people might nominate the king and the powers

Mr. von Alvensleben said the people might nominate the king and the powers confirm him.

Mr. Bayard said that would virtually give the powers the control of the choice of a king. It would not be a native selection if it had to be made subject to the approval of somebody else. The object of the present arrangement was not to obliterate the rights of the islanders, but to assist them in forming a civilized government; that a virtual neutralization of this group of islands was desirable, and this was to be secured by the abstention of the three powers from seeking any special control. This principle should underlie all that they were proposing. There had been a proposition from Germany which had metwith a certain degree of recognition from Great Britain, that the power laving a preponderance of present commercial interest should exercise a preponderating influence.

Mr. von Alvensleben said, not commercial altogether, because the Germans

Mr. von Alvensleben said, not commercial altogether, because the Germans had also the greatest land interest.

Mr. Bayard said that was the claim. It would be this: That because Germany has a preponderance of numbers, of land, and of commerce she should, therefore, have a preponderance of weight in the counsels. It seemed to him that that proposition was in conflict with the principle upon which they propose to proceed, and that it was one that would increase as they progress. That is to say, that the ultimate result of admitting such a principle as that and proceeding upon such a basis would be to reduce the islands into a Germanic possession. Now, that is certainly in conflict with the idea of virtual neutralization of the islands with which they set out, and not in accordance with the agreed plan, even upon the agreed points of the plan, and he referred to it now because they were approaching the question of the appointment of the chief executive officers who would have more actual or practical power in controlling affairs there than others. He could illustrate it better by saying that Germany proposed to have one prime minister. The United States proposed three ministers—a minister of foreign affairs, a minister of finance and treasury, and a minister of the interior—who should manage questions of lands and the like, and that they should be associated with the king and one native, making a council in that way of odd numbers, in which the three powers should have a majority, but that those officers should be separate and be appointed by the king, the idea being native appointment on foreign nomination. The German idea was that they should have a prime minister who should be the regreat executive, and control all, a depository of executive power, and that hecause Germany had more land, people, and commerce than the other two.

Sir Llonel West said only for a time.

Mr. Bayard said for five years as a basis, and a renewel again on the same terms. The suggestion was inconsistent with the principle with which they propose to conduct this arrangement, because it was at once starting upon a road that can lead but into one direction, and that is the complete domination of one power.

Mr. von Alvensleben said the imperial government wanted to nominate and have the appointment subject to the approval of the other two powers, and therefore they gave every guaranty that was possible.

Mr. Bayard said he wished to draw attention to the fact that the importance of these islands is mainly because of their geographical position. They lie in the pathway of a commerce that is just being developed. The opening of the trans-continental railways had given to this group of islands an interest which they never had before, and, moreover, we all hope for the penetration of the status continental railways had given to this group of islands an interest which they never had before, and, moreover, we all hope for the penetration of the status on the start of the start in the hold the island groups in Polynesia, and something more than mere islands. Great Britain owns Fiji and New Zealand and other islands. He said nothing of the continent of Australia. Great Britain has her settlement on New Guinea. Germany has the Marshal group and the Solomon Islands. She also has a settlement, and a very importantone, on New Guinea. Spain has the Carolines, France makes claim to the New Hebrides. With a great ocean front on the Padific, the United States have not acquired a foot of land in that region, but be a continued to the state of the states than from the state of the state of the state foreigners, one to be nominated by each of the powers, and two natives; but the plan submitted by Mr. von Alvensleben proposed only three foreigners. Mr. von Alvensleben said that was only a land commission to prepare for the court.

Mr. Bayard did not preceive the utility of this.

Mr. von Alvensleben said the object of the commission would be to investigate. Mr. Bayard said he did not see the necessity of that. The land court proposed by him could send for papers, examine witnesses, and give judgment.

Mr. von Alvensleben said the commission was intended to examine all the deeds, and, so far as possible, settle questions of title, leaving only such titles as they were not satisfied with to the court.

Mr. Bayard thought both functions germane to the same object, and that a single body would be more simple, and could with equal certainty and justice deal with the business, as if there were a commission to examine and a court subsequently to decide.

Sir Lionel West said it was intended to facilitate the action of the court by the creation of the commission.

Mr. Bayard said it was not an intricate matter, and if there was the right kind of court, with fair-minded men who would deal with each other with justness between themselves and the people, they would move with more celerity and with more stability than if there were two bodies. There would be two rules of decision by having two different bodies.

Mr. von Alvensleben thought that general principles should be established, and that there should be an appeal from the land commission to the land court, whose decision should be final. He also asked how investigations could be made.

Mr. Bayard said the area to be gone over was not extensive, and that there was no function a board of commissioners could perform that the court could not equally perform.

Mr. von Alvensleven inquired what Mr. Bayard proposed in place of the German proposition of the Imperial German Government that a lasting improvement of the condition of the Samoan Islands can not be expected fr moa should be given the right to nommate the official whose duty it shall be to control the native government. That Germany is the power having the largest interests is questioned by nobody. Taking into consideration the dimensions and the value of the German interests represented in Samoa, and the great credit which Germany essentially deserves for having brought the Samoan Islands to their actual importance, it can not be fairly contested that Germany must be recognized by the other powers as being entitled to receive this mandate. Germany, or better, her subjects, pay alone half of all the taxes. The value of the German commerce with Samoa, without including the South Pacific, doubles the English and American commerce together. German subjects own in Samoa nearly double as much uncultivated land and nearly six times as much cultivated land. It can not therefore be expected that she should consent to remain more or less excluded from the efficient control of the country and have it pass to one of the two powers who have less interests."

Mr. Bayard thought there was a misapprehension on Mr. von Alvensleben's part as to any design of exclusion. On the contrary, perfect equality as to all was proposed. That would not affect in the least the question of the rights of German subjects or their property. The idea of the United States was that there should be one law for all, and that no one power should be more than another in the control of those questions.

Mr. von Alvensleben thought it more natural that the power that had the largest interests should also, after giving all the guaranties to the other powers, be nearest to control and the most responsible for it.

Mr. Bayard said it seemed to him that that reasoning forgot entirely the principle upon which the whole movement proceeded; that is, the native government to preserve its own existence, while the contrary is that contended for by Germany. The idea of the United States was that there should be an equality of rights.

Mr. No Alvensleben said that was int there was no suggestion of continuance of interference by the consuls in the government of that country, except with regard to the persons or interests of their individual citizens.

Mr. von Alvensleben said he introduced the three consuls for the purpose of showing that Mr. Bayard's proposal of three ministers would be equivalent to the three party government; that the three representatives would almost come to the same thing.

Mr. Bayard said that up to the present time the three consuls had been recognized as three equals co-operating for an end, and under that Germany certainly could not find fault with the result, because her preponderance had been continually increasing, and the interference of the German consul with affairs in Samoa had been very marked, if he could take the accounts of the dispatches of the American vice-consul. There had, however, been no suggestion in his plan that there should be anything more of a consular government. He desired something to do away with the injustice which, it is said, has been done these people. It is not becoming that the three powers should be in a group of islands where the land claims of their citizens exceed the whole territory of those islands. Mr. Thurston, the British commissioner, had put that with complete force when he said they were absolutely punishing these people for acts which were the necessary result and consequence of the kind of government they had endured.

Sir. Lionel West said his Government seemed to incline to a foreign control, because they thought without it there could be no stable government. Mr. Bates distinctly states it in his report; Mr. Thurston states it, that without this intervention it is impossible to establish a stable government, and his Government were willing that this control should be exercised by a person appointed by one of the powers, as the mandatary of the other two.

Mr. Bayard inquired what were his views about the native courts and the abolition of pecuniary fines?

Sir Lionel West said he thought they should ag arms, etc.?

Sir Lionel West said his Government were inclined to support that proposition.

Mr. von Alvensleben said he did not think the proposition should have been stated so widely. The words "immoral" and "illegal" consideration had been used. It was difficult to define what was immoral.

Mr. Bayard said he had no objection to defining it.

Mr. von Alvensleben said if it meant the sale of fire-arms it did not touch the Germans altogether.

It might, however, have happened that those people really would not take any money if they could get fire-arms. If it was shown that they really gave the land away, they ought to get an additional sum. He suggested that what had been paid should be taken into consideration, and if it was too small an additional sum could be fixed by the land commission or the land court.

Mr. Bayard inquired as to his proposition to intrust minor offices, those that touch the natives themselves, to natives instead of foreigners.

Sir Lionel West said it was a difficult matter, but the principle ought to be that they should be natives.

Mr. Bayard said it would be a great means of native education, and that the natives should be educated in self-government.

Sir Lionel West asked whether he did not think that a very good reason for establishing foreign control?

Mr. Bayard said foreign assistance and native government should be combined. Hence he had proposed that in the council of the king there should be three foreigners, a minister of foreign affairs, of the interior, and a treasurer. These ministers would doubtless have a paramount voice, but they would be associated with two natives. One might be a German, another an Englishman, and another an American. Their functions would, in a great measure, be independent, and ought to be.

Mr. Payard said yes.

Mr. Bayard said yes.
Mr. Non Alvensleben said it would be difficult to find three such persons in Samoa not identified with what had been going on there, and that if they were so chosen he was afraid they would not be able to withdraw from the influence so chosen he was afraid they would not be able to withdraw from the influence of their nationality.

Mr. Bayard said if there was only one man he would not be able to overcome the influence of his nationality, but if there were three men with distinct, different functions, they would act as a check upon each other. But if the nominee of one of the powers acted merely as a partisan, his Government should remove him. There should be the readiest disposition in this regard, and the United States had already shown its disposition to act promptly.

Mr. von Alvensleben said he had been instructed to lay before the conference, in order to facilitate its work, a draught of a convention between the three treaty powers, a memorandum on the land disputes, and a memorandum on the financial question. These were, respectively, as follows:

"The disputes relating to real estate and the acquisition of land in Samoa demand a special treatment.

"This sort of dispute is to be withdrawn from the cognizance of the consuls and from the jurisdiction of the English high commissioner, respectively. It is consonant to the general principles of justice that disputes relating to real estate should be decided by the laws and courts of the country in which the object of the dispute is situated. In the present case, however, it must further be taken into consideration that in the absence of any sort of legal provision as to the conditions, requirements, and formalities necessary for the valid transfer of land, and in consequence of the utter complication existing in the covnership, irregularities, and, it may be, acts of injustice, have cocurred which absolutely demand an impartial decision based upon a thorough examination and investigation of the matter. Such disputes are to be settled in a uniform procedure and according to uniform principles to be previously laid down by the treaty powers with the agreement of the Samoan Government, by an authority to be specially instituted, and in the last instance with the agreement of the Samoan Government, by an authority to be specially instituted, and in the last instance with the decision as to the validity of land transfers are to be based, first, to appoint a commission composed of three members, each of the three treaty powers naming one. Such native commissions would have also to be charged with the examination, and, if required, with the decision, of land disputes existing between the Samoans themselves. Pieces of land which for ten years or more have, without dispute, been cultivated, or at least made use of by foreigners, shall, without further inquiry, be regarded as property legally owned or acquired by prescription.

"Claims of third parties to such pieces of land shall be brought to judicial decision only then and in so far as, in accordance to the dispositions with regard to the interruption of the prescription, the claim to the land has been presented to the actual holder in written form at least once within the period of ten years. The foreign commission must further be authorized to give a provisional decision as to disputes relating to possession and ownership of land, or to effect an amicable arrangement. The litigant shall have the right of appeal from the decisions of the commission, or of demanding a judicial decision by the land court. Whenever Samoans are involved as parties in such disputes, the foreign commission shall invoke the co-operation of a Samoan chief to be nominated by the government of the district where the land lies, or of the Samoan judge in Apia.

"In drawing up the inclosed budget of receipts the principle has been followed of leaving Samoa the character of a free-trade country. Quite apart from the fact that in Article HI of the treaty of commerce between the United States of America and Samoa provision is made for the exemption of the cargoes of all American ships from duties of every sort, the introduction of merely financial duties (Finanzölle) seemed undesirable in the interest of a free and unrestricted development of Samoan commerce. On the other hand, no objection could be raised to taking into consideration a small statistical duty at the rate of 1 per cent, ad valorem on merchandise imported into the islands, as well as a duty at about the same rate on products exported from Samoa—at present only copra, cotton, and to a small extent coffee are in question. Only for spirituous liquors, arms, and ammunition real import duties have been introduced into the budget. The consumption of brandy, especially on the part of the natives, shall be checked thereby. For the sake of uniformity an import duty will also be imposed upon beer and wine, both articles of consumption which are used only by the better situated classes and which can easily bear a comparatively not very high tax. Also the import of arms shall be restricted by the duties imposed. It may well be taken for granted that the Government of the United States would also give their consent to the proposed taxes and statistical duties. "Moreover, the budget of receipts has been drawn up on the model of the existing arrangements, and the greater number of items have been based upon the taxes hitherto levied by the municipal administration of Apia. Great care has been taken with regard to the calculation of an increase to be expected to result from a more developed commerce, and it may be said in general that the items have been fixed at a very low rate. The taxation of the natives has similarly been based on the model of existing institutions. More than $20,000 have been raised by the Government of Tumunalone by a capitation tax paid by districts. The Government of Malietoa has also attempted to exact a capitation tax, it is true, without success. The fault, however, lay neither with the system of taxation nor with the rate of the tax, but exclusively with the weakness and inactivity of the government and the want of the necessary administrative aparatus. The taxation of the natives seemed the less objectionable, as the native element, it would appear, is called to be the first to participate in the advantages of the new Government, and as, besides that, by the plan proposed a considerable part of the taxes raised shall be expended on the salaries and fixed remuneration of Samoan officials.

"With regard to the several items of the receipts the following remarks may be made:

considerable part of the taxes raised shall be expended on the salaries and fixed remuneration of Samoan officials.

With regard to the several items of the receipts the following remarks may be made:

Ad. 1—Capitation on Samoans, $37,500. The population of the Samoan Islands, with the exception of the Manua group, may now be taken as between $3,000 and $3,000 souls. The sum total of the capitation tax represents, therefore, about $1.10 per head of the whole population, and about $3 per head of the adult male portion thereof. The Samoans are perfectly conscious of their obligation to contribute to the public revenue in the way of a capitation tax. It has practically been introduced for many years, even though, as already observed, it has not been regularly levied. In 1872 a capitation tax of $1 for adulmales, 50 cents for young people, and 25 cents for male children, without dist tinction of age, was imposed in order to defray the expenses of buying arms. The fixing of the rate per head served only as a measure for the calculation of the tax. The government in Leulumoega has twice during last year imposed a tax of $1 per head on the male population. The tax was levied by districts and handed over to the government. The ambition of the several districts to contribute as large sums as possible led to the result that the total sum of the taxes actually paid was considerably in excess of the sum calculated for according to the rate fixed of $1 per head of the male population.

"If the government there has now actually raised in its districts alone already more than $20,000 a year by a capitation tax, the figure set down in the budget for the whole of Samoa of $37,500 can hardly be regarded as excessive, all the less so, as the islands, not counting the yield of the German plantations, produce now in copra alone 3,000 tons, and could yield, with a moderate increase of activity, to which the obligation to pay the taxes may well give the necessary impetus, a considerably larger quantity, on the proceeds of which the p "LAND TAX.

"The land taxes on houses and other real estate, serving for commercial purposes, which are already in force in Apia, can be maintained at the same rate of 1 per cent. ad valorem; as yet they have given no cause of complaint. The revenues will be considerably increased by a valuation representing more accurately the real values, as well as by the increased activity in building on the part of foreigners who may be expected to flock in in consequence of the establishment of an orderly state of affairs. The value of the houses and other establishments outside Apia is put, after a careful examination, at $200,000. A direct taxation of the plantations is not intended, as they are already affected indirectly by other taxes, such as the dues for the control of laborers (Arbeitercontrollgebühren) or those levied on the importation of laborers, and the exportation of products, and as, besides, it would seem to be in the interests of the government to encourage the cultivation of plantations.

"Ad. 5 and 6.—Controlling dues (Kontrollstevera) on all sorts of plantation laborers and import dues on laborers. It seems appropriate that a tax should be raised for the central except a transfer of the revenue to be derived from the dues levied for the registration of contracts of sale, as well as from a stamp-tax levied at the rate of 1 per cent. ad valorem on all documents relating to the transfer of property is almost impossible; but in any case the figures set down are estimated at a very low rate.

"Ad. 9.—

a very low rate.

"TAXES ON TRADES (GEWERBESTEUER).

"TAXES ON TRADES (GEWERBESTEUER).

"The municipality of Apia levies a trade-tax on all commercial businesses, ships engaged in trade there, on artisans, and commercial clerks. It is advisable to maintain these taxes. A more accurate valuation, the immigration of foreigners, and the taxation of all trades pursued outside Apia, will probably result in a greater increase of revenue than that estimated in the budget. Special mention must be made of the ships calling at the harbor of Apia for commercial purposes (trading vessels). They have not approximately the same expenses of business that the resident merchants have; they turn over their capital more quickly, and have, by existing regulations, only to pay a single tax of $10. For the protection of native industry it is desirable that ships of this sort should be subjected to a due five times as great.

"Under 9, III, provision is also made for a trade-tax on white laborers.

"Ad. 10.—The license tax for taverns now yields to the municipality a return of $775. By raising the rate of this tax itself as well as by an increase in the number of taverns, which is to be expected in consequence of the greater influx of foreigners, an increase of revenue to the amount of $1,000 may be reckoned on, and all the more so as the taverns established outside Apia will now be subject to the tax.

and at the more so as the taverns established classic Apis with low be subject to the tax.

"Ad. 11 and 12.—The rates set down under the items 'statistical commercial dues on imports and exports,' and 'import duties,' have been arrived at after careful investigation of the statistics hitherto known, and by following the principle that as small a burden as possible shall be laid upon commerce. For imports a duty of 1 per cent, ad valorem seems appropriate; the tax on exported products will be about 1½ to 2 per cent. In the budget drawn up by an American, Mr. Moors, provision was made for a tax of 3 per cent. The smaller rate of 1 per cent, here set down relieves the government of all the apparatus of custom officers. The collection of the tax can be left to the harbor-master. This is taking for granted that Apia should be declared the only port of entry, an arrangement which will not be found burdensome by anybody, and which will also prove useful for the control of mavigation.

"Ad. 13 to 17.—With respect to the pilot dues, it is believed that they will undergo a small increase. This has in fact been already effected by the new German steamer communication, and will be still more the case in consequence of the increase of shipping which is to be expected. The judicial fees and fines can not be approximately calculated. The figures set down appear very low. The revenue to be derived from the postal service has been calculated on the statistical returns of the municipal postmaster in Apia."

Mr. von Alvensleben inquired what length of time the king should be chosen for, and suggested that that might be left for the natives.

Mr. Bayard said he thought so; he preferred to follow the Samoan customs and traditions.

Mr. von Alvensleben said he thought his government might not object to a vice-leing, but he wished for the present to reserve his opinion on that subject. Sir Lionel West said his government might object.

Mr. Bayard said he had suggested it in his original proposition in order to enable the Samoans to gratify their recognition of their leading people, as well as to provide for a succession in case of the death of the king.

The conference then adjourned to meet again at such time as should be agreed upon.

Protocol of third Samoan conference.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, July 9, 1887.

Mr. Bayard said that at the last meeting Mr. von Alvensleben seemed to withdraw or qualify his objection to the Falpule. With a view to simplicity in the government, and with a disposition to concede everything that might be done for coming to an agreement, he had not stood upon that point, and he desired to know what ideas Mr. von Alvensleben would approve in relation to the to know what ideas Mr. von Alvensleben would approve in relation to the Faipule.

Mr. von Alvensleben said it had been agreed that there should be a king and a council of native chiefs. It might be well, instead of keeping the whole Taimua as a council, to take the principal chief, or such as may be appointed, from the Taimua into the king's council, and thus do away with the Taimua as such. The Taimuas really do the business, not, however, without conferring first their Faipules. By taking some member into the king's council from the Faipules, these also might be done away with. But the Faipules might as well be kept, with only a consultative vote on Samoan matters.

Sir Lionel West said then it would not be a legislative body.

Mr. von Alvensleben said they might be a legislative body, but would only have a consultative vote. Their powers should be limited. They ought to have the right of accepting or rejecting the propositions made to them by the king and the council. The more you limit this body the more easily it will be managed.

aged.
Sir Lionel West asked whether they might not do away with it altogether?
Mr. von Alvensleben said he had no objection, but he thought its preservation might bring the Samoans more readily to accept this arrangement. If it was thought better to do away with it, he had no objection. And perhaps the Taimuas might also be called together every year only to select a certain number out of their body who should for a certain time—for a year, or two, or three—belong to the king's council. This would still reduce the number.
Mr. Bayard said he understood that Mr. von Alvensleben's suggestion was that their duties should simply be consultative, and that he did not propose to give legislative power.
Mr. von Alvensleben said: To the king and council, yes; but not to the Faipule.
Mr. Bayard said that was the only one they had under consideration—the legislative branch which he proposed, but which was rejected by both the other members of the conference.

legislative branch which he proposed, but which was rejected by both the other members of the conference.

Mr. von Alvensleben said that if Mr. Bayard thought it better to do away with the Faipule, he had no objection.

Sir Lionel West said he also had none.

Mr. von Alvensleben said if it was thought to be in the interests of the whole settlement, and of disposing of the matter favorably, he had no objection to keeping the Faipule.

Mr. Bayard said his idea of the whole matter was that the simpler their scheme for the government of this people the better; but he would be strongly disposed to respect their traditions and customs as far as may be, and let them have those governmental bodies that they have been accustomed to, and if the Faipule was one, to maintain it.

Mr. von Alvensleben thought there was no difficulty. There would be no objection to keep them on. It would perhaps be well to reduce them in number and to limit their legislative powers. They should only be allowed to accept or to reject what was submitted by the king's council. They could then do no harm.

ber and to limit their legislative powers. They should only be allowed to accept or to reject what was submitted by the king's council. They could then do no harm.

Mr. Bayard inquired whether he meant that their consent should be essential to the enactment of measures.

Mr. von Alvensleben replied yes, in native affairs. He should like to repeat that he was quite ready to do away with it, if that was preferred.

Mr. Bayard then referred to the land question. His suggestion was that a land court should be formed before whom all claims for land in the islands should be brought and whose decisions should be final; but it had been suggested that a land commission should precede the land court, so that there should be an appeal. His comment upon that was that it was an unceessary complication of duties, and a reduplication of officials, costly, and tending to conflict, and opposed to that simplicity in the affairs of this very simple people, that he thought one of the wisest features of his suggestion. There was no complex system of land laws in Samoa.

Sir Lionel West said there was not even a basis of a land system.

Mr. Bayard said consequently no great learning in land laws was required by the adjudicators. What was needed was substantial justice, of which the safts element was honest dealing between the persons who had acquired these lands and those who were the prior owners and controllers of them. He could not perceive any necessity whatever, but, on the contrary, a good deal that was useless and embarrassing in having two sets of men to act upon these questions. International commissions had been frequent, before whom had been brought questions of boundary between adjacent countries and questions of losses growing out of claims mutually against the parties, but he had never heard in any case that it was necessary to precede the tribunal of arbitration and settlement by another commission to sift out in advance, and he thought it would be difficult to find a precedent for it.

Sir Lionel West then read to th mise for submission to the land court, which, after pronouncing upon them, would for the future be free to deal with all land questions arising upon their own merits. It must be borne in mind that not even a basis of a land system prevails in Samoa at present, and it is this basis which it is sought to establish by the preliminary labors of the commission. If this principle is admitted, the composition of the commission and the nature of its labors will have to be defined."

fined."

Sir Lionel West said that was the opinion of his Government, which they strongly recommend.

Mr. Bayard said he did not precisely understand what the question of complication of title was when it is admitted that there was no system under which the titles had come. It was agreed upon as a fact that more land was claimed by foreigners in this group than the islands themselves contain. That alone shows the necessity of examining the base of claim by foreigners to any land at all in Samoa.

the titles mad come. It was agreed upon as a fact that more and was claimed by foreigners in this group than the islands themselves contain. That alone shows the necessity of examining the base of claim by foreigners to any land at all in Samoa.

Sir Lionel West said: But not by a judicial court in the first instance.

Mr. Bayard said it was merely a question whether the means was appropriate to the end. His experience in the United States in dealing with land questions led him to believe that they could remedy the scandal of crowding these people out of existence on their own soil.

Sir Lionel West: In the future, yes.

Mr. Bayard said it was done already, according to these claims. These people are asked to give up all their land absolutely, and yet to live honestly. The best thing they could do was to rectify so gross a condition of things as that implied, and they all agreed as to that. The question was merely of appropriate means to that end. In his judgment, if a competent court was established under the influence of the treaty powers, such court to consist of three foreigners and two natives, and it was agreed that upon the fact being made known that they are duly commissioned and sworn to do justice in these land cases, that all of the land claims, without exception, should be brought before them—what use and what part a commission could play in that he could not see. The court could cause to be filed before them within a stated period the claims of every foreigner to land in Samoa, accompanied by his muniments of title, whatever they may be. There was no necessity for a commission to summon people to file their claims. If notice was given of the appointment of a land court, and proclamation is made that before them were to be filed all the claims for land in Samoa, those who did not make the claim to land would be supposed not to have any and those having claims would come forward and support them with proper testimony. It would not be a question of the commission hunting up claims.

Sir Lionel West sa

ott.

Sir Lionel West: In your opinion the commission will not facilitate the court?

Mr. Bayard: On the contrary it would embarrass it, and would increase our difficulty in finding the number of competent persons for these tribunals.

Sir Lionel West said his Government was strongly in favor of the commission and Mr. von Alvensleben's Government was also.

Mr. von Alvensleben said the intention of his Government is also to facilitate, and the commission should be organized principally for the reason that it would make the settlements easier. He had been told that there were very many claims and that there was not one spot of Samoa that was not claimed either by foreigners or by Samoans or by both, and there were many lands which have been sold two or three times to different people, and he knew from very good authority that such cases would be presented where one Samoan sold it to one foreigner, another Samoan came and sold the same to another foreigner, and thus the claim stood. It had, perhaps, been surveyed by the one and not by the other; so that the claimants' cases would be easily settled as soon as they saw that the commission only wanted to act with fairness.

Mr. Bayard said he was still unable to perceive what function the commission could perform that the court could not equally and more efficiently perform; nor could he see any use of passing these proceedings through two tribunals. The court should be invested with power to call on every man who claims to own and hold land in Samoa, to lay before them the groundwork of his title, and he must come and uphold it, otherwise he would be without that validation of his title which is essential in Samoa. International commissions had been many, and such a thing as preceding the judgment of arbitration by the finding of a commission was unheard of.

Sir Lionel West said: Not the finding of the commission, but the collection of evidence.

Mr. Bayard said the object of the commission appeared to be only to make business for the court, which could, however,

Sir Lionel West said: Not the initing of the commission, but the collection of evidence.

Mr. Bayard said the object of the commission appeared to be only to make business for the court, which could, however, call all the cases into its cognizance and settle them.

Another matter he desired to mention was the question of the creation of a single mandatary, or the placing of powers in the hands of three chief executive officers, who should represent the three treaty powers, the king being the fourth, and a native to be the fifth. The effect of such a tribunal would be to give the three powers combined a majority and the decision. He could not see how the principle upon which we have agreed for the establishment of government in Samoa could be accomplished under the German plan.

Sir Lionel West: Which is approved by my Government.

Mr. Bayard said he did not understand that it was approved. He did not understand that Sir Lionel had any definite propostion on that point. It seemed to him very plain that if the German plan was followed it would necessarily result in creating those islands, whatever might be their nominal government, into a German possession, and that was not in accord with the plan on which they had all agreed in the beginning of this conference.

Sir Lionel West then read the following paper in regard to the mandatary scheme:

"It is admitted by the three powers that foreign intervention can alone insure

Sir Lionei west then read the following paper in regard to the mandatary scheme:

"It is admitted by the three powers that foreign intervention can alone insure the stability of the native government which it is sought to establish in Samoa, and that the tripartite control which has heretofore been exercised has proved abortive. The mandatary scheme does not involve the recognition of any preponderating interests which, as the Secretary of State has justly remarked, ought not to be taken into account in dealing with the matters before the conference. The German Government, as well as Her Majesty's Government, moreover, do not assert preponderance of interests as an argument in favor of the scheme. Indeed, they have asserted that there shall be absolute equality of treatment in respect to commerce, navigation, and jurisdiction, should it be adopted, but Her Majesty's Government are willing, seeing the great interest Germany has in Samoa, to accord to the German representative the first term of five years as the mandatory of the other two powers. Her Majesty's Government do not see that any exclusive control is involved in this arrangement as under any circumstances the mandatary power can only be exercised with the consent of the other two powers, and it seems, therefore, a matter of small importance which power should be the first to exercise it. The argument in favor of the mandatary scheme is that it will prevent the control from falling into the hands of those connected with local interests and do away with the tripartite control which has been the cause of so many disputes and which has, in fact, led to the present conference. It is to this end, therefore, that Her Majesty's Government favor it as the only measure of establishing a salutary foreign control. I would submit that the scheme, proposed under No. 5, of the Secretary of State seems to fall short of this object, inasmuch as it leaves the door open to the same local influences that have hitherto prevailed owing to the difficulty of insuring impartial nominations in the king's council."

Mr. Bayard said he observed Sir Lionel spoke of the government that was first to take the mandatary office. Did he mean that there was to be an alternation, and that the power taking it first, after a term of years, was to be succeeded by another?

Sir Lionel West said it would be alternative, with the consent of the other two.

Protocol of fourth Samoan conference.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, July 16, 1887.

Mr. West said that as there was some misapprehension about the phrase "alternate control" in the memorandum which he submitted at the first conference, he desired to present the following paper:

"There seems to be some misapprehension as to the meaning of the phrase which occurs in the memorandum which I submitted to the first conference and of the remarks thereupon in the last conference. The phrase 'alternate control for a limited time' does not imply that the representative of each power shall be elected the mandatary in rotation, but merely indicates that the mandatary scheme bears an alternate character; for should German preponderance cease at the end of the first five years the next power possessing it in succession would according to the German plan exercise the mandatary power. It is distinctly understood that under the German plan preponderating interests for the time-being should be taken into consideration in deciding the question as to which power should designate the representative under the approval of the other two powers."

cease at the end of the first five years the next power possessing it in succession would according to the German plan exercise the mandatary power. It is distinctly understood that under the German plan proponderating interests for the time-being should be taken into consideration in deciding the question as to two powers."

Mr. von Alvensleben then read the following paper:

"Concerning the nomination of the adviser to the king as the mandatary of the three treaty powers to be appointed with the concurrence of the two other powers by the power whose interests are preponderating there for the time-being, Mr. Bayard repeated at the last meeting an intimation he had already made and the state of the concurrence of the two other powers by the power whose interests are preponderating there for the time-being, Mr. Bayard repeated at the last meeting an intimation he had already made and the state of the concurrence of the two other powers by the power whose interests are preponderating there for the time-being, Mr. Bayard intended merely to exemplify his objection to the mandatary scheme in general, and that if, for instance, under the proposed conditions and terms the United States were called upon to make the nomination, Mr. Bayard would raise the same objections, for the reason that these islands could not be prevented from becomingment would readily concur in such appointment, not entertaining any apprehension of the kind alluded to by Mr. Bayard, a similar result being beyond any donbt excluded if the guaranties contained in the German proposition be secured. I desire at the same time to express my regrets that the sudden end put to our last meeting prevented my making these remarks already then."

Mr. Bayard said the papers read by Sir Lionel West and also by Mr. von Alvenieben in some degree anticipated the very matters the wheld to bring benchmark the summary of the chief executive officer of the proposed new government, who should hold that power for a term of years; and then came the question, at the end misuse power.

Mr. von Alvensleben then read, in relation to Mr. Bayard's proposition No. 5, the following paper:

"By adopting Mr. Bayard's plan to put the executive power into the hands of five, the powers would follow precisely the same course of policy which has lead, as is generally acknowledged, to the most unsatisfactory results in Samoa. A co-operative assistance of the three powers in the sense of Mr. Bayard's suggestion has hitherto taken place only in the municipal board at Apia, but it has been proved that such a threefold co-operation is not only ineffectual but inurious to the utmost degree to all foreign interests as well as to those of the natives. After such an experience, fully confirmed by the reports of the special commissioners, especially those of Mr. Travers and Mr. Bates, who, in plain terms, assert that the three-party control would be inappropriate means to arrive at the solution of the task of this conference, it ought, under all circumstances, to be avoided to take a similar scheme into consideration with a view of assisting the Samoans in their management of government affairs. According to Mr. Bayard's plan, the tripartition existing, as stated, at present only in the municipality of Apia shall be extended to the executive power of the new government, with the only difference that not the three consuls, but the same number of foreigners, one of them to be nominated by the three theaty powers, shall be invested with the respective functions of the three highest officials. Without dwelling upon the obviously very considerable difficulties of finding among so small a foreign population persons fit to hold so important offices, I think it necessary to point out another serious objection to which Mr. Bayard's plan gives rise. The latter, as I understand it, can aim only at such persons who have not been involved or compromised in any way in the events of the last years. On the other hand, it may well be assumed that all prominent foreigners, and the very persons who would alone have the qualifications for such officers, have been obliged, in the converse to the convents, to support one party or the from Mr. Thurston's report giving a characteristic of the Samoan people. Under 109, it is said: "The great object of a Samoan party when seeking to gain an ascendency is to intrigue for foreign support, and hence much of the trouble that has arisen."

"The proposition of the Imperial Government, according to which the power having for the time being the preponderating interest in Samoa shall have the right of nominating the adviser, is now before the conference. The co-operation provided for by the two other powers with regard to the nomination, the limitation of the term of office to five years, the proposed express declaration to secure to the three treaty powers and their subjects in Samoa entire equality of treatment with regard to commerce, navigation, and jurisdiction, and other maters are sufficient guaranties to remove from the very beginning the danger that by transferring that mandate to one powers political monopoly would be established in favor of the latter. A further very efficient guaranty of the same kind is to be found in Article IX of the draught convention, which I had the honor to lay before you, suggesting that an express and repeated declaration should be made of the independence and neutrality of the Samoan Islands. I therefore conclude that it is not the German but the American plan which is inconsistent with the principles of this conference."

Mr. Bayard said he would like to say another word about the question of having both a land commission and a land court. The Samoans were the natural owners of the soil, but suddenly, in the course of the soil, but and the principles of the foreign lands who actually demanded more than the soil itself contained. For that reason he thought is the right of the Samoans as a people to have citation made by the land court to all the foreign holders of land on the islands in order that their titles might be brought before that court nal who could call before them everybody holding land in Samoa, and compet them to show their titles.

Sir Lionel West said the idea of the commission was simply to facilitate this, and he thought it would.

Mr. Bayard said it was a question of judgment, and he had submitted his reasons for thinking differently. It would be difficult to get men in Samoa for the two bodies.

Mr. von Alvensleben said he thought these gentlemen ought to be sent out from abroad, because every foreigner and every Samoan is engaged and interested in the land question; that Mr. Bayard had said that if there was a single court, composed of three foreigners and two natives, foreign interests would be protected, but this would not follow, because the foreigners had never kept to-

Protocol of fifth Samoan conference. [Confidential.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, July 21, 1887.

Mr. Bayard said that in the protocol of the second conference a number of agreed points were stated, one of which was that there should be a free and unawed native election of a king, without the interference of foreigners. The proposition submitted by him at the first conference was for the election of a king and vice-king. His object was to recognize the customs and wishes of the Samoans, and to provide for a succession in case of the death of a king, so that there would be no interregnum. He was still disposed to include in the plan of government the election of a vice-king; and he desired to submit whether it would not be well, if the king and vice-king should be elected for a term of years, to provide that the term should last until a successor was chosen, in order to prevent an interregnum.

Sir Lionel West inquired whether he meant that the king should be elected for a term of years?

Mr. Bayard said he was disposed to follow the customs of the country.

Mr. von Alvensleben said he also thought the customs of the country should be followed wherever it could be done.

The election of a vice-king was then placed among the agreed points.

Mr. Bayard then referred to the question of a Faipule, and inquired whether there was objection to that.

Sir Lionel West asked whether he would make it a legislative body.

Mr. Bayard said it should retain whatever its function was before.

Mr. von Alvensleben said they did not meet regularly, although no matter of importance was transacted without their being consulted about it.

Sir Lionel West said he supposed it might be called a legislative assembly.

Mr. Bayard said that he had found the faipule in the commissioners' report of existing customs as a legislative assembly, and for that reason he had retained it as such in his plan. The question was whether it would tend to give satisfaction to the people to have this popular assembly to which they could send their representatives.

Mr. von Alvensleben inquired whether it would not be best to agree that the Faipule should exist, but not to define its powers yet? This would be left to a further understanding. The Taimua would be taken into the king's council.

Mr. Bayard said that it might be agreed that the election should cover a king, a vice-king, and a Faipule, without any further definition as yet of the Faipule powe power.

Mr. von Alvensleben said that the Faipule should be elected by districts on a certain ratio of population—say, as proposed, one representative for every 2,000 of population, and not over the whole country, because the Samoans would not understand it.

Mr. Bayard said he understood that there would be required the aggregate vote of the whole group for the king and vice-king, but that each district would elect its own representatives to the Faipule.

Sir Lionel West said by that they recognized the broad principle of an elective assembly.

Mr. Bayard: and he understood that there would be required the aggregate vote of the whole group for the king and vice-king, but that each district would elect its own representatives to the Faipule.

Sir Lionel West said by that they recognized the broad principle of an elective assembly.

Mr. Bayard: Yes.

Mr. Bayard: Yes.

Mr. Bayard: would be found that he had proposed a single land commission or court of original and final jurisdiction, who should inquire into the nature and extent of each and every land claim by foreigners. It was proposed that this commission should consist of five members, appointed by the king, three to be appointed on the nomination of the powers and the remaining two to be selected by the king in order to recognize Samoan customs in relation to land.

In the paper submitted by the British minister at the first conference it was proposed that there should be an "international land court," and that in order to facilitate its workings "the existing land claims of foreigners should be disposed of by a commission," previously to the establishment of the international land court. (Protocol, first conference, page 7.) Before coming to the German proposition he desired to ask whether the plan of Great Britain contemplated anything more than a commission in aid of the court and whether that was the extent of the machinery proposed by the British Government to test the land question.

Mr. Bayard said that in the pape submitted by the German minister at the first conference, it was said that "the irregularities which are known to have each of the machinery proposed by the British Government to take the land question.

Mr. Bayard said that in the pape sub mitted by the German minister extended the parties." (Protocol, first conference, page 6.) In the second conference to which they have led between for a special international court for the decision of claims and disputes relating to real explained that the international body would consition to the parties." (Protocol, first conference, page 6.)

Alr. Bayard: Then the statement I made has will be satisfiactory to your Government?

Sir Lionel West: I think so, thoroughly.

Mr. Bayard said he hoped it would be so to the Government of Germany, although he found in the more elaborate plan of the German Government a pursuit of the idea of commissions that was not very definite. In this plan, submitted at the second conference, it was declared to be "consonant to the general principles of justice that disputes relating to real estate should be decided by the laws and courts of the country in which the object of the dispute is situated;" that owing, however, to the condition of Samoa, it is necessary that the disputes there should be "settled in a uniform procedure and according to uniform principles to be previously laid down by the treaty powers with the agreement of the Samoan Government, by an authority to be specially instituted, and in the last instance by a land court to be specially created;" that the first body or commission should consist of three members, each of the powers naming one, to be appointed by the Samoan Government on the proposal of the powers; that before this commission all claims which are raised by foreigners with regard to land in the Samoan Islands must be filed within a certain period, the claims must be accompanied by the titles and other documents or duly authenticated copies relating thereto (second protocol, pages 12.13); that the "commission shall be invested with the right of etting before them, through the local authorities, for examination, and of having as witnesses the sellers and any other persons whom they think fit to supply information;" that in case, however, of sales by different natives of the same piece of land claimed by all, the supply into the decision of the interior of the same of the same piece of land claimed by all, the supply of the control of the commission there is to be an appeal to the land court, which is to be "composed of a judge nominated by the Samoan Government and of the constitution of the commission there is to be an appeal to the land court, which is to be "composed of a judge nominated by the Samoan Government and of the constitution of the commission there is to be an appeal to the land court, which is to be "composed of a judge nominated by the Samoan Government and of the constitution of the commission. The "international court," suggested by the German minister at the first conference. His proposition was that there should be an "international land court," preceded by a commission. The "international court" suggested by the German minister at the first conference is not international in the sense in which it is supposed that term was intended to be understood when used by the British minister at the first conference is not international in the sense in which it is supposed that term was intended to be understood when used by the British minister for a commission and an international land court; and the third was been approached to be understood when used by the British minister for a commission and an international in the sense in which it is supposed that term the suppose of the promiser of the promiser of the promiser of t

Mr. Bayard said that was creating, therefore, a special court in each case.

Mr. von Alvensleben said, certainly; judges would change according to the nationality of the parties. There will always be a Samoan judge appointed by the Samoan Government, and he would be assisted by the representatives of the parties. If there were two parties of different nationalities engaged in a dispute, they would both be represented. If a German and American, there would be the consuls of the two countries, and they would assist the judge.

Mr. Bayard said: Suppose a German and an Englishman take an appeal from the decision of the land commission, before what tribunal would they go? Before a judge named by the Samoan Government; a man named by the Englishman and another named by the German. The litigants would take care to select their own friends, and then the judge appointed by the Samoan Government would make the final decision. Was it supposed that by creating a special tribunal in each case, uniformity in decision would be attained? The idea had been to found something as near civilization as possible, and in judicial decisions it was essential that there should be stability and a system; that the laws should be laid down by the court, and that it should adhere to them. And unless there was some uniformity of decision there would be hopeless injustice. If, in each case, after the land commission, composed of representatives of the three powers, had acted, there was an appeal in the manner suggested by the German minister, each tribunal would have a law for itself.

Another thing he would notice was the proposition to introduce the consul of the litigant into the tribunal, although the interference of the consuls in other matters was deemed unadvisable, on account of their partisanship. He desired to inquire also whether the object of the conference would not be better reached by infusing into the court of last resort a native element which would, as a matter of numbers, be under the control of the representatives of the t representation and uniformity of decision, and the court would not ask what was the nationality of the claimant, but what was the basis of his claim? Besides, in all courts of last resort, there ought to be uneven numbers to prevent a deadlock. According to the German minister's plan, if there were three claimants the court would consist of four members.

Mr. von Alvensleben inquired who ought to preside in the tribunal proposed by Mr. Bayard?

Mr. Bayard said he would let the five men select him. This, however, was very important. He might be a German. He would have no more power than the rest. The object of having a presiding judge was to direct the business of the court, and the majority of the court would make the decision.

Mr. von Alvensleben said experience had taught that the foreigners never kept together.

the court, and the majority of the court would make the decision.

Mr. von Alvensleben said experience had taught that the foreigners never kept together.

Mr. Bayard said that the foreign officials in Samoa heretofore had not been there as judges under the Samoan Government, but as the official representatives of foreign powers.

Mr. von Alvensleben said that if the five judges were taken from Samoa there would be divisions from the beginning; because everybody there was interested in some way or another.

Mr. Bayard said that if a judge was interested he could not sit. He supposed, however, that men could be found who did not own land.

Mr. von Alvensleben said he thought not. As to the Samoans, they were all related to each other, and the characteristic given of them by Mr. Thurston is that they are rather untruthful; so that they would be quite ready if they could get the favor of any nationality in a land dispute to favor that nationality for that purpose. He was opposed to such a composition of the court as that.

Mr. Bayard asked whether he would exclude the Samoans from all voice in the decision of the titles of land?

Mr. von Alvensleben said he though the proportion of two Samoans and three foreigners was not according to the plan of his government. Besides, the foreigners in Samoa were certainly not less interested in the land question than the Samoans; so that if one can not find disinterested foreigners there, one will have to take them from abroad.

Mr. Bayard said: Suppose you eliminate, for the purpose of discussion, the Samoan element entirely, and you create three judges as a court of final resort; you first let the commission organize and take what testimony they please, and make what finding they please. If the finding is satisfactory to the parties concerned it stands; if an appeal can be taken by either it comes before the court composed of the nominees of the three governments. Would that relieve the question?

Mr. von Alvensleben said: No; that would come almost to the same thing.

Mr. Bayard said: Suppose you eliminate, for the purpose of discussion, the Samoan element entirely, and you create three judges as a court of final resort; you first let the commission organize and take what testimony they please, and the control of the court of th

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, July 26, 1887.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, July 26, 1887.

Mr. von Alvensleben read the following paper:

"I fail to perceive how Mr. Bayard could draw the inference he did at our last meeting from the statement which closed the memorandum I read at the second conference. This sentence was merely intended to illustrate the mandatary scheme as proposed by the Imperial Government, and can not fairly be taken alone, as it then may lead to misapprehensions such as I find Mr. Bayard to be under. The meaning of that sentence is that Germany having the largest interest in Samoa she claims to be intrusted by the two other powers to exercise there, as well for her own interests as for those of Great Britain and the United States, the efficient control. If this would seem to create any appearance of inequality of rights, this would, however, be merely an appearance, as naturally the establishment of the whole government can only be made in this conference by the co-operation of the three treaty powers on a thoroughly equal footing, and therefore the mandatary scheme can only be carried out with their consent. I hardly need repeat, as the three special commissioners agreed in their reports, no native government would offer any guaranties of stability unless it is assisted and controlled by one common organ of the three powers. This is the argument on which the mandatary scheme has been based, and not on the mere fact of the preponderating interests of either one power."

Mr. Bayard said he would not at the moment make any comment on that statement, because upon hearing it read he did not recognize any substantial change in the result. The plan submitted by the German minister remained unaltered in its principle, and necessarily in its results, by the paper which he had just read.

Mr. Bayard then read, in accordance with the purpose expressed by him at the last conference, the following paper:

"In the 'Plan for the establishment of peace and civilization in Samoa under the cooperative support of the Governments of the United State and Great Britain,' submitted by me on behalf of the United States (Protocol first conference, page 2) I expressed my conception of the purpose of the present conference in the following language:

"'1. The independence and autonomy of the kingdom composed of these islands are to be preserved free from the control or preponderating influence of any foreign government, and it was in pursuance of this understanding that commissioners were recently sent by the three powers respectively to investigate and report upon the condition of the islands, and that the respective consuls of the three powers at the islands were changed.' Immediately after this declaration, and as a necessary inference therefrom, I stated the following proposition:

"'2. It is the desire of the United States, and equally of Germany and Great Britain, to assist the natives of Samoa to form and administer their government.'

Britain, to assist the natives of Samoa to form and administer their government."

"In respect to the principal object of the conference—the maintenance of the independence and autonomy of the Samoan Islands and the co-operative support of a native government—I am pleased to notice that my understanding is confirmed by the respective declarations of the German and British ministers. The memorandum read by the former at the first meeting of the conference began as follows:

"'The unsettled condition of affairs on the Samoan Islands having gradually become more and more injurious to the foreign residents and to the commercial interests of the three treaty powers, the latter had to take into serious consideration the means by which the lasting peace and order could be restored there. With this yiew and the understanding that the independence of Samoa under a native government was to be maintained, and that no monopolies should be created there by any foreign power, the three treaty powers have agreed to the proposition of the Government of the United States of America to hold a conference of plenipotentiaries. It was further agreed that, in order to get complete and reliable information on which the conference would have to base its deliberations, special commissioners should be sent and instructed by the respective governments to report on the condition of those islands."

"It is understood that the three powers have no desire to found colonies in "It is understood that the three powers have no desire to found colonies in piete and reliable information on which the conference would have to base its deliberations, special commissioners should be sent and instructed by the respective governments to report on the condition of those islands.

"The immorandum read by the British minister at the same meeting was as follows:

"It is understood that the three powers have no desire to found colonies in Samon or to obtain commercial monopolies.

"Their sole wish is to establish the right and equality of commerce and navigation for their respective subjects and citizens. Assuming, then, that the three powers have no desire to destroy of their commerce and navigation, a declaration for their respective subjects and citizens. Assuming, then, that the three powers have no desire to destroy of their commerce and navigation, a declaration to this effect might be made by them as a preliminary step. If was, however, deemed expedient to ascertain the exact state of affairs in the islands by sending special commissioners who should report thereupon."

"It may therefore be regarded as fully recognized and established that the object of the United States in proposing the present conference, and of all three opowers in sending commissioners to the Samoan Islands to report on the condition of affairs, was to maintain the autonomy and independence of the islands under a native government.

"It may therefore be regarded so the sondernee. I have listened with regret to plans and suggestions that appeared to me to depend upon the recognition of an inequality of interest of the three powers in the political, moral, and commercial welfare of the islands, and to look unequivocally to the virtual suppression of their native government. And in this relation I shall refer first to the plan suggested by the German minister, and approved by the British minister, or the appointment of an adviser to the king. In the memorandum read by the German minister at the first meeting of the conference the functions of the proposed foreign adviser are described supported by the British minister, I am unaoue precisery to according to the memorandum read by the latter at the first meeting of the conference I find the following:

""All three commissioners seem to recognize also the difficulty of tripartite control, such as more or less has been hitherto exercised; while at the same time they deprecate the establishment of the exclusive control of either one of the three powers. Assuming that the establishment of a native government, to be carried on by the king, who may be elected, assisted by a native council, is necessary to preserve the autonomy and independence of the islands, and which can only be established under foreign control, and assuming that tripartite control is impracticable, the solution of the difficulty would seem to be an alternate control for a limited period of either one of the three powers. In the event of coming to this agreement the question naturally arises as to which power should be chosen the mandatary of the other two in the first instance, and Her Majesty's Government consider that preponderating commercial interests should be taken into consideration in deciding it.

"'Since Mr. Thurston, Mr. Travers, and Mr. Bates all seem to concur that this preponderance is possessed by Germany to a greater or less extent. Her Majesty's Government are therefore prepared to consent to the mandatary power.

being exercised by the German representative for first term of five years, absolute equality of treatment in respect of commerce, navigation, and jurisdiction, and all other matters whatsoever to be secured to the three powers and to their subjects and citizens.

"Thus, while the British minister concurred in the proposition for a single adviser, he said that, in the event of an agreement on that point the question would arise as to which power should be chosen as the 'mandatary of the other two in the first instance;' that Her Majesty's Government considered that preponderating commercial interests should be 'taken into consideration in deciding it;' and that as Germany had the preponderating interests Her Majesty's Government were prepared to consent to the mandatary power 'being exercised by the German representative for the first term of five years."

"In a paper read by him at the third session of the conference the British minister said (Protocol, page 6) that the mandatary scheme did not involve' the recognition of any preponderating interests which, as the Secretary of State has justly remarked, ought not to be taken into account in dealing with the matters before the conference;' that Her Majesty's Government did not see that any 'exclusive control' was involved in the arrangement, as the mandatary power 'could only be exercised with the consent of the other two powers,' and it seemed, therefore, a matter of small importance which should be the first to exercise it.'

"When I observed that the British minister stoke of the convergence that "When I observed that the British minister stoke of the convergence that "When I observed that the British minister stoke of the convergence that "When I observed that the British minister stoke of the convergence that "When I observed that the British minister stoke of the convergence that "When I observed that the British minister stoke of the convergence that "When I observed that the British minister stoke of the convergence that "When I observed that the British

"This statement, I observe, while it adverts to a preponderance of interests, oces no further than to say that' preponderating interests for the time being should be taken into consideration in deciding the question as to which power easy; and, as the British minister stated, at our last merely and the proponderance of interests, exercised to the approach of the other powers of the head of the other powers of the power having the preponderating i the right to nominate the official whose duty it shall be to control the native government.'

"In my opinion, to give a single adviser 'sufficient rights and powers to take the measures required,' not only for the 'maintenance of peace and order,' but as well for the 'prosperous development of commerce and intercourse,' is to invest that foreign official with the absolute power (legislative as well as executive) of government; and to say further that his appointment (no nomination) 'should not be left to the Samoan Government, but be made by agreement between the treaty powers,' and that it shall be his 'duty' 'to control the native government,' only emphasizes the virtual destruction of the native independence and autonomy. The result would be the same whether the adviser exercised his powers with impartiality or whether he was influenced in his official conduct by the fact, of which his appointment would be the evidence, that the most extensive foreign interests with which he had to deal were those of his own countrymen?

"To these objections to the advisory plan as presented, which have been substantially stated by me heretofore, the only answer I have as yet seen is that the power which is to appoint the advisor gives, under the plan, every reasonable guaranty' for the fair exercise of the functions with which he is to be invested. This argument, as it seems to me, instead of meeting the objections, admits their validity. The United States did not enter upon the present proceeding with the idea that it was either to give to or receive from any foreign power any guaranty for the good government of the Samoan Islands, and, indeed, such a step would have been inconsistent with its general and well-understood policy. It had treated with the Samoan Government as an independent and responsible government, and to that government alone has looked for the performance of its conventional engagements and protection of American interests thereunder. So it has been with other governments represented in this conference. A guaranty, however, necessarily suggests the idea of actual and responsible control. And for one power to give, and the other powers to accept from it, a guaranty for the good government of the islands, far from being in the direction of the maintenance of the native autonomy and independence, which the powers have heretofore always recognized, would be a step backwards and in the direction of the effectual enfeeblement and ultimate obliteration of the native autonomy.

"When we consider the outline of the plan for the settlement of land titles submitted by the German minister, the sweeping and pervasive authority of the 'adviser' is disclosed with equal clearness. In the plan proposed by me for the support of the native government the land question occupied an essentially prominent place. The same may be said of the plans submitted by the other members of the conference; for, as it was admitted that the land claims of foreigners far exceeded the area of the islands, the necessity of providing for the natives some means of escape from demands so clearly unwarranted was recognized on all hands. These plans are now before the conference. That submitted by me was for a single judicial body, of original and final jurisdiction, to consist of five members who should be appointed by the king, three on the several nomination of the three treaty powers, and two of his own selection. The British minister proposed a land commission, to be succeeded by an 'Internationational Land court.' The German minister, in his plan, has proposed a land commission of three foreigners, with power to proposed a inaid commission of three foreigners, with power to create succommissions of natives, whose decisions, however, are not to be conclusive on the questions submitted to them, and this foreign commission to be followed by a land court.

"This land court is to be composed of a judge appointed by the 'Samoan Government,' and the consul or consuls, or a prominent countryman or countrymen, of the litigant or litigants. I adverted at our last meeting to the fact that I had discovered no provision in this plan for an appeal by a native from the commission to the land court, and also to the uncertain and shifting constitution of this tribunal, which would preclude uniformity and certainty of decision, and might, in certain cases, lead to a deadlock.

"But the point to which I desire now to advert is that the 'Samoan Government,' which is thus to appoint the 'judge' of this land court of last resort, is the foreign adviser, who, as the German minister stated, would make the appointment, the king simply confirming it. As the appeals to the land court would, perhaps, generally rest between two contestants or claimants, this would give the adviser the appointment of the person to cast the deciding vote. There is, moreover, nothing in the plan to prevent the adviser from acting as the judge himself (as, indeed, I understood the German minister to intimate might be done), thus combining the functions of supreme executive and legislative control with those of supreme land judge. And it can hardly be supposed that the addition of judicial to executive and legislative functions would detract from his authority.

"The plan submitted by me provided, in my judgment, for the full recognition of native rights, as well as for the complete protection of foreign interests. The suggestion heretofore made that, by reason of not voting together, the foreign judges would not secure foreign claimants against the interested views and inclinations of the two native judges, is not, to my mind, by any means conclusive against the plan.

for the promotion of justice and to the, great and academic all concerned.

"It will thus be seen that the further this conference has progressed, and the views and objects of the plan presented by the German minister are developed by him, the further we find ourselves departing from any substantial recognition of a native autonomy for Samoa and the consequent independence of that island group.

"The pian as proposed and explained by Mr.von Alvensleben is substantially a foreign autocratic government, based on mercantile interests, and all experience has shown what must necessarily result from such an attempt; and that under it the defeat of the objects we have all distinctly proposed is certain.

"I do not see why we should not recognize at the outset and encourage in Samoa a spirit of self-governing freedom and self-respect. Germany and the United States have heretofore given strong indications of their desire for this by their prompt disavowals of the arbitrary and unauthorized acts of their respective consuls (Steubel and Greenbaum). And it is noticeable that the conduct of foreigners has been the cause of more disorder and discontent in Samoa than any spontaneous action of the natives, who, whenever they have acted improperly or immorally, would appear to have done so upon the instigation of some foreign agent.

any spontaneous action of the natives, who, whenever they have acted improperly or immorally, would appear to have done so upon the instigation of some foreign agent.

"We can not, therefore, condemn native self-government in advance, for it has not been tried, and a plan containing such elements is entitled to favorable consideration and to be fairly tested.

"Would it not, therefore, be well for us to adjourn this conference until the autumn, and thus give time to the ministers of Germany and Great Britain to submit these protocols to their respective Governments in order that instructions may be received by them of a more definite character, by aid of which we may be enabled to come to an agreement?"

In reference to the paper read by the German minister, Mr. Bayard desires to add that he considered his original proposition for an executive council of five—three foreigners and two natives—to be in close pursuance of the recommendations of the American and British commissioners, and that he had not found in the report of either of those gentlemen any concurrence in the opinion that the native government should be "assisted and controlled by one common organ of the three powers."

Sir Lionel West: You propose then to postpone the conference for the reasons you have stated?

Mr. Bayard: Yes,

Sir L. West: Under the circumstances I do not see that there is any other ourse to be taken. You propose that the conference is to adjourn, and not be course to be taken. You propose that the conference is to adjourn the broken up.

Mr. Bayard said his proposition was to adjourn until the autumn, for the reasons he had stated. He thought it essential that the government of the islands should rest upon sound principles, and he had endeavored to show what he thought would be the logical results of the measures laid down by the German minister, and as they had been discussed in the conference.

Sir L. West: We will simply inform our Governments that you propose adjournment for reasons stated in writing.

Mr. von Alvensleben: Principally because of the mandatary scheme, which Mr. Bayard did not think acceptable.

Mr. Bayard: And for which I have submitted reasons. I consider that it would lead to results destructive to the express purpose and objects of this conference.

would lead to results destructive to the express purpose and objects of this conference.

The following memorandum in reference to certain observations in Mr. Bayard's paper is added at the request of the German minister:

"Mr. Bayard made in his memorandum a remark which would, if correct, reflect unfavorably upon the conduct of the former German representative in Samoa. As the proposition of the adjournment of the conference put an unexpected end to our present deliberations I was prevented from saying, in reply to that intimation, what I am much interested to see added to the protocol; this is, that I am thoroughly unaware of the facts on which Mr. Bayard may base his criticisms of Dr. Stuebel's conduct.

"If Mr. Bayard thinks, as it seems, that Dr. Stuebel's departure from Apia soon after the arrival of the German special commissioner there gave expression to a supposed disapproval by the Imperial Government, I desire to state that it was merely to prove the readiness of my Government for complying with Mr. Bayard's proposition to change the consular representatives of the three treaty powers, that a leave of absence was granted to Dr. Stuebel, and that there was no other reason whatever for his departure from Apia."

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCook, its Secretary, announced the passage of the bill (H. R. 11658) making appropriations for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other purposes, with amendments; in which concurrence was requested.

It also announced the passage without amendment of bills of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. 11693) to amend section 565 of the Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia; and

A bill (H. R. 1368) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes

It also announced non-concurrence in the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3132) to provide for trial by jury in the police court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, requested a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. FAULKNER, Mr. SPOONER, and Mr. FARWELL.

It also announced the passage of the bill (S. 3932) to provide for the expenses, compensation, and mileage of a special messenger sent by the Secretary of State to the State of Florida for the certificate of the electoral vote of that State of A. D. 1888 for President and Vice-President of the United States, in pursuance of the provisions of section 141 of the Revised Statutes as amended by the act approved October 19, 1888; in which concurrence was asked.

It also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House to bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. 3858) in relation to dead and fallen timber on Indian lands; and

A bill (S. 3800) directing a survey of a road from the Aqueduct

Bridge to Mount Vernon, and making an appropriation therefor.

It also announced that the Secretary of the Senate had been directed to furnish the House of Representatives, in compliance with its request, a duplicate copy of the concurrent resolution directing the manner of the enrollment of the bill (S. 2305) to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the Executive Departments.

RELIEF OF CERTAIN VOLUNTEER AND REGULAR SOLDIERS, ETC.

Mr. STEELE. I ask by unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 6106) for the relief of certain volunteer and regular soldiers of the late war and the war with Mexico, returned from the Senate with amendments.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the amendments be reported. Mr. STEELE. I move that the amendments be non-concurred in and the conference asked on the part of the Senate be granted.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. DUNN. I object.

The SPEAKER. The bill, with the amendments of the Senate, remains upon the Speaker's table.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Will not the gentleman from Arkansas allow the gentleman from New York to make a brief statement in regard to this go over, especially as the gentleman from Missouri wants to take up the appropriation bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. Why not allow it to go to conference? Mr. DUNN. I have no objection to that, but I think it had better

N. Why not allow it to go to conference?

I think it had better be considered by the House.

Mr. DUNN. The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ENLOE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 1860) to amend section 603 of the Revised Statutes; and A bill (H. R. 331) for the relief of David Meriwether.

MAJ. GEN. HENRY J. HUNT.

Mr. SPINOLA. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Missouri yields to me to ask a favor of the House, which I will state in a moment's I ask unanimous consent to discharge the committee from the consideration of the bill for the retirement of Maj. Gen. Henry J. Hunt, and put it now upon its passage. I ask it for the reason that he is at the point of death, and in all probability before the bill can become a law he will have been called to his final account. I therefore ask to take the bill up and put it upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, subject to objection.

Mr McMILLIN. Let the report be read also.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KILGORE. I understand that this officer is on the retired-list now with the rank of colonel. Is that so?

Mr. WHEELER. That is true.
Mr. KILGORE. Then I object.
Mr. WHEELER. It is also true that in the Forty-eighth Congress the House passed this bill by a three-fourth vote, and the Senate passed the bill by a unanimous vote.

Mr. KILGORE. Regular order.

AGRICULTURAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HATCH. I renew the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the agricultural appropriation

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills, and the Clerk will report the title of the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12485) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1896, and for other purposes.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill, and also that general debate upon it may be considered as closed, and that the bill be now read by sections for debate and amendment under the five-minute rule.

Mr. MORGAN. Before that is done I desire to reserve all points of order upon the bill.

Mr. HATCH. Points of order have been already reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the first reading of the bill will be dispensed with, and the gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that general debate be considered as closed. Is there ob-

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Seed division: For the purchase, propagation, and distribution, as required by law, of seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, and expenses of labor, transportation, paper, twine, gum, printing, postal-cards, and all necessary material and repairs for putting up and distributing the same, and to be distributed in localities adapted to their culture, $100,000.

Mr. ENLOE. I offer an amendment to that paragraph.
Mr. HATCH. What is it?
Mr. ENLOE. I move tostrike out all afterline 21, on page 10, down to the end of line 3, on page 11, the paragraph which has just been read.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The whole of this paragraph has not yet been read.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, yes; this is one independent paragraph.

Mr. ENLOE. If the gentleman desires to have the entire paragraph read I have no objection. But I offer this amendment, Mr. Chairman, with the object in view of trying to retire the United States Government from the wholesale seed business, and to try to retire the members of Congress from the retail seed business. I offered a similar amendment to the same paragraph of a similar bill in the first session of the Fiftieth Congress, proposing to cut this abuse down then one-half.

This amendment now proposes to cut it up by the roots, and if I could succeed in getting the amendment adopted I should propose also to strike out that part of the bill which provides an appropriation of $8,400 for the pay of the superintendent and clerks in the seed division. addition to that, I should also propose to go further and strike out the sum of $4,200 appropriated for printing seed-pockets, labels, postal-cards, circulars, etc. So that if the proposition shall be adopted the amount in the aggregate that would be saved would reach the sum of

I know that this is a proposition that will not meet with the favor of many gentlemen on this floor, because it proposes to deprive them of the privilege of distributing seeds to their constituents. I understand that the object of the Government in establishing this bureau, or the object of Congress in making the first appropriation for the purchase of seeds, rather, was a very proper one. It contemplated the buying of new and valuable varieties of seeds and letting the Government take reaches to that paragraph also.

the risk and expense of making the experiments and tests to see whether they were adapted to our soil and climate, and thus save the farmers of the country that risk, in which way the appropriations for this purpose were designed to promote agriculture.

But, sir, we have departed very far from the original object in making the first appropriation. That appropriation was made in 1839, and the amount provided for the purchase of seeds and plants was the small sum of $1,000. Congress in 1851 increased the appropriation to $5,000 per annum. In 1862 the Bureau of Agriculture was established and the sum of $62,000 was appropriated for this purpose. It has thus continued steadily to grow in popularity with the members of Congress until to-day we are appropriating $100,000 annually for the purchase of seeds and for distributing them amongst our constituents. Congress when it created the Bureau of Agriculture, declared the general designs and duties of the bureau to be-

To acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture in the most comprehensive sense of that word and to procure and propagate and distribute among the people new and valuable seeds and plants.

So it will be seen that the original idea was that the bureau should propagate and distribute new and valuable seeds and plants, but it was not within the contemplation of Congress at that time to go to the seedgrowers and buy the same seeds that are sold everywhere by merchants and distribute them among the farmers.

While this system is perhaps a boon to some people in this country, and has the approval and support of a great many men who have become attached to it, especially members of Congress who send these seeds to their constituents for campaign purposes, yet it does seem to me that it has grown into such an abuse, and a moss-covered abuse at that, that we can not longer permit it to pass the House in an appropriation bill without at least an effort to abolish it. The time has come when the object which was originally sought in purchasing seeds for distribution no longer furnishes a reason for such legislation.

It was an evil principle in the beginning, however much we may approve the purpose in view. Insignificant as the sum expended may appear, and small as the benefit received by the individual citizen who receives the seed is, still it is part and parcel of the legislation of a political school in this country which is steadily seeking to destroy self-reliance and to teach people to look to the Federal Treasury for

I can remember the good old days when the good women in the country homes carefully saved their own garden seeds every year and always had not only enough for their own use but some to give away to their neighbors. It is not generally so any more. Some look to the Government for a supply, and some look to the seed stores. A few of the more provident still pursue the wise plan of caring for small things and saving garden seeds at home.

Of the thousands of papers of seeds sent out by members with the request from the Bureau of Agriculture for reports of results, how many are ever heard from? Instead of sending back reports to the Commissioner of Agriculture of the failure or success of the experiments with the seeds, as the law intends, the majority think nothing about it and care less.

Some persons who receive the seeds do not even save seed from them when they are satisfactory, and often the very next season the member who sent them will receive postal-cards and letters asking for the same seeds, and frequently the order of one constituent is of such proportions that even the Bureau of Agriculture can not supply all the varieties embraced in the order.

Mr. HATCH. I understand the gentleman from Tennessee desires to speak not only to this paragraph, but also to that which follows it. I am perfectly willing to yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. ENLOE. As I understood the chairman of the committee, I was to be allowed, if I did not make any objection to the request to dispense with general debate, some twenty-five minutes.

Mr. HATCH. As I understood, the gentleman was going to make a proposition on the point of order that was to be raised on the next paragraph.

Mr. ENLOE. I do not propose to discuss the point of order. I propose to discuss the question on its merits. As to the point of order, I do not care.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be allowed to proceed fifteen minutes.

Mr. BREWER. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the same privilege will be extended to others.

Mr. HATCH. If there is any disposition to speak against it, that would be all right; but I do not think when the gentleman gets through it will be found necessary to occupy more than five minutes. [Laughter.] If the gentleman from Michigan wants time, I will see that he is allowed the privilege of speaking.

Mr. BREWER. I do not think it will be necessary to speak at all, but still I desire to have the right to do so.

Mr. BUCHANAN. As I understand the proceedings on this paragraph, it is not to prevent the point of order being made on the next.

Mr. HATCH. The point of order is against the next paragraph, which has not been read.

Mr. BUCHANAN. But the amendment the gentleman proposes

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman does not desire to repeat his speech. Mr. FARQUHAR. That paragraph has not been read. Mr. HATCH. The gentleman has an amendment to make, not as to the administration of the seed division, nor as to how it shall be conducted, but he proposes to strike it out.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri that the gentleman from Tennessee may be allowep to proceed for fifteen minutes? The Chair hears none.

I am very much obliged to the gentlemen who feel so much personal concern about their supply of garden seed, for the courtesy they have extended me in allowing me to proceed in accordance with what I conceived to be my right under the agreement.

When I was interrupted I was proceeding to discuss the present method of distributing the seeds through members of Congress. In 1880 the politician laid his relentless grasp upon the seed division, and took for his own perquisite, to be distributed as he might elect, twothirds of all the seeds purchased by the Commissioner of Agriculture.

The number of papers received this year by each member is seven thousand, and such great agricultural centers as New York and Chicago, where they raise no other agricultural product but "bulls" and "bears" to toss the prices up and to ride the prices down, receive the same quantity that goes to the great agricultural empire in the "wild and woolly West" represented by my friend from Texas [Mr. LANHAM].

Now, let us work out the scheme for distribution. Seven thousand

Now, let us work out the scheme for distribution. Seven thousand papers of seeds to be distributed among 150,000 inhabitants would give each inhabitant of a Congressional district one paper of seeds about every twenty-one years if equitably distributed, and if you were to count the seeds perhaps each inhabitant would receive about one seed every year, and every one knows that a farmer can not do much good with

Mr. MORGAN. Do you think a farmer can be seduced into giving his vote by a single seed?

Mr. ENLOE. No, sir; I am not talking about seduction. But, Mr. Chairman, if you are going to continue this business and the Government is going to run a wholesale seed house, I am in favor of putting it right down on a business basis and making the appropriation large enough so that everybody who pays taxes shall get seeds. postmaster make the distribution. Let every man make his requisition upon the postmaster for the quantity of seed he wants, and let the postmaster draw upon the Department and thus give everybody an equal chance.

As it is, the distribution is unequal, unjust, and unfair, and I am opposed to taking money out of the pockets of one set of people to buy seed and giving all the seed to another portion of the people—because a great many of them never see a seed from the Department, because no man can distribute them equally. I know, furthermore, that there is great difficulty growing out of the transmission of these seeds through the mails. A man sees that his neighbor is receiving seed, and he says that he wants some, too, and he sits down and writes to his kepresentative, and the consequence is that the mail of members of Congress is that he wants some, too, and he sats down and writes to his representative, and the consequence is that the mail of members of Congress is burdened with applications for seed, and the members are said to be so overworked that there is a proposition now pending to give them clerks in order to relieve them of the burden of work that is cast upon them by this seed business and other duties outside their legislative business

I am opposed to the seed distribution, and against the proposition to give clerks to members, but if this system is sustained it will not be long before we will be called upon to pay from two to three hundred thousand dollars annually for clerks for the members of the House. I entertain the opinion if one man is to have his garden seeds furnished by the United States Government that every other tax-payer is equally entitled to them. But if you are going to have tests made, and reports made, and are going to disseminate information among the farmers according to the original purpose in creating the Bureau of Agriculture, then this appropriation is much larger than is necessary for Another view of the matter is this, and it is the business view: We appropriate $100,000 for seed annually, but the actual amount that is invested in seed, common seed at that, is only $49,137.97. The expense of handling them is $50,862.03. The expense of transmitting them through the mails, 205 tons of matter, as estimated by the Commissioner, is $32,800 more, for I am informed by the Third Assistant Postmaster-General that it costs about 8 cents a pound to handle this class of matter in the mails.

Sir, when you come to sum it all up—how much you spend for seed, how much you pay for clerks and officials to handle them, how much you pay for the transmission of the seed—you find that in order to send out $49,000 worth of seeds you expend $96,000 for salaries and expenses of handling generally. Therefore I say it is not a good business

Mr. SOWDEN. Abolish the Department.

Mr. ENLOE. Yes, I would like to abolish all of the Department that is conducted on such principles of humbuggery as this is; and this item is not all there is in the bill.

Let me call attention to another fact. We made an appropriation of $595,000 last session to establish experiment stations all over the country. There is a provision in this bill appropriating $600,000 more for the same purpose, and this sum, or a greater one, will be the annual

Section 2 of the act creating these stations says:

Section 2 of the act creating these stations says:

That it shall be the object and duty of said experiment stations to conduct original researches or verify experiments on the physiology of plants and animals, the diseases to which they are severally subject, with the remedies for the same; the chemical composition of useful plants at their different stages of growth; the comparative advantages of rotative cropping as pursued under a varying series of crops; the capacity of new plants or trees for acclimation; the analysis of soils and water; the chemical composition of manures, natural or artificial, with experiments designed to test their comparative effects on crops of different kinds; the adaptation and value of grasses and forage plants; the composition and digestibility of the different kinds of food for domestic animals; the scientific and economic questions involved in the production of butter and cheese, and such other researches or experiments bearing directly on the agricultural industry of the United States as may in such case be deemed advisable, having due regard to the varying conditions and needs of the respective States or Territories.

So it will be seen that we are against more at these shelf million of 3.1.

So it will be seen that we are paying more than a half million of dollars for stations in every State and Territory of the Union to make lists and furnish information beneficial to agriculture. I am in favor of an appropriation to disseminate all kinds of useful knowledge on this subappropriation to disseminate an kinds of useful knowledge on this subject. I would have the reports of these experiment stations and the agricultural reports printed in much larger numbers and distributed broadcast all over the country, so that all the people might have an opportunity to profit by them; and I would have them published in plain English, that people generally can understand. But, sir, I am opposed to the waste of public money in this little electioneering scheme, which looks to me more like a piece of contemptible demagogy than wise statesmanning. wise statesmanship.

Mr. DUNHAM. Why not introduce a bill to cut down the salaries of members of Congress and save the people some money?

Mr. ENLOE. If I were to introduce such a bill the gentleman would not let it pass through this House if he could prevent it by filibustering. [Laughter.] Mr. DUNHAM.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is that the reason you do not introduce it? I give you notice now that if you introduce such a bill I will vote for it.

Laughter.]
Mr. ENLOE. Are you a member of the next Congress?
Mr. DUNHAM. No, sir.
Mr. ENLOE. Then your self-sacrifice is easily understood. [Laugh-

Mr. WHEELER. I am, and I will vote for it and speak for it.
Mr. ENLOE. There are a number of gentlemen upon this floor who have a decided advantage over me as members in many respects.

Many gentlemen can hire clerks to distribute seeds and conduct their correspondence. They have the money; I have not. They can buy seeds and distribute them. They have the money; I have not. But I seeds and distribute them. They have the money; I have not. But I can afford to serve the people for as little money as any gentleman on this floor, and if there is anybody here who thinks that he gets more salary than he earns he can cover it back into the Treasury.

Mr. DUNHAM. I will agree to cover back half of mine if you will do the same with yours. [Laughter.]

Mr. ENLOE. Well, you go ahead and cover in yours, and I will see about mine later. [Laughter.] Now, Mr. Chairman, this bureau has become almost a Department of the Government. We have passed a bill through both Houses of Congress proposing to make the Commisa bill through both Houses of Congress proposing to make the Commissioner of Agriculture a Cabinet officer and to give him a seat in the Cabinet, and I think he ought to be charged with some more responsible duty than that of distributing seed. It hink this Department ought to be elevated so that the people might look to it for light and knowledge on the subject of agriculture, but not look to it as an agency for the distribution of garden seeds that can be bought cheaper at home, or, better still, raised at home.

At my request, the Commissioner of Agriculture submitted to me a statement of the number of experiment stations which have been established, and I find that every State in this Union has established an experiment station; and some of them two or three such stations. I experiment station; and some of them two of three stations. I find furthermore that nearly every State has organized a board of agriculture, culture, has appointed a secretary or commissioner of agriculture, through whom, if the people want to buy seed by wholesale for free distribution, they can do so by means of money appropriated from the treasury of the State.

Why should the Commissioner of Agriculture, charged with looking after the agricultural interests of the whole country, give his attention to the distribution of these seed? I know that gentlemen are disposed to ridicule the idea of anything that will interfere with what is treated as a personal perquisite. So far as that is concerned, this opposition has not disturbed me in the least. It is a well-known fact that an office is easily created and an abuse is easily established, but patriotism rarely and with great difficulty rises to the point of abolishing the one or reforming the other, except under the stinging lash of outraged public opinion.

Gentlemen who object to the view I take of this matter are at liberty to vote against my proposition. But I believe that the agitation of this question, if properly carried before the people, will elicit a voice on the part of the farmers of this country demanding that Congress shall abandon the distribution of seeds. If I favored a continuation of this system I would provide that instead of the distribution being made through members of Congress, an appropriation should be made to enable the commissioners of agriculture in the respective States to make the distribution; for the present system is only an indirect way of collecting taxes from the people and returning the money again to them in the shape of seeds, less about two-thirds paid out for salaries and expenses.

Mr. OATES. Is that the proposition of the gentleman from Ten-

Mr. ENLOE. No, sir; my proposition is to abolish the system. I do not regard that as a constitutional proposition.

Mr. OATES. I agree with the gentleman.
Mr. ENLOE. I think that any gentleman of the sound judgment and discretion of my friend from Alabama would agree with me.

A MEMBER. How about oats? [Laughter.]
Mr. ENLOE. Well, Oates will grow in almost any part of this

A MEMBER. The Agricultural Department does not distribute any.

Mr. ENLOE. The Agricultural Department does not distribute any of the Alabama quality.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have occupied about as much time on this Now, Mr. Charman, I have occupied about as much time on this question as I care to occupy. I only want to say that the farmers of this country, as I understand them, are not begging the Government for seed, but they are demanding that the hand of the tax-gatherer shall be taken out of their pockets, and that they shall be given an opportunity to keep some part of that which they earn by their toil. If you will do that for the farmer, his own industry, and the God above us, who sends the sunshine and the rain, and imparts fertility to the soil, will do the rest. soil, will do the rest.

Mr. Chairman, with these remarks I submit this amendment. If the House sees proper to vote it down, all right; I will still distribute all the seed allotted to me, but if I had the power to prevent it, there should never be another seed distributed by a member of Congress. As a matter of useful information I will append certain tables furnished to me by the Commissioner of Agriculture showing the number and location of experiment stations, and the States having State commissioners, State boards of agriculture, or other State officers charged with the care of the interests of agriculture.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] unquestionably misapprehends the law under which these seeds are distributed. If he has ever read the original act, he has certainly forgotten it. The law requires that the Commissioner of Agriculture in the expenditure of this appropriation shall propagate and, at the request of members of Congress, distribute rare and valuable seeds suited to the localities to which they are sent. Now, if the gentleman is a sent to be considered. tleman has any criticism to make upon the present Commissioner of Agriculture or any former Commissioner of Agriculture in reference to the execution of this law, why does he not make a criticism of that kind instead of directing his criticism against the law itself?

Mr. ENLOE. Will the gentleman let me answer him?

Mr. HATCH The gentleman said he had commissed all the time has

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman said he had occupied all the time he

Mr. ENLOE. But the gentleman has asked me a question, and I would like to answer it.

Mr. HATCH. I expect to occupy only five minutes, and I do not care to have my time taken up with interruptions.

Mr. ENLOE. I would like to answer the gentleman's question; it will take but a moment. I have no criticisms to make in reference to the present Commissioner of Agriculture or any other. I understand the Commissioner simply executes the wishes of members of Congress, who desire the kinds of seed the people call for.

Mr. HATCH. Well, that is the severest criticism that the gentleman could pass upon either the Commissioner of Agriculture or members of this House. It is the duty of the Commissioner of Agriculture to execute that law so as to distribute throughout the United States such rare and valuable seeds as have been found of benefit to the agriculture of the country.

Mr. ENLOE. Does the gentleman believe he does it now?

Mr. HATCH. Ido believe it. I not only believe it, but I know it.

I can give one instance. A former Commissioner of Agriculture, alert as he was in matters of this kind, finding that an old farmer up in Pennsylvania had discovered a new kind of wheat, the Fultz wheat, distributed that throughout the length and breadth of this land; and it has been worth more to the agriculture and the wealth of this countries and the wealth of this countries. try than all the appropriations made to the Department of Agriculture in fifty years.

Mr. SOWDEN. The case was the same with the Scotland oats.

Mr. HATCH. It has proved to be worth more than the gentleman from Tennessee and all her other Representatives for the next fifty years will be worth to that State.

Mr. McMILLIN. Will the gentleman include in his remarks the State of Missouri?

Mr. HATCH. Yes, sir; and two or three other States.
Mr. McMILLIN. I am glad the gentleman is magnanimous enough to include himself.

Mr. HATCH. If I should make any exception it would be in the case of my friend [Mr. McMillin] who has just interrupted me.
Mr. SPINOLA. I have here a note from the Department of Agriculture notifying me that there are subject to my distribution "one hundred papers of ruta-baga." Does the gentleman think that a "rare and valuable seed?"

Mr. HATCH. I do not think that ruta-baga or turnip seed is either rare" or "valuable." I do not think such seed ought to be included "rare" or "valuable." I do not think such seed ought to be included in this distribution. I have taken this same ground on this floor every time this bill has been up.

Mr. SPINOLA. Here are also "20 quarts of mangel-wurzel." Do these come under that high designation of "rare and valuable seed?" Mr. HATCH. I think not, unless they be a new variety of mangel-

Mr. SPINOLA. Here again are "10 quarts of melon barley."
Mr. HATCH. The proposition of the gentleman from Tennessee
[Mr. Enloe] is not to correct any abuses in this distribution, if they exist; it is simply to strike from the bill the appropriation for any seed distribution at all. Now, the farmers of the country do not get a great deal from the Government. They pay the largest share of taxes according to their numbers and wealth. They are more heavily tax-ridden than any other class. About all they get in return is what they get through published reports of the Department of Agriculture and from the tests made of rare and valuable seeds and plants.

Every time the gentleman from Tennessee comes back to the execu-tion of the law. The misfortune is that the Democratic party was defeated in November last. If the present President had been re-elected he might have consulted the gentleman from Tennessee and put him at the head of the Department of Agriculture, and then everything would have been lovely. [Laughter.]

Mr. ENLOE. I understand that the gentleman from Missouri was the one upon whom the mantle of that office was to fall.

Mr. HATCH. I had no aspiration in that direction. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

/ Mr. ENLOE. Not now. [Laughter, and cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]
Mr. BREWER. Mr. Chairman, I am not in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] striking out the entire appropriation for the purchase, propagation, and distribution of seeds, bulbs, plants, vines, etc.; yet I am not satisfied with the present mode of distribution, nor even with the mode provided for in this bill. When Congress organized the Agricultural Bureau in 1862 it made it the duty of that bureau, among other things,

To acquire and to diffuse among the people of the United States useful information on subjects connected with agriculture in the most comprehensive sense of that word, and to procure and propagate and distribute among the people new and valuable seeds and plants.

Appropriations have been made each year since for the purpose of carrying out that provision of law, and I have no doubt but that the distribution of such seeds, plants, etc., has been beneficial to the people, as stated by the honorable gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH]. But it is far less beneficial now than it was twenty and twenty-five years ago. Then seeds, bulbs, and plants were not cultivated for sale to any such extent as they are to-day. Then the great seed farms and seed stores of Sibley, Ferry, and others throughout the country did not exist, but now these great establishments are found in nearly every State, and they are annually gathering seeds not only from all parts of State, and they are annually gathering seeds not only from all parts of our own country, but from all parts of the world, and these seeds can now be purchased for a small sum in every village in the country.

Nine-tenths of the seeds now distributed, either through the Agricultural Department or by Senators and Congressmen, are of the most cultural Department or by Senators and Congressmen, are of the most common kind, and can be found in almost any seed store throughout the country. They are not such seeds as were contemplated under the law which I have quoted. They are not new and rare. This is perhaps not the fault of the Commissioner, who makes the purchase, but the fault of Congress. We appropriate $100,000 annually for the purchase of such seeds and plants, when $10,000 would buy a sufficient quantity of all kinds that may be called new and rare varieties.

Of all the seeds, plants, cuttings, etc., that are sent out annually by Congressmen, I think it can be safely said that not 5 per cent. of those who receive them ever make any report of the result of their experiment in testing the same, and it is perhaps just as well that they do not, for, as I have stated, as a general thing the same seed, or seeds of the same kind, could have been procured at the village store, and are not, for, as I have stated, as a general thing the same seed, or seeds of the same kind, could have been procured at the village store, and are common to the neighborhood. I apprehend that very few members on this floor receive many letters or calls for seeds and plants for the pur-pose of experimenting with the same; but a very large proportion of such requests come from people who wish the seeds simply for their own use, and often because they are thereby saved the expense of purchasing the same elsewhere.

Many of our constituents seem to understand that Congressmen have an unlimited supply of seeds of all kinds which are for free distribution. They do not understand that the law providing for the distribution of such seeds was enacted for the public good, instead of for subserving private interests. The growth of our country and the great advancement in practical and scientific agriculture, together with the wonderful increase in the production of seeds, plants, etc., and the collection and distribution of the same by private parties, have made the present process of purchase and distribution through Congressmen almost worth-

A majority of the Committee on Agriculture have, I take it, arrived at a similar conclusion, for I find they have made provision for dis-tributing such seeds through the agricultural experimental stations in the several States. In order to utilize to the fullest extent the advantages of our several agricultural colleges, or other institutions where the different branches of agriculture are taught, Congress about two years ago established in each State and Territory an experimental station at one such institution of learning, and we are appropriating in this bill $600,000 to carry out that object for one year. The act establishing these stations, amongst other things, makes the following provision:

That it shall be the object and duty of said experiment stations to conduct original researches or verify experiments on the physiology of plants and animals, the diseases to which they are severally subject, with the remedies for the same; the chemical composition of useful plants at their different stages of growth; the comparative advantages of rotative cropping as pursued under a varying series of crops; the capacity of new plants or trees for acclimation; the analysis of soils and water; the chemical composition of manures, natural or artificial, with experiments designed to test their comparative effects on crops of different kinds; the adaptation and value of grasses and forage plants; the composition and digestibility of the different kinds of food for domestic animals; the scientific and economic questions involved in the production of butter and cheese, and such other researches or experiments bearing directly on the agricultural industry of the United States as may in such case be deemed advisable, having due regard to the varying conditions and needs of the respective States or Territories.

All these institutions where experimental stations are established.

All these institutions where experimental stations are established have farms connected with them where practical and scientific agriculture is taught. These institutions are located in different climates, and the farms are possessed of different kinds of soil. Bulletins are published by these institutions as often as may be deemed necessary, giving to the public the result of all experiments made, whether it be in the region of stock or the growing of plants or grain. Here we learn in the raising of stock or the growing of plants or grain. Here we learn not only as to the growing and production of grain and other crops and the manner of producing the same, but we also are informed as to the kind and quality of the soil where the same can be produced or grown to the best advantage, the kind of manure that is best to use, and everything that can be necessary and useful for the people engaged in agricultural pursuit.

Here, then, is the place to make experiments. These stations were established for that very purpose, and if we would only supply such rare seeds, plants, bulbs, etc., as the law provides for purchasing, to these stations to the extent that they can be experimented with each year, we would accomplish more good, in my judgment, to the country with an expenditure of $10,000 than we now accomplish with the $100,000 annually appropriated for that purpose. But supposing there shall be more seeds, etc., placed in the hands of the superintendents of these stations than can be utilized by them, they being connected with an agricultural institution, are constantly thrown among the very best class of farmers, and they know what farmers would themselves take an interest in making experiments, and the result of their work, too, could be given in the bulletins as issued.

A far better result must be obtained and the people befar more benefited by the course suggested than by the manner of distributing seeds at the present time. They now go out in a haphazard sort of way, because they are asked for, or because Congressmen do not know what else to do with them, only to send them to such persons as they may for the time being have in mind. But few farmers comparatively can give a report, if they were so inclined, that would be of any practical benefit. The new kinds of plants, seeds, and grains that are discovered or grown now are not large, and they are discovered and put in circulation or distributed by our great seed dealers much sooner than they can be by the Agricultural Department.

What the farmers now desire, and what will be to their great advantage, is to know how best to grow the various seeds, grains, plants, etc., that they can buy at the seed stores or raise for themselves; in what kind of soil can they be grown to the best advantage, when should the same be planted, grown, and harvested, how best cared for and utilized when small and are stated to the same be planted. ized when gathered, etc. At these agricultural stations is where these experiments should be made, and the result disseminated among the people. Here is the only place where they can be made with success. I do not hope or expect that this bill will be so amended as to carry out the suggestions here made, but I desire to call the attention of the House, as well as the country, to the subject-matter under discussion, fully believing that the policy here suggested will be ere long enacted into a law. I am aware that it is thought by many on this floor that the present manner or method of distributing these seeds tends to strengthen them with their constituents, as does the distribution of public patronage through their personal influence. My judgment is to the contrary.

I believe the privilege of distributing public patronage and seeds as now provided is a source of weakness to the member who exercises the same. The name of Mr. B comes into your mind, and thinking he might like some garden seeds, or his wife some flower seeds, you send the same; but the name of Mr. C does not happen to strike your mind and hence he gets no seeds. Mr. C and his wife learn that Mr. and Mrs. B have some garden and flower seeds, and Mr. and Mrs. C feel slighted, and perhaps you have lost their good-will and support as well. But whether the present system of distributing seeds helps the Congressman who makes the distribution or not ought not to affect our action. What is for the best interests of the people we represent and for the country at large is what we should seek to determine, and our constituents will be satisfied.

Mr. HATCH. I hope we will have a vote. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]
The amendment of Mr. ENLOE was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as follows:

The Commissioner of Agriculture shall apportion among the States, on the basis of their representation in Congress, all seeds, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, and shall furnish for distribution the part allotted to each State to the experiment stations established in said State under the provisions of the act of March 2, 1887, entitled "An act to establish agricultural experiment stations in connection with the colleges established in the several States under the provisions of an act approved July 2, 1862, and of the acts supplementary thereto;" and in case any State or Territory shall have falled to establish agricultural experiment stations in accordance with the provisions of said act of March 2, 1887, the seeds, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants allotted to said State shall be furnished by the Commissioner of Agriculture to the commissioner or secretary of agriculture shall report, as provided in this act, the place where purchased and the quantity and price of seeds purchased and the date of purchase; and in making distribution, as hereinbefore directed, he shall have due regard for the adaptation of the seeds, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants furnished by the Commissioners or secretaries shall be transmitted through the United States mails free of charge for postage, in accordance with the existing law regulating the transmission of such matter through the mails from the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. McCLAMMY. I make the point of order against that whole

Mr. McCLAMMY. I make the point of order against that whole paragraph.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to state for the information of the committee that this paragraph was inserted by a majority vote of the committee, a bare majority of those voting when there was not a full membership present, striking out the present existing law; and of course it was my duty to report the bill as it passed the committee. But the point of order has been made by a member of the committee who voted in the minority, and I hope the Chair and the committee will give to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BURNETT] who offered this amend-ment in the House such time as he may desire to explain the paragraph before the Chair decides the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Massachusetts how much time he desires?

Mr. HATCH. If the gentleman from North Carolina desires first to state his point of order I hope he will be permitted to do so.

Mr. McCLAMMY. My point of order is that this changes existing law by providing a different method from that heretofore provided by law for the distribution of seeds. It is new legislation, and not in order upon this bill.

I reserve my time.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire?

Mr. BURNETT. I should like to have fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman will be permitted to proceed for fifteen minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. BURNETT. Mr. Chairman, in offering this resolution before our committee I had occasion to look the matter up and found that this provision is incorporated in the Revised Statutes, section 537. To this statute was added in 1880, by a resolution passed in the Forty-sixth Congress, the present method of distributing the seeds, that is, through the members of the Senate and the House. The Revised Statutes, as our chairman has said, under which these seeds are now distributed, provides:

SEC. S27. The purchase and distribution of seeds by the Department of Agriculture shall be confined to such seeds as are rare and uncommon to the country, or such as can be made more profitable by frequent changes from one part of our own country to another; and the purchase or propagation and distribution of trees, plants, shrubs, vines, and cuttings shall be confined to such as are adapted to general cultivation and to promote the general interests of horticulture and agriculture throughout the United States.

In looking at the expenditures for the seed department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, I find a most wonderful state of affairs. The rare, valuable, and uncommon seeds, plants, shrubs, trees, etc., I looked for almost in vain. In making a brief synopsis of this statement of the Department I found that 4,655,519 packages of seed were distributed, at a cost of $49,137.87, or about 1 cent a package.

Upon a further investigation of the subject I found that the miscellaneous and rare seeds, so far as I could make them out from the different bills, was only an item of $1,483.83. For instance, our chairman speaks of wheat. Now, how much wheat was distributed? The amount paid for it was $224.95, and only 354 packages were sent out by the different members of the House.

A rare and valuable forage plant, the teosinte, lately brought to the attention of the Southern farmers, of wonderful food-producing qualities, containing less woody fiber and more albumenoids than any other forage plant now growing in the extreme South, was not distributed at all through Members of Congress or Senators, but all through the experiment stations, agricultural societies, or through the miscellaneous applications; the amount sent out was 3,186 packages of this plant, costing $34, but not one, as I have said, through the members of the House. Take flower seeds; 383,486 packages were distributed.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Does the gentleman know why the members did not send out any of that plant to which he has referred? Mr. DINGLEY. It was not included in the list furnished for distribution.

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Is it not because the official in charge did not do his duty?

Mr. BURNETT. The cost of the flower seed was $1,496.80, or a trifle over 4 mills a paper; and one of my colleagues said to-day, in my presence, that some flower seed he had sent to a lady had proved to be of the most common varieties, and she had written him that they were no better than the common plants growing in her front-door yard. The number of packages sent out in 1881 was 3,000, and this year the number was 8,800, and to obtain this large number of packages pressure was brought upon the Commissioner of Agriculture by members of Congress, who wanted them for distribution, and in large quantities. I know as a matter of fact that the members representing country districts have been obliged to go and buy seed from city members or from the seedsmen, in some instances in very large quantities. A MEMBER. Who was it?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Let us know what member has been selling his seed.

Mr. CONGER. What sort of a constituency?
Mr. BURNETT. I think there is no fair-minded man but that will agree with me that, through these various experimental stations we have established in the various States or through the commissioners or secretaries of agriculture in other States, these seeds can be better distributed. But I would have you go a step further. I would appropriate, under section 527, a thousand dollars to each of the experimental stations in the various States for this purpose. I do appreciate the fact that these seeds rightly distributed will do a great deal of good if they are rare and valuable. I think that every member of the House will bear with me, or at least the country members will, that they have had applications for a whole list of garden seeds. I know of one member from Massachusetts where a man asked him to send seed enough and of variety sufficient to plant his whole garden. We did not spend for plants, trees, or cuttings but $90; for tree seed $4.25. I am sorry that this point of order has been raised, and I hope that my friend from Tennessee [Mr. ENLOE] will offer an amendment which will accomplish this object in another way.

Mr. MORGAN withholds his remarks for revision. [See Appendix.] Mr. HATCH. I yield one minute to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. McCLAMMY].

Mr. McCLAMMY. But for the closing remark of the gentleman from Massachusetts I should not have desired to address the House. I represent an agricultural district, and I know something of the workings of this system. I know in what high regard these seeds are held by the people. The whole question contained in the proposition to strike out this provision and to provide for a different distribution of these seeds can be put in a nutshell. It is a matter of easy solution and one which has afforded me great pleasure in contemplation at times. We are free American citizens, and when positions such as these are thrust upon us and the duties become too onerous to be borne we can lay back on our privileges and forward our resignations. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. HATCH. I have but a single word to say in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts in regard to this amendment.

Mr. COBB. Before the gentleman proceeds I would like to ask him a question for information, if he will yield to me.

Mr. HATCH. Certainly.

Mr. COBB. Is it not true that the Department of Agriculture, instead of propagating the vegetable seeds which are sent throughout the country, buy them from the seed dealers; and are they not the same seed as those sent throughout the country by these seed dealers for sale at retail?

Mr. HATCH. There is no question about that; and it is one of the duties imposed upon him by this act that he shall, as well as propagate, distribute these rare and valuable seeds. Now, I call the attention of the committee to the fact that these experimental stations have been established but a single year. They are now working under their first appropriation. Many of them have just started. They are not in a condition at the present time, in my judgment, to make as equitable and judicious a distribution of the seed under this appropriation as the members of Congress could do.

No gentleman on this floor has a higher regard for the experimental stations or greater faith in the promise of those institutions than I have, but I do not believe that the time has yet come when this duty ought to be imposed upon them. I hope the Chair will now give us

Mr. BURNETT. I desire to offer an amendment.
Mr. HATCH. There is a point of order pending.
The CHAIRMAN (Mr. STONE, of Kentucky). The Chair is of opinion that under section 3 of Rule XXI this paragraph is clearly out of order, and should not be in this bill.

Mr. HATCH. I now offer as an amendment a paragraph from the existing law in lieu of the paragraph just stricken out. I am instructed by the committee to offer this amendment.

Mr. BURNETT. I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HATCH. The amendment that I send up is first in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

An equal proportion of two-thirds of all seeds, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants shall, upon their request, be supplied to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates in Congress for distribution among their constituents; and the person receiving such seeds shall inform the Department of results of the experiments therewith: Provided, That all seeds, plants, and cuttings herein allotted to Senators, Representatives, and Delegates to Congress for distribution remaining uncalled for at the end of the fiscal year shall be distributed by the Commissioner of Agriculture: And provided also, That the Commissioner shall report, as provided in this act, the place, quantity, and price of seeds purchased, and the date of purchase. But nothing in this paragraph shall be construed to prevent the Commissioner of Agriculture from sending flower, garden, and other seeds to those who apply for the same. And the amount herein appropriated shall not be diverted or used for any other purpose but for the purchase, propagation, and distribution of improved and valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants: But provided, however, That the Commissioner shall not distribute to any Senator, Representative, or Delegate seeds entirely unfit for the climate and locality he represents, but shall distribute the same so that each member may have seeds of equal value, as may be, and the best adapted to the locality he represents.

Mr. HATCH. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire simply to state that Mr. HATCH. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire simply to state that that is existing law without one single change.

Mr. BURNETT. I ask that my substitute be now read. Mr. HATCH. I desire to reserve the point of order on the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BURNETT].

The Clerk read as follows:

The Clerk read as 10110ws:

"For the purchase and distribution of such new, rare, and valuable seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants, as have not been previously tested, for the use of agricultural experiment stations, $40,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary. The Commissioner of Agriculture shall report, as provided in this act, the place where purchased and the quantity and price of articles purchased, and the date of purchase, and the quantity and character of seeds, bulbs, trees, shrubs, vines, cuttings, and plants sent to each experiment station, and such matter shall be transmitted to the experiment stations free of charge for postage, in accordance with existing law regulating the transmission of such matter through the mails from the Department of Agriculture."

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order on that amendment that it is almost identical in substance with the proposition which the Chair has already ruled out. In addition to that, it is subject to another point We have already agreed to a paragraph fixing the amount at $100,000 and-

Mr. HATCH. It provides $40,000 for seeds, etc., to be sent to the

Mr. ENLOE. That is only for the furtherance of the duties of those stations. They are charged with the duty of propagating, and this amendment proposes to furnish them seeds with which to do it,

Mr. HATCH. They have got an appropriation of $15,000, which covers all that, so far as the experimental stations are concerned. insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is clearly of opinion that the proposed substitute would be out of order under clause 3 of Rule XXI.

Mr. HATCH. Now let us have a vote on my amendment.

The amendment offered by Mr. HATCH was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HATCH. I desire unanimous consent that this afternoon's session be extended ten minutes so that we may conclude this bill before I am afraid it can not be done in the five minutes remain-As this order will' have to be made in the House, I move that the committee rise for that purpose.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. Crisp having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Stone, of Kentucky, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. Mr. HATCH. Oh, no; that is a change of the rules.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the hour for taking the recess be extended so far beyond 5 o'clock as may be necessary to finish the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill, no other business to be in order,
Mr. KILGORE. I would like to know how much time that will take.

Mr. HATCH. Certainly not more than ten minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH]? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to resume the consideration of the agricultural appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12485) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and for other

Mr. HATCH. I desire to submit a verbal amendment—to strike out in the paragraph just read the words "and of this sum an amount not exceeding $15,000 may be applied to the payment of expenses incurred during the fiscal year 1888."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House with the amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Stone, of Kentucky, reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. ## LEAVE TO PRINT.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent that gentlemen who have spoken on the bill just passed may have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD, and that all other gentlemen who desire to do so may print remarks upon the bill.

There being no objection, the leave requested was granted.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By order of the House previously made, a recess will now be taken until this evening at half past 7 o'clock.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at half past 7 o'clock p. m., and was called to order by Mr. ANDERSON, of Illinois, as Speaker pro tempore.

The Clerk read the following:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 8, 1889. Hon. George A. Anderson, of Illinois, is hereby designated to preside at the session of the House this evening. JOHN G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Clerk.

MRS. R. S. HORTON.

Mr. MORRILL. Before the House goes into the Committee of the Whole, I ask that it will indulge me by concurring in some Senate amendments to House bills-amendments which do not change the bills in substance, but only make them more explicit.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8) to restore Mrs. R. S. Horton upon the pension-roll.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 2, strike out the words "or restore."
Page 1, line 4, after the word "pension-roll," insert "and pay her a pension from the passage of this act."
Amend the title of the bill so as to read: "A bill to replace Mrs. R. S. Horton upon the pension-roll."

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the amendments be concurred in. The motion was agreed to.

ELIJAH W. PENNY.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. 2261) to increase the pension of Elijah W. Penny. The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "volunteers," page 1, line 4, down to and including the word "act," in line 8, and insert "by paying him the sum of $12 a month for wound in the side, in addition to the amount to which he is entitled by law for loss of arm at the shoulder."

Mr. MORRILL. I move that the amendment be concurred in. The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider bills under the special order, and I ask consent at the same time that the course heretofore pursued, of calling the names of members alphabetically, be continued to-night, commencing where we left off on the last occasion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole under the special order.

Mr. ROGERS. I do not think the Chair has stated the full proposi-If I understood the gentleman from Michigan, he embraced in his motion a request that the order heretofore pursued, of calling the names alphabetically, be continued.

Mr. CHIPMAN. I did, sir.

Mr. ROGERS. In that connection I wanted to make a request. Mr. Russell, of Massachusetts, requested me the other day, on being called away from here, in his behalf to call up a certain case in the District of Columbia. Of course the House will understand that the party is without any representative on this floor; but he is an old Mexican soldier as well as a Union soldier in the late war, and personally I promised to do so. While desirous of obliging Mr. Russell, I have a case of my own in Arkansas which I ought to call up, and I ask that I may be permitted to call up a case for Mr. Russell also.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask the same privilege in behalf of an absent colleague who can not be present at the session this evening.

Mr. CHIPMAN. Let these requests be made in committee.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan objects.

The motion of Mr. CHIPMAN was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, Mr. DOCKERY in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole under the special order; and if there be no objection the order of business heretofore pursued will be continued this evening.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHEELER. I ask unanimous consent, in view of the fact that my name will be reached in a few minutes on the call, and as I have au important engagement which I wish to attend to, that I may be permitted now to call up for consideration a bill.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. I think we had better have the regular

THOMPSON D. HATFIELD.

Mr. ROMEIS. I ask consideration of the bill (S. 3335) granting a pension to Thompson D. Hatfield.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Thompson D. Hatfield, at the rate of $25 a month, this sum to be paid only to the legally appointed guardian of said Thompson D. Hatfield, an insane person, for the purpose of his support and maintenance.

The report (by Mr. PIDCOCK) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3335) granting a pension to Thompson D. Hatfield, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The facts in the case are fully set forth in the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, which is as follows:

"Thompson D. Hatfield, the claimant, is a son of David Hatfield, who was commissioned as a captain in Company A, First Regiment New Jersey Volunteer Infantry, May 21, 1861, and he was mustered into the United States service for the period of three years from that time. He was promoted to be major May 28, 1861, and served in the war of the rebellion until July 30, 1862, at which time he died of wounds received a few days before in battle with the enemy at Gaines's Farm, Virginia. He volunteered as a private, and is said to have been among the first, perhaps the very first, who volunteered under the first proclamation calling out the military forces of the United States by President Lincoln.

"The record shows him to have been a very useful and gallant officer.

"The widow of Major Hatfield drew a pension, and her minor children at that time drew also a pension, among whom was the claimant, from July, 1873, until September 22, 1877, when the entire pension ceased by operation of law, the children having each attained the age of sixteen or over. The widow of Major Hatfield himself, the claimant's father, had also served as a private in the war with Mexico in Company G, Tenth Regiment United States Infantry, and was honorably discharged from said service. The claimant is the oldest son of Major Hatfield. He has been an invalid from epilepsy almost from infancy. He is incurably insane and is hopelessly imbecile, and is now a patient in Morris Plains asylum for the insane, in the State of New Jersey, where he has been confined for many years.

Plains asylum for the insane, in the State of New Jersey, where he has been confined for many years.

"His mother and her second husband are without any means or property beyond that necessary for their own support, and the expenses of the maintenance of the insane claimant are quite a burden upon the family, none of whom seem to be persons having any means of livelihood beyond their own labor. We are of the opinion, from the peculiar circumstances of the case, and from the faithful service and death of his father, that the claimant has an equitable right to the relief prayed for in his own behalf.

"We therefore recommend the passage of the bill with the following amendment: Insert, after the word 'month,' these words: 'This sum to be paid only to the legally appointed guardian of said Thompson D. Hatfield, an insane person, for the purpose of his support and maintenance.'"

Your committee likewise recommend the passage of the bill.

GEORGE H. BURGESS.

Mr. RUSSELL, of Connecticut, called up the bill (H. R. 1'300) granting a pension to George H. Burgess.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George H. Burgess, late corporal in Company H, Twenty-sixth Connecticut Volunteers, the pension to be payable to the legally constituted guardian of said Burgess.

The report (by Mr. FRENCH) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. FRENCH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11300) granting a pension to George H, Burgess, have had the same under consideration and beg leave to submit the following report:

George H. Burgess served as corporal in Company H. Twenty-sixth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, from September 2, 1862, until August 17, 1863, and is now an inmate of the Bloomingdale Asylum (New York) for the Insane. It is alleged that insanity is due to dysentery and typhold fever, from which soldier suffered during service. Because of claimant's needy circumstances and the large expenditure of money necessary to obtain letters of guardianship in the State of New York, as well as the length of time necessary to establish a claim of this character at the Pension Bureau, no application for pension has been filed in behalf of this insane soldier.

In support of the claim now before Congress the following evidence has been filed:

Baniel Champlin, captain of aforesaid company, testifies that at enlistment soldier was a healthy, able-bodied, robust, young man; that while on duty at Camp Parapet, Louisiana, some time in March or April, 1863, he contracted typhoid fever, and was sent to the regimental hospital.

Elias Babcock testifies that he was a member of the same regiment and knows that Burgess was taken to the hospital with typhoid fever. Affiant was also sick at said hospital, but recovered first and left Burgess there still under treatment.

Orderly Sergeant Morgan testifies that Burgess was a faithful soldier and of good character and temperate habits. Was in hospital two or three times, and in particular during the months of February and March, 1863, as appears from Orderly Sergeant Morgan testifies that Burgess was a faithful soldier and of good character and temperate habits. Was in hospital two or three times, and in particular during the months of February and March, 1853, as appears from affiant's diary of events.

Others testify to soldier's sickness while in the Army, but are unable to state the nature thereof.

The Adjutant-General reports that the records of the regimental hospital of the Twenty-sixth Regiment of Connecticut Volunteers are not on file.

Henry Burgess, soldier's father, testifies that immediately after his discharge soldier came to afflart's house, where he made his home for some time. He was then suffering from dysentery and the effects of typhoid fever, such as nervousness. Had no severe sickness after discharge, but grew more nervous every year until his nervousness assumed the symptoms of insanity, which so increased that in September, 1887, it became necessary to commit him to the Bloomingdale Asylum. Insanity was never known or heard of either on his father's or mother's side of the family.

Soldier's wife testifies to continuous spells of melancholia from 1868, when she was married to him.

Dr. Charles E. Brayten testifies that he has been acquainted with the soldier for twenty years or more. Treated him for insomnia in 1882 and thereafte. The complaint grew worse until about 1885 marked symptoms of paresis appeared, and in August, 1887, at afflant's recommendation he was removed to the Retreat for the Insane.

Assistant Medical Superintendent Lyon, of the Bloomingdale Asylum, certifies that soldier is now in the demented stage of general paresis. Afflant believes that if it is proved that soldier had typhoid fever and dysentery while in the military service of the United States while still immature, such sickness and the exposure may have seriously affected a naturally nervous person and predisposed him to serious mental disease later in life.

MARY C. THOMPSON.

Mr. SAWYER called up the bill (S. 3428) granting a pension to Mary C. Thompson.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary C. Thompson, widow of the late Dr. Fillmore Thompson, of Hot Springs, Ark., who was chief guide to the expedition of General Frederick Steele, during the spring of the year 1864, undertaken for the purpose of co-operating with General Banks, and who lost his life by reason of exposure in said service, and to pay her a pension corresponding with the grade of captain.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3428) granting a pension to Mary C. Thompson, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The facts in the case appear fully in the report of the Committee on Pensions, United States Senate, which is as follows:

"The petitioner is the widow of the late Dr. Fillmore Thompson, of Hot Springs, Ark., where, at the breaking out of the rebellion, he resided. He was a thorough and intense Unionist, and rendered valuable assistance to many of the persecuted loyal people of that section, and by reason of which he endangered his own safety so that he was obliged to seek protection within the Union lines at Little Rock, then occupied by General Fred. Steele. He was employed by General Steele as chief guide and scout in his expedition to Camden in the spring of 1864, for the purpose of co-operating with General Banks in his Louisiana campaign, and continued to act as such until the final return of said expedition to Little Rock.

"Prof. J. B. Wheeler, of the United States Military Academy at West Point, thus testifies by affidavit in regard to Dr. Thompson:

"Prof. J. B. Wheeler, of the United States Military Academy at West Point, thus testifies by affidavit in regard to Dr. Thompson:

"That as the chief engineer officer he accompanied the march of the expedition under Maj. Gen. Fred Steele, which moved south in March, 1864, to cooperate with and, if possible, to effect a junction with the United States forces under command of Maj. Gen. N. P. Banks, then moving toward Shreveport, on the Red River, in Louisiana.

"That during this march and the return he was daily thrown in contact with the principal guide, one Dr. F. Thompson, a former resident of Hot Springs, Ark., who had sought protection within the United States lines against violence from the inhabitants of that part of the State with which he was threatened by reason of his well-known Union feelings.

"That from his personal knowledge he knows of the peculiar fitness of the said Thompson for the place of principal guide, and attributes largely the successful progress of the expedition, as far south as it proceeded, to said Thompson's thorough knowledge of the roads, the crossing of streams, and the sentiments and opinions of the inhabitants of that part of the country.

"That the return march of the expedition followed as it was by a victorious enemy, who received a severe check at Jenkin's Ferry, was greatly aided by the said Thompson's intimate acquaintance with the roads and character of the country used and crossed by the army in its retreat.

"That during this retreat all the members were more or less sufferers from fatigue and exposure.

"That shortly after the return of the expedition Dr. Thompson was taken sick and very soon thereafter died.

"That the deponent understood at the time of said Thompson's death that it, as well as the sickness, were largely, if not entirely, caused by the fatigues and exposures that said Thompson had undergone during the time he accompanied the expedition as its principal guide.

"Dr. Thompson, upon his return to Little Rock, was attended by several phy-

"Dr. Thompson, upon his return to Little Rock, was attended by several physicians, all of whom certify that the disease of which he died was, in their opinion, the result of fatigue, exposure, and injuries received in this service. He left a widow and several children without means of support. There is no general law under which services of this character can be recognized; but there are precedents for allowing pensions to guides or scouts for disabilities, and to their widows in case of death.

"The bill is reported with an amendment, striking out all after the word 'pension,' in the twelfth line, and inserting i corresponding with the grade of captain,' and a recommendation that it do pass."

Your committee believe the case to be a meritorious one and to come within established precedents, but respectfully decline to concur in the rate of pension fixed in the bill, and therefore return the same with the recommendation that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out all after the word "service," in line 9, and inserting therein instead the words "at the rate of $12 per month."

PATRICK GERAGHTY.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, at the last session of the committee my name was called, but owing to the fact that the report in the case I desired to ask consideration of had not been received, the right was given me to call up a bill to-night. I now ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 12506) granting an increase of pension to Patrick Ger-

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Patrick Geraghty, late a private of Company G, Fourth Regiment United States Cavalry, at the rate of $8 per month, in lieu of the pension now received by him.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Patrick Geraghty for an increase of pension, beg leave to submit the following Patrick Geraghty served in Company G. First Regiment United States Cavalry, subsequently the Fourth United States Cavalry, from March 13, 1857, to March 14, 1856, and is now a pensioner at the rate of $2 per month for malarial poisoning and chronic diarrhea. He has filed a petition, signed by a large number of prominent citizens of Tennessee, asking an increase of his pension on the ground that the disability is much greater from aforesaid causes than that recognized by the Pension Office. The pensioner is a great sufferer from dyspepsia, as shown by the medical examinations, but evidently its connection with the diarrhea is not admitted in the rating of the pension.

Hon. Benton McMillin, of the House, who is personally acquainted with the pensioner, has appeared before your committee, and from his statements touching the old soldier's condition it is evident that his pension is too low to be commensurate with the degree of disability actually existing in the case. That neighbors who come in almost daily contact with a person suffering from a complication of diseases are more competent to judge of the real degree of disability therefrom than an examining surgeon who has no personal acquaintance with and only hastily examines him can not be denied.

Your committee are clearly of the opinion that $2 a month is not sufficient to compensate a soldier who served faithfully eight years, became broken down in service, and has been ever since almost entirely disqualified for the performance of manual labor, and therefore return the petition with the accompanying bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ROBERT KELLY.

Mr. MORRILL. At the request of my friend from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], at the last meeting of the committee permission was given to me to call up a bill to-night. I was then necessarily absent. I now ask consideration of the bill (S. 2530) granting a pension to Robert Kelly.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Robert Kelly, late a private in Company B, Third Regiment Maryland Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2530) granting a pension to Robert Kelly, submit the following report:

The report of the Committee on Pensions in the Senate is herewith adopted, and the passage of the bill recommended.

[Senate Report No. 2406, Fiftieth Congress, second session.]

[Senate Report No. 2406, Fiftieth Congress, second session.]

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2530) granting a pension to Robert Kelly, have examined the same, and report:

The claimant under the bill was private in Company B. Third Maryland Volunteers. He made application for pension on the ground of disease of eye, which resulted in loss of sight, incurred while in service. The claim was rejected by the Pension Burean "on the ground that the alleged disability was not incurred while in the service of the United States."

The committee are unable, in a careful review of the record and testimony, to find any ground on which to sustain the judgment of the Pension Bureau.

The fact of enlistment is presumptive evidence of soundness at that time, and particularly of so important an organ to a soldier as his right eye. This presumption is made reasonably certain by all the testimony in the case, based on personal or professional knowledge, an abstract of which is herewith given.

Dr. William C. Kloman knew claimant from 1855, and treated him before enlistment for malarious diseases, but knew of no defect of vision at that time. Attended claimant's family before the war, and believes his sight was good. William F. Burns, president of Eutaw Savings Bank, testifies he as known claimant since boyhood; "worked for me from his boyhood up; one of his eyes was crossed, I think, but his sight was not affected; his health was good."

Paul Helene knew claimant from March, 1857; was keeping store, and saw him nearly every day; never noticed anything wrong with claimant's eyes prior to enlistment.

Samuel Stallings has known claimant since he was a small boy; saw him pearly every day previous to enlistment, noticed a nearliegity should one of his every day previous to enlistment.

him nearly every day; never noticed anything wrong with claimant's eyes prior to enlistment.

Samuel Stallings has known claimant since he was a small boy; saw him nearly every day previous to enlistment; noticed a peculiarity about one of his eye; a kind of squint: his sight was all right.

Daniel W. Oxworth was a comrade of claimant and knew him from 1846 up to enlistment; one eye was inclined towards the nose; know of no affection of the sight before service; claimant was relieved from duty on account of eyes.

Henry J. Ward, another comrade, knew claimant several years before the war; was in his company day after day before enlistment; one eye was smaller than the other; knew of no affection of sight.

William H. Higdon, Caroline Schlickerman, John Purper, Capt. James Roff, Henry Schlickerman, and Thomas Brown were neighbors, and intimate with claimant for years before enlistment, and testify that they knew of no defect of vision; while Edward Anderson associated with him familiarly and for years before enlistment, was his companion on gunning expeditions, and never noticed that he had any affection of his eyes.

This concurrence of competent testimony would seem to settle the fact of claimant's soundness when he entered the service. The following extract from the report of the Adjutant-General makes it certain that claimant was unsound when he left the service:

"Detachment muster-out roll, dated May 28, 1862, reports him discharged on that date at Baltimore, for disability, by order of General Dix; cause, cataract of right eye."

The committee report favorably on the bill and recommend it for passage.

ESTHER GOULD.

Mr. SHERMAN called up for consideration the bill (S. 3819) granting a pension to Esther Gould. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Esther Gould, late volunteer nurse during the war of the rebellion, and pay her a pension of $25 per month from this date.

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3819) granting a pension to Esther Gould, submit the following report:

That the evidence presented to your committee fully substantiates the report of the Senate committee, which is hereto attached and adopted as their report. Your committee, fully believing this case to be a very meritorious one, recommend that the same pass with the following amendment, by adding thereto:

"Said pension to be in lieu of any pension she may now be receiving."

SENATE REPORT.

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3819) granting a pension to Mrs. Esther Gould, have examined the same, and report:
This is a bill to pension Mrs. Esther Gould, who was a volunteer army nurse during the war of the rebellion, and whose record in this capacity shows that she rendered faithful and valuable service.

In a letter of recommendation, dated July 20, 1866, R. B. B. B. B. B. Coutecue, late brevet colonel and surgeon in charge of Harewood Hospital, Washington, D. C., says:
"Mrs. Esther Gould has been in the employ of the United States as matron at Harewood United States General Hospital at Washington, D. C., for the last three years;" and he certifies that her services were performed in a faithful and satisfactory manner.

Satisfactory manner.

The committee also have proof to the same effect from a number of witnesses who have a personal knowledge of Mrs. Gould's services.

Frank A. Speare testifies that she was a nurse in Judiciary Square and Harewood Hospitals from March, 1862, to 1865, inclusive.

Jeremiah C. Allen certifies that he was chief ward-master at Judiciary Square Hospital in 1863, and that she performed satisfactory service. Joseph H. Voorhees was an immate of Judiciary Square Hospital, and re-members her valuable service, and that she was transferred to Harewood Hospital.

Surgeon Boutecue again certifies that she was one of the most competent and faithful nurses in the United States Army, and that her health was impaired in consequence of her devotion.

Dr. Bond, late of Pennsylvania Cavalry Volunteers, certifies to her faithfulness and efficiency in Harewood Hospital, and that she is afflicted with chronic rheumatism, the result of her arduous labors as army nurse.

Dr. Dorsey, one of the surgeons at Harewood, certifies to his knowledge of her service from 1863 to 1866.

Mrs. Gould says, in her letter to the committee, that her husband and son entered the Army; they have never returned, nor has word ever come to her of or from them; so she realizes that they are numbered among the unknown dead.

She says she has recently been discrete.

dead.

She says she has recently been dismissed from the Government Printing Office, and refused restoration; that she is in extreme need, in consequence of which she has been compelled to seek relief from Congress.

The case needs no comment.

The bill is reported favorably with a recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. SAWYER. I wish to say a word in reference to that case for the parpossiof asking that the amendment be not adopted. When the bill came from the Senate and was referred to myself as a member of the committee, and when I examined it and presented my report, the question was asked whether she was not drawing a pension on the death of her husband. I hastily looked through the testimony furnished to the committee and was not satisfied, from the evidence presented, whether she was or was not; and for that reason the amendment was put in.

I have taken the pains—so has Senator HISCOCK, who introduced the bill-to inquire whether she is now drawing a pension. We have both become satisfied that she is not, and the only reason for asking that the amendment be not concurred in now is simply because it is so late in the session I am fearful that it will prevent the passage of the bill, as it would involve its going back to the Senate. I therefore hope that the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. MORRILL. It can be voted down.

The question was taken, and the amendment was disagreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HARLAN E. KING.

Mr. SHIVELY called up the bill (H. R. 11430) to increase the pension of Harlan E. King.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Harlan E. King, late private in Company C. Thirty-six'h Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, a pension of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension which he is now receiving.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

The elaimant is now pensioned at the rate of $30 per month for gunshot wound of left thigh and resulting varieose veins. He filed application for increase, alleging that he was entitled to increase on account of gunshot wound of left thigh, which has resulted in producing varieose veins of the left thigh and leg and of the lower part of the abdomen, and that as a result of said wound his testicles have shrunken to about one-eighth their former and natural size, rendering him wholly impotent; that said varieose veins began to appear in 1809, and his testicles have been shrinking since 1867. Both said results have been increasing until the present condition has been reached.

Irvin J. Becknell, M. D., a medical graduate, testifies that he began treating claimant at the city hospital, Indianapolis, about April, 1873. After fully describing the case, he says:

"During the time (about fifteen years) of my almost constant observation and treatment of his case, have known him to suffer excruciating pain in leg, and have offen been called upon to give him anodynes internally or to apply morphine directly to the ulcer for the relief of pain. For weeks at a time said applicant has been unable to leave his room, requiring the services of an attendant. He is entirely unfit to do manual labor. Think his disability is liable to remain permanent in its present degree, or more likely to become worse. I would prefer having my leg amputated at the thigh to be in his condition. The matter of amputation has been repeatedly mentioned, and I have always given it as my opinion that he would not survive the operation. His entire system seems diseased, and it seems necessary for him to take remedies for the improvement of his blood nearly constantly."

William T. Fulton testifies that he has known applicant for seven years last past, and during that time has made his home and boarded at the same place with said claimant, and he knows from personal knowledge that said claimant has during assistance of some one.

Enoch Rhorer testifies that he has been well acquainted with claimant about fourteen years, and during the last seven years claimant has resided with him all the time except one year, and during that time, every year thereof, at frequent intervals, claimant would be confined to his room for periods ranging from one week to ten weeks, during which time he had to see that his means were carried to him, and he required the aid and assistance of some one in his room all the time to dress and bathe his leg, give him medicine, and otherwise take care of him.

Isaac H. Hall, Alonzo Doty, and Jacob H. Martin, all neighbors who have been acquainted with claimant many years, testify substantially to the foregoing facts.

The claimant appeared before the medical board of the Pension Office and was examined September 13, 1888. The examination revealed about the condition above stated, but under existing laws no higher rating could be made than that under which the claimant is now pensioned.

From a careful consideration of the evidence the committee believe that the condition of claimant's disability is such as to warrant a higher rating than he now receives, and we therefore submit a favorable report and recommend that in line 6 strike out the word "fifty" and insert "forty-five," and when so amended that the bill do pass.

The amendment was agreed to: and the bill as amended was laid

MARIA BRASTED.

Mr. SMITH, of Wisconsin, called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6598) granting a pension to Maria Brasted.
The bill was read, as follows:

Bett enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Maria Brasted, mother of Daniel W. Brasted, deceased, late private Company A, Thirty-fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry

The report (by Mr. SAWYER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6598) granting a pension to Maria Brasted, submit the following report:
The beneficary is the mother of Daniel W. Brasted, late a private in Company A, Thirty-fifth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, who enlisted February 15, 1884, and died August 12, 1864, at Earrack Hospital, New Orleans, La., from 15, 1834, and died August 12, 1854, at Earrack Hospital, New Orleans, La., from diarrhea.

The mother filed her claim for pension June 8, 1880, and the same was rejected December, 1885, on the ground of "non-dependence at son's death, in 1864, the avails of husband's labor and income from property being sufficient for maintenance." The son was never married. The claimant had three sons in the Army, two of whom are now dead, one son, Daniel, dying in the service and the other having since died.

The evidence on file in the Pension Office and additional evidence filed with this committee show to the satisfaction of the committee that the beneficiary is now a poor woman, with an invalid husband and largely dependent upon the charity of others for a livelihood. While there may have been some disagreement in the evidence as to the ability of her husband for the support of his family in 1864, when their son died, the evidence of the dependence and destitution of the claimant at the present time is clear and satisfactory, and the committee believe that this poor woman, who gave three sons to her country's service, two of whom are now dead, one dying in the service, now in her old age and poverty is justly entitled to the relief granted by this bill, and therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

ABBY J. SLOCUM.

Mr. SPOONER called up for consideration the bill (S. 169) granting an increase of pension to Abby J. Slocum.

"[Senate Report No. 163, Fiftlieth Congress, first session.]
"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred a bill granting an increase of pension to Abby J. Slocum, have examined the same, and report:
"John S. Slocum served with much credit in the volunteer service during the Mexican war; that in April, 1861, he was appointed colonel of the Second Rhode Island Volunteers, took an active and conspicuous part in the first engagement at Bull Run, and was mortally wounded while gallantly leading his regiment in that battle. His conduct on this occasion was warmly commended by his associates and superior officers, and he would have undoubtedly been promoted to a general command if he had survived the battle. His widow, who is now in needy circumstances, having two children and an aged mother dependent upon her for support, was the daughter of Hon. Charles T. James, formerly a Senator of the United States from Rhode Island. A bill of the same tenor passed the Senate in the first session Forty-eighth Congress, and again in the Forty-minth Congress. She is now receiving a colonel's pension under the general law, and your committee recommend that it be increased to $50, and recommend the passage of the bill."

ommend the passage of the bill."

Your committee believe that good reason exists in this exceptional case for a departure from their ordinary rule.

The gallant husband of the pensioner earned the promotion, which was prevented only by his death, upon the field of battle, in the desperate engagement with the enemy, where he received the fatal wound which speedily terminated his life.

He was an exceptionally brilliant officer, esteemed, admired, and beloved, not only by his comrades, but by the people of his State, many of whom, including citizens of the highest character and influence in both private and official life, have urged the action proposed by the bill for the relief of his needy widow and family.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. CHEADLE. I will state to the gentleman that I am perfectly willing for that bill to go over to a full House. If that is not acceptable I shall call a quorum.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is an exceptional case in which no member would use such methods to forbid the House any opportunity to consider the bill, for that is practically, I think, what the suggestion of the gentleman means. The husband of the widow for whom this bill proposes to provide served with great gallantry in the Mexican war, and upon the breaking out of the late war of the rebellion he was appointed to the colonelcy of our Second Rhode Island Regiment, the first three-year regiment from my State which went into the war. He distinguished himself at the battle of Bull Run, and was mortally wounded upon that battle-field in the gallant discharge of his duty at the head of his regiment.

His widow is the daughter of Mr. James, who was formerly a Senator from the State of Rhode Island in the United States Senate. By misfortune in business he was himself impoverished before his death. Not only her aged mother, the widow of the Senator, but the two daughters of Colonel Slocum are dependent upon the widow for their support. She is in extremely needy circumstances, as has been stated in the report which has been read. This matter has been called to my attention in the most earnest manner by many of the most prominent citizens of my own State, including the governor of the State; and, as the urgency and propriety of this legislation has been so earnestly called to my attention, I desire to call the attention of the House to it as strongly as circumstances and necessary brevity will permit.

Mr. MACDONALD. I would suggest to the gentleman from Rhode Island that in view of the fact that the gentleman from Indiana says he will call a quorum on this bill it is merely taking time for him to go on with it.

Mr. SPOONER. I think there are about as large a number of members present as are usually engaged in enacting the most important legislation.

Mr. MACDONALD. But he does it to be consistent.
Mr. SPOONER (to Mr. CHEADLE). Does the gentleman insist upon calling a quorum?

Mr. CHEADLE. I do.

Mr. SPOONER. If I can do nothing better, I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable report, the previous question considered ordered, and that a vote be taken on the bill in a full House on Friday

Mr. FELTON. I understood the gentleman from Indiana to say that he had no objection to this matter being placed before the House. Now, it strikes me that this is the first stage necessary to that proceeding—that this bill should first be passed in committee to-night to be considered by the House, and then the gentleman's wish will be accomplished and it can be decided by a full House. If I understand the gentleman aright, he has no objection to the bill being passed in the committee, to be laid aside for consideration by a full House.

Mr. CHEADLE. Not at all.

Mr. SPOONER. With the previous question ordered?

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, that order will be made. There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ALEXANDER M. BOATRIGHT.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas (when his name was reached). I call up the bill (H. R. 11741) granting a pension to Alexander M. Boatright.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-rolls the name of Alexander M. Boatright, late of Captain Houston's company, Colonel Sanford's volunteers, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11741) granting a pension to Alexander M. Boatright, have considered the same, and report as follows:

The claimant served in Capt. A. M. Houston's company, Colonel Sanford's regiment Illinois volunteers, in the Black Hawk war of 1832, and was honorably discharged therefrom.

He is now seventy-nine years of age, with no property of any kind, and physically unable to perform any manual labor. These facts are well shown by the testimony before your committee. The claimant alleges that he was wounded during his service, but he is unable at this late date to find comrades by whom he can establish his claim.

Your committee are of the opinion that this aged veteran should be granted a pension, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill, amended by striking out the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws." and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Illinois militia, and pay him a pension of $20 per month."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

DORCUS ALFORD.

Mr. STEWART, of Georgia (when his name was reached). I call up the bill (H. R. 10474) granting a pension to Dorcus Alford.

The bill was read, as follows:

The husband of the claimant, James Alford, was an ensign in Capt. Young Mann's company of Georgia infantry, in the Indian war of 1836, and was honorably discharged therefrom.

The claimant is now seventy-five years of age, without property of any kind, and in very needy circumstances. These facts are shown by the testimony of reliable neighbors, and by the postmaster of the town in which she resides.

Your committee are of the opinion that she should be granted a service pension, and therefore report back the bill to the House recommending its passage. Amend, however, by striking out the words "third lieutenant," in line 7, and inserting the word "ensign" in their place.

The amendment was agreed to.

JOHN Y. HOOPER.

Mr. STOCKDALE (when his name was reached). I call up the bill (H. R. 10639) granting a pension to John Y. Hooper.

The bill was read, as follows:

thorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John Y. Hooper, late of Company F, First Regiment Nebraska Volunteer Cavalry, and who is now an inma e of the hospital for the insane at St. Peter, in the State of Minnesota, and that the pension allowed him be paid to his legally constituted guardian.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

that the pension allowed him be paid to his legally constituted guardian.

The report (by Mr. Morrill) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10639) granting a pension to John Y. Hooper, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

John Y. Hooper enlisted as musician of Company F. First Regiment Nebraska Cavalry, June 24, 1861; was promoted to chief bugler, and mustered out of service August 10, 1864. He applied for pension November 16, 1872, on account of scrotal hernia, incurred in the winter of 1864, while on a forced night march in Arkansas, by being thrown upon the pommel of his saddle by the sudden stopping of his horse.

The claim has been rejected by the Pension Bureau because of the insufficiency of the evidence to connect the disability with the service. It is true that there is no direct evidence as to the origin of the disability; but there is, in the opinion of your committee, sufficient evidence to show that the claimant was sound at enlistment, and that at the date of discharge he was suffering from the disability for which he claims pension.

James B. Sly, late lieutenant of Company M, First Minnesota Heavy Artillery, testifies to a long and intimate acquaintance with the glaimant prior to the service, which acquaintance was kept up during the war by cerrespondence. Affant received a letter from the claimant in the early spring of 1884, in which he stated that he had hurt himself by being thrown on the pommel of his saddle, but that he should stick to his duty, and hoped it would come out all right. Upon affant's return from the service he found the claimant under the care of Dr. Pashley, now deceased, for serotal hernia.

Friend J. Whitlock, also a reputable citizen, testifies to claimant's prior soundness and the injury in the service, of which claimant advised him during their continuous correspondence. Met soldier upon his return home in August, 1884, and found him suffering from hernia. Used a s

STEPHEN WILLIAMS.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky (when his name was reached). I call up the bill (H. R. 11586) for the relief of Stephen Williams.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Stephen Williams, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1586) for the relief of Stephen Williams, have considered the same, and now re-

The claimant was a private in Company E, Fourteenth Illinois Cavalry. In declaration plea, April 28, 1881, he alleges that while at Nicholasville, Ky., in October, 1884, received injury to head by a blow from a gunstock. The claim was rejected upon the ground that the alleged injury to head was not incurred while in line of duty, having been received in a personal quarrel. The evidence is sufficient to establish the fact that claimant received the blow on his head from a comrade, the only question being as to whether he was in line of duty at the time the accident occurred. The committee are inclined to give the claimant the benefit of the doubt, and therefore submit a favorable report and recommend the passage of the bill, with the following amendment: In line 5, after the word "Williams," insert of "Company E, Fourteenth Illinois Cavalry."

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to, and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ELIZABETH MYERS.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri (when his name was reached). I call up the bill (H. R. 424) granting a pension to Elizabeth Myers.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Elizabeth Myers, of Appleton City, St. Clair County, Mo., widow of John H. Myers, deceased, late private in Company F, of the Sixtieth Regiment of Missouri Enrolled Militia; and she shall be paid from and after the passage of this act at the rate of $12 per month.

The report (by Mr. WALKER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 424, ave had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

Elizabeth Myers, the proposed beneficiary in the bill, is the widow of John H. Myers, who served as private of Company F, Sixtieth Regiment Enrolled Missouri Militia, and who died of wounds received in action with the enemy in Eates County, Missouri, April 3, 1863, while holding the rank of first sergeant of Bates County, Missouri, April 3, 1863, while holding the rank of first sergeant of said company.

The widow did not apply for pension until December 30, 1881, at which time the claims on account of service in the militia organizations were no longer admissible under the provisions of paragraph 3, section 4693, Revised Statutes.

The services and death of the soldier under the circumstances above set forth are clearly established by the records of the Third Auditor of the Treasury Department in the settlement with the State of Missouri, relimbursing the same for expenses incurred in the organization of the militia during the late war.

The case under consideration comes within the well-established rules of the House regarding the pension claims of militiamen and their dependents, now barred under the general laws, and the proof of the death of the soldier, as well as the continuous widowhood of the applicant, being conclusive, your committee return the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation of the same and the proof of the death of the soldier, as well as the continuous widowhood of the applicant, being conclusive, your committee return the bill with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

J. D. HAWORTH.

Mr. STRUBLE (when his name was reached). I call up the bill (S. 3435) granting a pension to J. D. Haworth.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of J. The report (by Mr. Spooner) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S 3435) granting a pension to J. D. Haworth, respectfully report:

That the claimant, James D. Haworth, was a member of Company H. Thirty-third Regiment of Iowa Infantry, and was transferred, on account of disability, to the Veteran Reserve Corps. In his declaration for pension, filed February 20, 1879, the claimant alleges complete loss of right eye and injury to the left. The Pension Bureau rejected his claim on the ground that his eyes were defective before enlistment.

The applicant, in nearly a blind condition, appeals again to Congress. He claims that while on the Yazoo Pass expedition, from exposure and a nervous affection caused by an attack of fever, his eyes became affected, from which he experienced loss of right and impairment of left. He was treated in hospitals at St. Louis and Little Rock. Hospital records corroborate this, but do not mention the disease for which he was treated.

The captain of his company testifies that he was sent to hospital on account of disease of eyes and never returned to duty, and a comrade gives similar and stronger evidence.

The surgeon of his regiment treated him for blindness of right eye and weakness of left, for which he sent him to hospital. The board of medical examiners at Fairfield, Iowa, report total blindness of right eye from disease of optic nerve; that his disability is equal to the loss of a hand or foot.

In the opinion of the committee the decision of the Pension Office is not justified by the facts. It is based upon confidential correspondence and special examinations, from which it is clear that the adverse evidence is inspired by personal enmity, the existence of which is clearly brought out in the investigation.

Members of the claimant's family have testified to impairment of vision when he was a child, but they only tell what they thought at the time, without substantiating their statements by expressions of positive knowledge. The

WILLIAM LOGAN.

Mr. SYMES (when his name was reached). I call up the bill (H. R. 8801) granting a pension to William Logan.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William Logan, late a teamster in the Quartermaster's Department, United States Army, with the same rate of pension to which a private soldier would be entitled for like disabilities.

The report (by Mr. Thompson, of California) was read, as follows:

pension to which a private soldier would be entitled for like disabilities.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of California) was read, as follows:
The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8801) granting a pension to William Logan, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:
William Logan enlisted in Company F. Eighteenth Regiment, United States Infantry, and served faithfully until discharged.
He subsequently entered the civil service of the United States as teamster at Fort Lewis, Colo. While thus employed and asleep in his quarters at said fort on the night of December 23, 1882 he was severely weunded by a ball from a rifle in the hands of the corporal of the guard, who was shooting at a dog, the ball penetrating an inch pine board, striking claimant's right heel and left foot, seriously injuring the same, and necessitating two amputations.
Claimant in support of his application to Congress for special-act pension, filed through his attorney, Allen Rutherford, of this city, the testimony of the quartermaster, Lieutenant Campbell, by whom employed, of the officer of the day on the night of the injury, Lieutenant Kerr, Twenty-second Infantry, and of two soldiers of the same command, who were on guard duty on that night, all fully corroborating the claimant's allegations as to the circumstances under which he was wounded. He also filed a recommendation to Congress for pension, signed by all of the officers of the post. These papers were placed in the hands of the member having charge of the bill in the Forty-ninth Congress, but have been lost or misplaced, and can not now be found. Their purport, however, is shown by the brief of the case now in the hands of the attorney, as appears from his certificate on file with your committee.

Since the introduction of the bill under consideration, claimant has procured the affidayit of Charles Boss and Samuel Lowden, late members of Company H, Twenty-second United States Infantry, and now immates of the S

ANNIE BALSER.

Mr. TARSNEY (when his name was reached). I call up the bill (H. R. 11924) granting a pension to Annie Balser. The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place upon the pension-roll, at $1S per month, the name of Annie Balser, the helpless and invalid daughter of William Balser, late a member of Company F. Nineteenth Wisconsin Infantry, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, and pay the same to her legally constituted guardian.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11924) granting a pension to Annie Balser, submit the following report:

The beneficiary under this act is the idiotic daughter of William Balser, late a member of Company F, Nineteenth Wisconsin Infantry. She received a pension on account of the death of her father until she was sixteen years of age. She is now utterly destitute and totally unable to do anything for her own support, requiring the constant care of others. In addition to being an imbecile she has been a cripple from birth. No pension is now paid on account of the death of the soldier. Congress has in many similar cases afforded relief by special act, and your committee report the bill back with the recommendation that it pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR (when his name was called). I call up the bill (H. R. 10301) for the relief of Emily Cross.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-rolls, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emily Cross, mother of Robert S. Cross, late private of Company F, Thirtieth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10301) for the relief of Emily Cross, have considered the same, and beg leave to report:

That the claimant is the widow of Rev. David Cross, who died on the 24th of March, 1888, leaving no estate except a promissory note calling for $100, which will not be due for three years, and a small house and lot which was purchased for $450, on which there is a mortgage for the purchase-money of $275, with interest on the same from 1866, which the deceased had been unable to pay on account of his having no income or means of support sufficient to enable him to pay any part of the interest, his family having been to some extent aided by charity during the last years of his life.

The said claimant and the said Rev. David Cross, her deceased husband, had three sons who enlisted early in the war, and two of them before they were of age, only one of whom lived to return, one having been shot and another having died in the hospital, and the one who returned has always been in such poor health that he was unable to render any assistance to his father or mother. The father and sons were devoted patriots, and although the father was a minister and had been preaching over thirty years he took a superannuated relation in order to let his sons enter the Army, and while two sons laid down their lives in their country's defense the third only came home with an honorable discharge after the war had fully closed.

The sons who were in the service were unmarried and were the only means of support the father and mother had, except the small salary which the father had as a Methodist minister, and this he gave up when his sons entered the Army. That the only means of support that the mother of those sons now has is the pittance which the church and the neighbors give her. The little home which her husband lett is so encumbered with a mortgage that she has given up the idea of redeeming it. No pension was ever paid to any one on account of the services of said three sons. In the opinion of the committee the claimant is an object of charity and benevolence, and deserves to be pensioned on account of her sons, who gave

NANCY HAMILTON.

Mr. THOMAS, of Kentucky (when his name was reached). up the bill (H. R. 10882) granting a pension to Nancy Hamilton. The bill was read, as follows:

Be il enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pensions laws, the name of Nancy Hamilton, widow of David Hamilton, late of Company K, Fourteenth Regiment of Kentucky Vol-

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

This claimant was granted pension by certificate No. 115720, at the rate of $8 per month, commencing February 6, 1867, the date of the death of the soldier, and in 1877 the claim was investigated by an agent of the Pension Office, under the exparte system of investigation, and the name of the pensioner dropped from the rolls, to take effect September 4, 1877, the date of last payment of pension, on evidence adduced by the special agent tending to show that the cause of death of the soldier was not the result of his military service.

An application for restoration of the pension was made, in which the claimant alleged that the disease, inflammatory rheumatism, which was incurred in the service, continued to the time of his death and was the cause thereof, and in corroboration of her allegation she furnished the testimony of the attending physician (Dr. James N. Draper), showing that at time of the soldier's discharge from the service he was suffering from inflammatory rheumatism of the left ankle of a severe and obstinate character, and that the leg suppurated, becoming a running ulcer, until mortification set in.

On January 2, 1866, the affiant amputated the limb, which healed, and the patient was doing very well until January, 1867, when he was taken with strangury; the bladder was in a state of mortification, resulting in death February 6, 1867. The remote cause of death was the amputation of the leg, and the immediate cause from the enlargement of the neck of the bladder from disease of the leg, the result of inflammatory rheumatism.

It is shown by medical testimony that the soldier was sound and healthy at the date of enlistment, and it is shown beyond peradventure that inflammatory rheumatism was contracted in the service and in the line of duty.

The claim for restoration was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that the cause of death was not chargeable to the military service.

The records show that the soldier entered the service December 10, 1861, and served faithfully until September 15, 1

MARINDA WAKEFIELD REED.

Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio. I call up the bill (H. R. 10791) granting pension to Marinda Wakefield Reed.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Marinda Wakefield Reed, widow of William Alexander Reed, deceased, late of Company D, Ninety-first Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, war of 1861.

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. THOMPSON, of Ohio) was read, as follows:

Marinda Wakefield Reed is the widow of William Alexander Reed, deceased, who was a sergeant of Company D, Ninety-first Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, in the war of 1861. Said soldier enlisted July 31, 1862; was mustered out June 24, 1865, and died September 14, 1876. He died of consumption. The widow applied for a pension November 18, 1876, and her application was rejected "on the ground that there is no evidence on file to connect the fatal disease with the service." The records of the Surgeon-General's Office show that he was admitted to the general hospital at Gallipolis, Ohio, July 2, 1864, for treatment for chronic diarrhea, and returned to duty September 22, 1864, and was afterwards admitted to Augur General Hospital, Alexandria, Va., for treatment for intermittent fever October 5, 1864. These diseases were the result of exposure and hardships during the "Lynchburgh raid" in June, 1864.

While in hospital at Alexandria, Va., he was permitted to go home on furlough to vote at the Presidential election in November, 1864, and on his return was readmitted to the bospital January 18, 1865. While on his way home, traveling by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, while descending Cheat Mountain, West Virginia, on the 5th day of November, 1864, the train of cars in which he was riding was thrown from the track, and he was severely injured in the right shoulder and side, and it is clearly shown by the evidence that the disease or which he died resulted from this injury. Indeed, no question was made about the cause of death, but the adverse decision of the Pension Office was put solely upon the general law the claimant would have been entitled to a pension if the soldier had been on sick-leave at the time of the injury; and when we consider had been on of the consense of the purpose of the self-card that the time he was furloughed he was in the hospital sick, and had been sick for some time, owing to exposure and hardships to which he was subjected whil

MRS. SUE B. JOHNSON.

Mr. WHEELER (when Mr. TRACEY's name was called). I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TRACEY] be allowed to call up his bill when my name shall be called, and that I be permitted now to call up a bill.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection that arrangement will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHEELER. I call up the bill (S. 3864) to increase the pension of Mrs. Sue B. Johnson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Mrs. Sue B. Johnson, widow of Gilbert M. L. Johnson, late colonel of the Thirteenth Regiment of Indiana Cavalry and brigadier-general by brevet, to the sum of $50 per month.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3864) to increase the pension of Sue B. Johnson, have had the same under consideration, and adopt the Senate report hereto attached, and amend the bill by striking out the word "fifty" after the word "of" in seventh line, and inserting in lieu thereof "thirty."

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill to increase the pension of Mrs. Sue B. Johnson, have examined the same, and report:

That all the facts and considerations bearing upon or affecting the case of the claimant have been fully set forth in the report of the committee of the House of Representatives on Invalid Pensions, which the committee adopt and make part of this report. The report is as follows:

"They find that the late husband of the beneficiary of the proposed bill, Byt. Brig. Gen. G. M. L. Johnson, was mustered into the military service of the United States on or about the 5th day of October, 1861, as first lieutenant of Company D, Second Regiment of Indiana Volunteer Cavalry, was subsequently promoted to the captaincy of said company, lieutenant-colonel of the Eleventh Regiment Indiana Cavalry, and colonel of the Thirteenth Regiment Indiana Cavalry, and colonel of the Thirteenth Regiment Indiana Cavalry, in all of which positions he was conspicuous for intelligence, zeal, and bravery.

"The committee further find that on the 21st of August, 1862, while serving as captain of his company, the said G. M. L. Johnson had his horse shot in action with the enemy; that his horse fell upon him, whereby Captain Johnson received internal injury of the lower part of the trunk, resulting immediately in inflammation and disease of the bowels and kidneys, and hernia in the left groin, necessitating the constituting a valid title to discharge from the service, being promoted to the grades before mentioned, and was finally made brigadier-general by brevet, upon the recommendations of Generals Slocum and Thomas, the last named stating in his recommendation:

"The committee find further that General M. L. Johnson died from the effect of the injury received in August, 1862, on the 9th day of January, 1871, and his widow was allowed a pension of $20 per month, and subsequently applied for an increase of the pension because of her own personal affliction and necessity, as set forth in the medical certificate of her physician, which the committee beg to incorporate with and make part part of this report:

One eye is almost totally blind, and the vision of the other is very imperfect from myopia, which has existed from early childhood. Her hearing is also very defective, necessitating a near approach to her with loud talking in order for her to understand. Some nine years since she sustained a severe fall, which disabled her for five or six months, and more recently, about a year or more ago, she was thrown from a horse and was again severely injured for some time. The daughter, Belle B., is a very frail, delicate young lady, and has organic disease of the heart, which is strongly exhibited upon the slightest exertion. This trouble has existed from early infancy, and for a number of years past I have looked for her to die under one of her severe palpitations. Both are in feeble, delicate health.

"In view of the fact that General Johnson continued in active service after incurring the injury in 1862, and that his efforts in the service of the Government undoubtedly aggravated his affliction, increased his disability, and hastened his death, the committee are fully satisfied that the pension now paid his widow for the disability incurred by her late husband in the grade of captain is less than the rate of pension to which she is equitably entitled, and that the strict construction of the law which, very properly, governs the administration of the Pension Bureau, forbids the allowance of her claim for an increase of pension, it is eminently proper that Con-ress should intervene to secure her the increased pension to which she is equitably entitled.

Mr. WHEELER (before the reading of the report was concluded) This report is very long. This bill as passed by the Senate granted this lady a pension of $50 a month. It has been reported by the committee of this House with an amendment reducing the amount to $30 a month. She is the widow of a general. I ask that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

MEMBER. Do you propose to make the pension $50 a month? Mr. WHEELER. No; I ask that the bill be passed with the amendment recommended by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the further reading of the report will be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

The amendment recommended by the committee, to strike out "$50 per month" and insert "$30 per month," was read, and agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

DANIEL M. MAULDING.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask the consideration of the bill (H. R. 717) granting an increase of pension to Daniel M. Maulding.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Daniel M. The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H.R.717) granting an increase of pension to Daniel M. Maulding, late captain of Company H, Sixth Illinois Cavalry, submit the following report:

It appears that about October 15, 1884, Captain Maulding, while in pursuit of the enemy, near Waynesburgh, Tenn., was thrown from his horse, his foot catching in the stirrup and dragging him some distance, from which hurt resulted hernis or rupture of the right side.

The claimant is now drawing $20 per month, but as his disability is "total," from the testimony of all the examining boards, and his hernia is not reducible, as shown by the testimony from not only the medical boards but from several other reputable physicians, the committee believe the increase should be granted. While the evidence is not all clear that the hernia is complicated, Dr. M. C. Dale, a reputable physician and surgeon of Hamilton County, Illinois, swears that the hernia is complicated, and he is corroborated in this by Dr. V. S. Benson, of McLeansborough, Ill. These physicians both testify that Captain Maulding's disability is equal to the loss of a hand or foot.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

EDWIN W. WARNER.

Mr. TURNER, of Kansas. I call up the bill (S. 3561) granting a pension to Edwin W. Warner.

The bill was read, as follows:

[Senate Report No. 2276, Fiftieth Congress, first session.]

Edwin W. Warner was a private in Company A, Thirteenth Agiment Michigan Infantry. He enlisted December 6, 1861; was discharged for disability September 20, 1862; made application for pension August 6, 1867. The Commissioner of Pensions' letter of transmission says:

"Said claim was rejected July 6, 1883, upon the ground that there is no competent evidence to show that disease of spine was contracted in the service and line of duty; that there is no record or competent evidence to show that disease of eyes was contracted in the service, and that insanity developed since discharge, and is believed to be a result of spinal disease."

There is competent and amply sufficient proof in the first and most important place to show that he was sound when he entered the service.

The report of the Adjutant-General says:

"Edwin W. Warner, late of Company A, Thirteenth Michigan Volunteers, was enlisted in the Veteran Reserve Corps June 18, 1863, at Milwaukee, Wis., for three years. Disability when enlisted 'spinal irritation contracted while in the service."

This is record and competent testimony, positively contradicting the Pension was enlisted in the Veteran Reserve Corps June 18, 1863, at Milwaukee, Wis., for three years. Disability when enlisted 'spinal irritation contracted while in the service.'"

This is record and competent testimony, positively contradicting the Pension Office assertion that "there is no competent testimony to show that disease of spine was contracted in the service and line of duty." Therefore if the record is true—and it is so accepted by the committee—and the insanity is the result of the spinal disease, as the Commissioner in his letter declares, then the committee is justified in the unqualified conclusion that spinal disease was incurred in the service and line of duty, and that his present hopeless condition of insanity is a result of spinal disease, and that both are due to his soldier life. Barnard Vosburg was the captain of this soldier's company. He is a respectable resident of Kalamazoo, Mich., and testifies that Warner was a sound, healthy man at time of enlistment and muster-in.

Henry E. Giddings, first sergeant of the company, swears:

"That on or about the 1st of March to the 20th of April, 1862, they were pushing through Kentucky and Tennessee; that at and after the battle of Shiloh they were without tents or blankets for about two weeks, during which time it rained nearly or quite every day and night, and the said Edwin W. Warner contracted the disease mentioned in his discharge."

Hyland Raymond and other old and respectable residents of Racine, Wis., testify to their knowledge of him before and since the war, to his prior good health, and to the progress of his disabilities during more than twenty years.

Dr. Teegarten, one of the oldest and most respected elitizes of Racine, testifies to his acquaintance with the soldier since 1856; to his prior soundness; to his complete breaking down since his discharge; to his having spinal disease, impaired vision, catarrh, and spinal affection. He says:

"Dr. Welcott, United States surgeon at Milwaukee, told me he had treated him for spinal disease soon was sent to the insane asylum, and adds that since he left the service he has been permanently unfit and unable to support himself.

Dr. Garlock testifies to having treated him; knew of his suffering from spinal irritation, dyspepsia, and sleeplessness. His mental condition was the most irritation, dyspepsia, and sleeplessness. His mental condition was the most serious.

This case has been under consideration in the Pension Office since August, 1867—over twenty years. A large amount of testimony has been filed, all of which is from reputable citizens of Racine, Wis., and all of which is conclusive as to the merits of the claim. Eight special examinations have been made, none of which have been productive of benefit or injury to the claim. One of the special examiners in his report says:

"Public sentiment in Racine is entirely favorable to the claim, and no one raises a voice against it in any way. For my part I have not the slightest doubt that it is meritorious. There has been some effort to injure the claim by charges of immoral practices on the part of the soldier, but they are mere hear-say scandal without foundation."

The difficulty in the way of arriving at a favorable decision by the Pension Office seems to be the short interval between the soldier's discharge and his enlistment in the Veteran Reserve Corps. In the opinion of the committee the resulting and progressive disabilities are clearly proven from the time of discharge to the development of mental irresponsibility. The record evidence of the War Department identifies "spinal irritation contracted in the service." The Pension Office declares that "insanity developed since discharge, and is believed to be a result of spinal disease." The war record is correct, the Pension Office is correct, and the case is proved.

There can be no question as to the merits of this case, accepting the abundant testimony of numerous reputable witnesses and the authority of the War Department and the Commissioner of Pensions.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recom-

LEONARD SCHAEFER.

Mr. VANCE. I ask the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12006) granting a pension to Leonard Schaefer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provision and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Leonard Schaefer, late a private in Company C, Twenty-fifth Regiment Connecticut Infantry Volunteers, at the rate of $10 per month, for rheumatism and gunshot wound of abdomen, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving, to commence from the passage of this act.

The report (by Mr. FRENCH) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. FRENCH) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12006) granting a pension to Leonard Schaefer, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

Leonard Schaefer is now a pensioner at the rate of $i per month for gunshot wound of abdomen. He also claims pension for rheumatism, alleged to have been contracted while under treatment for the wound at University Hospital, New Orleans, La., from April 17 to July 25, 1863. He was discharged from the service August 26, 1863. This claim has been rejected by the Pension Burcau on the ground that there is no record or any other evidence of rheumatism in the service. While this is true, yet there is an abundance of testimony showing that the soldier at the time of his discharge and ever since has been a sufferer from rheumatism, and medical examination by the Springfield (Mass.) board shows its present existence. From the evidence in the case it appears that the disability from rheumatism was particularly severe immediately after discharge, claimant being then confined for some time to his bed by reason of said disease.

After a careful examination of all the evidence in the case, your committee are of opinion that pensioner should be rated for rheumatism as well as for the wound of abdomen, and therefore report favorably on the accompanying bill and ask that it do pass, amended, however, by striking out all after the word "volunteer" in line 7, and insert therein instead the words "and pay him a pension for rheumatism, in addition to the pension now received for wound of abdomen;" also amend the title of the bill by inserting, after the word "granting," the words "an increase of;" so as to read: "granting an increase of pension to Leonard Schaefer."

The amendments recommended by the committee in the concluding paragraph of the report were read and agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

FLORENCE COURTNEY COCHNOWER.

Mr. OWEN (when Mr. VANDEVER'S name was called). The gentleman from California [Mr. VANDEVER] is ill to-night and unable to be here. He asked me to request that the House indulge him by permitting me to call up a bill for him in his absence.

Mr. DOCKERY. I hope that will be done. Members all know that the gentleman from California is not in robust health and is unable to attend evening sessions.

Several MEMBERS. That is right.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole proceeded to the consideration of the bill (S. 1459) granting a pension to Florence Courtney Cochnower.

The bill was read, as follows:

Bett enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Florence Courtney Cochnower, at the rate of $12 per month, for services in the field and as a nurse during the war of the rebellion.

Mr. FINLEY. Mr. Chairman, how does this bill come up?
The CHAIRMAN. It has been called up by unanimous consent for the gentleman from California [Mr. VANDEVER].

Mr. FINLEY. I did not understand the Chair as putting the request for unanimous consent, although I was listening. This is precisely a similar request to one which I objected to awhile ago.

Mr. OWEN. I trust the gentleman from Kentucky will not object.
The CHAIRMAN. The question of unanimous consent was submitted, and the Chair heard no objection.
Mr. FINLEY. The Chair will pardon me; but I did not hear the Chair put the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not responsible for the gentleman's defect of hearing.

The report (by Mr. French) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. French) was read, as follows:

The committee have examined the papers on file in this case, and concur in the Senate report recommending the passage of the bill, as follows:

"This bill is to pension Mrs. Florence Courtney Cochnower for services as nurse during the war of the rebellion, in the field and in hospitals. It is evident from the numerous testimonials filed with the committee that this is a very meritorious case. In support of it we have the testimony of General Rosecraus; W.O. Osgood, late provost-marshal at Nashville, Tenn.; ex-Governor Palmer, W.O. in this particular reference to her good work:

"At the battle of Franklin, ere the carnage had reached its height, she was everywhere an angel of mercy among our wounded soldiers, binding up their wounds and nursing them. She subsequently endeared herself to hundreds at the hospitals at Nashville, and comes to the sanitary fair introduced by letters of the highest commendation from General Thomas and officials connected with the Sanitary Commission.

"Her services in conveying important information, at the risk of her life and liberty, were commended by General Thomas in the strongest terms. There is a mass of testimony in her favor which the committee do not deem it necessary to embody in this report.

"The bill is reported favorably, with an amendment striking out the word 'twenty-five' and inserting the word 'twelve,' at the end of the sixth line, with a recommendation that it do pass."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY A. SELBACH.

Mr. WEAVER. I call up the bill (H. R. 11466) granting a pension to Mary A. Selbach.
The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place the name of Mary A. Selbach on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. YODER) was read, as follows:

subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. Yoder) was read, as follows:

Mary A. Selbach is the widow of Gustavus Selbach, who enlisted September 8, 1864, in Company M, Ninth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Cavalry, and was discharged June 13, 1855. He was disabled in the service and was drawing pension from the Government at the time of his death. He was pensioned for disease of ears. The widow's claim was rejected solely on the ground that the disease of ears. The widow's claim was rejected solely on the ground that the disease of ears. The widow's claim was rejected solely on the ground that the disease which caused soldier's death was not attributable to his service and had no connection with the disease from which he died. The surgeons who attended him during his last illness, and who appeared to be scientific men and medical experts, testify as follows:

"We are practicing physicians, and have been acquainted with said soldier for about seven years; intimately acquainted with him as a friend and as his family physician during this time. The immediate cause of his death was pneumonia, although he had been suffering from suppuration in his middle ear (ottis) and disease of the kidneys to an extent which greatly undermined his health, and that he succumbed to an attack of pneumonia, which in a person of ordinary good health would not have been considered serious. There is no doubt in our mind that the diseases from which said G. Selbach suffered before the occurrence of the pneumonia were the true causes of his death, and that they incapacitated him to a great extent from properly attending to his business." (Signed, A. Schloemiich, M. D.; W. Meacher, M. D.)

This is the only medical evidence on file in the Pension Office bearing on the cause of death, in which these doctors say that the soldier died from a slight attack of pneumonia, which in an ordinary healthy person would not have been serious. This clearly shows, in the opinion of your committee, that, had it not been for

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY GRAY.

Mr. TRACEY called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6535) granting a pension to Mary Gray

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Mary Gray, mother of Charles R. Gray, deceased, late a private in Company I, Fifty-first Regiment New York Veteran Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) was read, as follows:

The claimant, Mary Gray, is the mother of John R. Gray, late private in Company I, Fifty-first New York Cavalry, who died while a prisoner of war. The claim was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that it was not proven that claimant was dependent upon the soldier for support at the time the soldier died. This conclusion was arrived at, notwithstanding the fact that testimony of very strong character had been filed in the claimant's favor. There is positive evidence now that at present Mrs. Gray is very poor, and she is eighty-two years old.

years old.
Your committee believe, without questioning the decision of the Pension Office, her present condition warrants their making a favorable report, and they recommend that the bill pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY A. LONG.

Mr. WHITE, of Indiana, called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 11993) granting a pension to Mary A. Long.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisiors and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary A. Long, widow of William W. Long, late of Company D, Fifth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. HUNTER) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11993) granting a pension to Mary A. Long, have had the same under consideration, and make the following report:

It appears that in September, 1861, William W. Long was enrolled as second lieutenant of Company D. Fith Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and while serving in that capacity at Columbia, Ky., he contracted measles, on or about the 1st of December, 1861, which settled on his lungs and caused his death on the 28th day of March, 1875. This resulting lung trouble from the measles rendered him unfit for military duty, and prevented his muster into the United States service.

His widow, Mary A. Long, made application for pension on account of the death of her husband from the cause referred to, but the claim was rejected on the ground that the soldier was never mustered into the United States service.

Edwin Vincent, who is a resident of Hiseville, Ky., and who was first lieutenant of said soldier's company, makes the following sworn statement in the case:

"STATE OF KENTUCKY, County of Clinton, ss:

"STATE OF KENTUCKY, County of Clinton, ss:

Ed win Vincent, late a first lieutenant of Company D, Fifth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, whose post-office address is Hiseville, Ky, age fifty-eight years, deposes and says that he was well and personally acquainted with William W. Long: has known him for forty years, and know that prior to his entering the service he was a stout, able-bodied man, and was free from any disease, and especially lung disease.
"Affiant further states that while at Columbia, Ky., on or about December, 1861, said Long contracted measles, which settled on his lungs, and grew worse until the day of his death, which occurred on March 28, 1875.

"Affiant states that he lived a neighbor to said Long, and went frequently to see him during his last sickness, and knows that he died of lung disease, the result of measles.

"J. J. SIMPSON,
"Clerk Cumberland County Court,"

George W. Wright and William Farr, who were members of said Long's company and regiment, furnished sworn statements in the case, and are, in substance, the same as the foregoing affidavit of Lieutenant Vincent.

In view of these facts, your committee feel that this is a meritorious claim, and report back the bill with a favorable recommendation.

Amend by striking out "private" after the word "late" in the sixth line, and insert in lieu thereof the words "second lieutenant."

The amendment of the committee was agreed to; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARY H. NICHOLSON.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I call up Senate bill 1831, granting a pension to Mary Heap Nicholson, and desire to have an order, which I send up to the Clerk to be read, recommended to the House for adoption. That is, I ask the order now made as to the House bill be extended to the Senate bill.

Mr. CHEADLE. I call attention to the fact that the gentleman from New York is getting somewhat mixed on this question.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I am not getting mixed, as the gentleman will see. I will prove to the House, I think, that I am on the right track. I ask the order made as to House bill 6317 in regard to this same pension shall apply to the Senate bill which I have called My motion is that the same order shall be extended to the Senate bill; that is, that the bill may be reported to the House with the recommendation that the same order shall be entered in reference to it which was entered in reference to the House bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the order,
The Clerk read as follows:

A bill for the relief of Mary H. Nicholson. Previous question ordered; post-poned to May 28.

May 26, 1888.—Postponed to June 20.

June 20, 1888.—Ordered postponed to July 12, at 8 o'clock p. m.; thirty minutes'

The CHAIRMAN. The order which has just been read does not relate to the bill called up by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. If the Chair will indulge me for a moment, I ask that the bill (S. 1831) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary Heap Nicholson be reported to the House, with the recommendation that the same order be entered as to it; that is, that the order which was postponed to May 28, and on May 26 postponed to June 20, and on June 20, 1888, postponed to July 12, at 8 o'clock p. m., with thirty minutes for debate, shall be extended to the Senate bill, or, in other words, that the Senate bill shall be substituted for the House bill, and that that order shall apply to the Senate bill as it now applies to the House bill.

Mr. McMILLIN. This committee can not dictate to the House what course it will take.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. But it can make a recommendation to the House as to the course it will take.

Mr. McMILLIN. It can do so, of course, as to this bill, but not as to any other. We can not make such an order concerning a bill not before the committee.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. It has been done, and an order of the same kind has been made as to a similar bill, as I have shown.

The CHAIRMAN. But when that order was made it was made in reference to a bill under consideration by the committee.

Mr. DOCKERY. An order could be made in the nature of a recom-mendation to the House.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. That is just what I am asking. The order in reference to the bill (H. R. 6317) for the relief of Mary H. Nicholson, whereby the previous question was ordered and thirty minutes' debate allowed, I move shall be extended to this Senate bill 1831.

Mr. McMILLIN. This committee can make a recommendation in reference to the bill now before it, but it can not enter any order in reference to a bill which is now in the House. The point I wish to make is that we can not recommend what shall be done with regard to a bill not on the Calendar.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let me call the attention of the gentleman from New York to the fact that these bills have been already considered in the committee, as I am informed by the Clerk, and an order made with reference to both of them. Hence any action we take now in commit-tee would be of no avail with regard to them. They are in the House and on the Calendar of unfinished business.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. I was not aware that any order had been made with reference to this bill S. 1831.

Mr. DOCKERY. The gentleman will find it on the Calendar of unfinished business.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Very well, then; I would prefer to have it in that position, as I understand when the previous question has been ordered on it it is privileged.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is correct.

BENJAMIN E. SNYDER.

Mr. WHITING, of Michigan, called up the bill (H. R. 10780) for the relief of Benjamin E. Snyder.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Benjamin E. Snyder, late of Company L, Fifth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery.

The report (by Mr. CHIPMAN) was read, as follows:

10780) for the relief of Beujamin E. Snyder, have examined the same, and submit the following report:
Benjamin E. Snyder was a private in Company L. Fifth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery; was enrolled on the 25th day of August, 1864, and the regimental return for October 12, 1864, reports him a recruit from depot, joined October 12, 1864, absent on detatched duty March and April, 1865, and mustered out with company June 26, 1865.

Soon after his arrival at Harper's Ferry, Maryland Heights, in the month of October, 1864, where the company of which he was a member was under military drill, he was one of eight men in attendance on a heavy siege-piece, it being his first drill with cannon. He had at that time no instructions as to his manner of standing at the discharge of a gun, and on the first discharge was standing squarely upon his feet in an upright condition, whereas he should have been instructed by the officer in charge to relax the muscles of his legs, stoop, or partially kneel. The result of the first discharge and the position he had assumed was that he was deafened by the concussion and thrown violently to the ground.

had assumed was that he was deafened by the concussion and thrown violently to the ground.

He concealed his deafness as far as possible from his comrades, for fear, as he claims, that he would be laughed at for his ignorance.

The regiment to which he belonged was recruited about 100 miles from his home, and he joined his company unacquainted, and at the time of this accident knew but partially, if at all, the members of the squad who were under drill with him. Consequently he does not remember their names and can not secure their evidence, though he has searched diligently for members of his company who might remember the circumstances of this first drill.

His hearing is shown to have been good before and at the time of entering the service, but immediately on his return from his short term of duty, it is shown, by good and reliable witnesses, that he was quite deaf, and he has remained so ever since.

Claimant swears that he was compelled to give up his former occupation on account of his deafness. This statement is substantiated by another witness.

Claim was rejected by the Pension Bureau because claimant could not furnish evidence that said disability originated in service. His hearing is shown to have been good before and very bad immediately after his service, and he reasonably accounts for his loss of hearing in service and line of duty. It is also well known that the branch of service this soldier was in—the artillery—is the frequent cause of deafness of a more or less aggravated character. When, too, a party enters the military service physically sound, and immediately after discharge therefrom he is shown to be diseased, the natural and legal inference, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is that his disease was contracted in the service and line of duty.

We therefore believe that the bill to pension this soldier should be passed, and so recommend.

so recommend.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLES SCHULER.

Mr. WHITE, of New York. Mr. Chairman, I now ask consideration of the bill (H. R. 11923) granting a pension to Charles Schuler. The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, directed to place upon the pension-roll, at $18 per month, the name of Charles Schuler, late a member of Company K, Fourth Minnesota Infantry, he being mentally and physically incapacitated, subject to the provisions of the pension laws, and pay the same to his lawfully constituted guardian.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. Morkell.) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H.R. 11923) granting a pension to Charles Schuler, submit the following report:

The beneficiary under the bill was a member of Company K. Fourth Minnesota Infantry, and served during the larger part of the war. The evidence submitted to your committee shows that the claimant is now suffering from paralysis agitans to such a degree as to be mentally and physically incapacitated from the performance of any labor. He has never made any application for a pension, and his mental condition has been such for many years that he could not do so.

not do so.

It is shown that he was a sound, healthy man when he went into the service; that he served long and faithfully; that he participated in the battles before Vicksburg, and soon after had a long and severe sickness; that he left the Army broken down physically, with symptoms of the disease which is now afflicting him. He is now utterly destitute and is supported by those upon whom he has no legal claim. These facts are fully established by the evidence of Hon. J. L. MACDONALD, M. C., F. E. Du Toits, F. Grimes, and Dr. John A. McDonald.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HANNAH M'KEE.

Mr. WICKHAM called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 6886) granting a pension to Hannah McKee.
The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Hannah McKee, mother of John H. McKee, late of Company F, Twelfth Regiment Indiana Volunteers; Joseph A. McKee, late of Company I, Fifteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry; George B. McKee, late of Battery A, Fourth United States Artillery; and Oplan H. McKee, late of Company D, Fourth Ohio Volunteer Infantry.

The report (by Mr. Thompson, of Ohio) was read, as follows:

Your committee do not believe that they can any better bring to the knowledge of the House the merits of this case than to give the statement made by the claimant in her petition, as follows:

edge of the House the merits of this case than to give the statement made by the claimant in her petition, as follows:

"I had four sons enlisted in the war, as follows: Joseph A. McKee, Company I, Fifteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry; John H. McKee, Company F, Twelfth Regiment Indians Volunteers; Ossian H. McKee, Company D, Fourth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry; and George B. McKee, Battery A, Fourth United States Artillery. I claim the war to have been the breaking up of my family of boys. Those four sons whom I had reared almost to manhood and whom alone I could look to for support in my old days were taken from me. John H. McKee fell a victim to heart disease while in his country's service, and iles buried near Bowling Green, Ky. Joseph A. McKee went West, and I do not know to-day whether he is dead or alive,

"Ossian H. McKee was made a cripple for life by a bullet received in his left elbow at Chancellorsville, and which could never be extracted. George B. McKee was shot through the foot, being also rendered a cripple for life, having participated in seventeen regular engagements, as recorded on the back of his discharge, which included Antietam, Fredericksburgh, and Gettysburgh. These sons, whether married or single, were the only persons I could ever expect to look to for my support, and the fact of their having married has debarred me heretofore from obtaining any relief under existing pension laws, although they have long since filled untimely graves from wounds and diseases contracted while engaged in the cause of freedom. The boys all having left home I can safely attribute as partly the cause of my husband's death, who died in 1862.

"I can say, further, that although I have always been very poor I never was the one to receive aid, nor did I ever make application to the township trustees, who had a fund for the relief of such cases as mine at the time of the war, and it is now only in an extreme case of necessity that I appeal for aid from the hands of this (so-called) magnanimous Governmen

"HANNAH MCKEE."

It can not be doubted that the war destroyed the support which the applicant would otherwise have had in her old age. She has no means of support and no daughter, and has scant assistance from a remaining son, who, although kind and willing, is himself poor and burdened with a family of his own. This patriotic woman laid all her jewels upon the altar of her country's salvation. Can that country do less, in the day of its restoration and prosperity, than to afford the pittance named during the few years that remain to her?

The committee recommend the following amendment: Strike out "Opian," in line 9, and insert "Ossian;" also add to the end of the bill the words "at the rate of $30 per month."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to. The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

STERNE H. FOWLER.

Mr. WILKINSON called up for consideration the bill (S. 2924) to increase the pension of Sterne H. Fowler.

The bill is as follows:

Be it macted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Sterne H. Fowler to $16 per month, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, in lieu of the pension now pat I him.

The report (by Mr. BLISS) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (8. 2924) granting an increase of pension to Sterne H. Fowler, have considered the same, and report it back to the House recommending its passage.

Your committee have had before them the papers on file in the pension claim, and have also considered the testimony filed immediately before them, and the statement of facts in the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions are correctly stated as follows:

"[Senate Report No. 1821, Fiftieth Congress, first session.] "The claimant served in the war with Mexico during its whole duration as lieutenant in regular Army. He had before that time served as a private for three years. He resigned his commission in the regular Army in 1857 on account of chronic rheumatism, from which he has ever since suffered. His disease is of the most prostrating and virulent character. His disease was contracted in the service and he was treated therefor unsuccessfully while in the tracted in the service and he was treated therefor unsuccessfully while in the same,

"He is now seventy-six years old, broken down, unfitted for labor of any kind, according to the testimony submitted to us, both lay and medical. He was present and commanded a company at the battles of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma, on the 8th and 9th of May, 1846; also at Monterey. He was also actively engaged at the siege and capture of Vera Cruz, and was brevetted as captain and major successively for gallant and meritorious conduct in the battles of Churabusco and Molino del Rey.

"In 1862, residing at the time in Minnesota, he served as lieutenant-colonel of volunteers and as acting assistant adjutant-general upon the staff of General Sibley in the war against the Sioux Indians until the close of hostilities. He now resides in Richmond County, Dakota. His wife is sixty-eight years old and a helpless invalid. Both are very poor, without means of support, except the pension of 85 per month now drawn by him under the Mexican pension law.

"We think this pension, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, ought to be increased. We therefore recommend the passage of the bill, with the following amendments: In the fifth line of the bill fill the blank before the word 'dollars' with the word 'sixteen,' and insert the words 'in lieu of the pension now paid him' after the word 'laws' in the sixth line of the bill."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recom-

CATHARINE MUTZ.

Mr. ADAMS. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 7123) for the relief of Catharine Mutz.

The bill is as follows:

Bettenacted, etc., That the Secretary be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Catharine Mutz, widow of Max Mutz, late of Company H, Sixth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery.

The report (by Mr. LANE) was read, as follows:

The committee have considered this case, and find from the evidence the following facts:

Catharine Mutz is the widow of Max Mutz, late a private in Company H. Sixth Regiment New York Heavy Artillery; an applicant for widow's pension, No.

Regiment New York Heavy Artillery; an applicant for widow's pension, No. 256254.

Max Mutz enlisted in Company H, Sixth New York Heavy Artillery, August 1, 1863, for three years, and was honorably discharged August 24, 1865.

The soldier contracted lung, kidney, and bladder disease while in the service; he entered the soldiers' home in Chicago November 19, 1865, and suffered with lung, kidney, and bladder disease from year to year until March 28, 1875, when he died from bladder and kidney disease.

The widow's claim for pension was rejected by the Pension Office February 28, 1884, on the ground of there being no record in the War Department of soldier's fatal disease, and claimant being unable to furnish testimony of the incurrence of same in the service.

The widow has been unable to find an officer or comrade who served with her husband who could testify as to the origin of soldier's disabilities in the service, but she has furnished the testimony of two fellow-workmen of soldier, who have testified that they saw soldier when he first came home from the Army in July, 1865, at which time he had a bad cough and kidney trouble; that he entered the soldiers' home at Chicago, where he remained for six weeks; that subsequently and at different times he worked in a lumber-yard with them, but could not work more than every other day, and sometimes not for days at a time, on account of his cough and kidney trouble; that this condition of things lasted until his death, in 1875.

Dr. R. C. Hamill, the president of the soldiers' home in Chicago, has testified that Max Mutz was admitted to the home November, 1865, and that the books show that on November 19, 1865, he had an attack of pneumonia, and again in December, 1865, the books show soldier was treated for disability.

There is no doubt but that soldier's disabilities, which caused his death, were contracted in the service. The widow is an old German woman, suffering with rheumatism, and unable at the present time to earn a living by washing and scrubbing, as in form

Mr. ADAMS. There seems to be a clerical error in this bill, by the omission of the words "of the Interior" after the word "Secretary, in the third line. I move therefore that the bill be amended so as to read, "That the Secretary of the Interior," etc.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ESTER GAVEN.

Mr. YODER called up for consideration the bill (H. R. 12303) granting a pension to Ester Gaven.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place upon the pension-roll the name of Ester Gaven, mother of Bernard Gaven, late private in Company D, Seventy-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. YODER) was read, as follows:

The report (by Mr. Yoder) was read, as follows:

Esther Gaven is the mother of Bernard Gaven, a private of Company D, Seventy-first Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, now deceased. This dependent mother applied for a pension on account of her son's death, having been the result of disease contracted by him while in the service and in line of duty. By the papers on file in the Pension Department and by the records in the Surgeon-General's Office the fact that the solder was sound and free from any disability when he entered the service and that he contracted the disease which she alleges was the cause of his death has been clearly established.

The only question involved in this case, and the reason for its rejection in the Pension Department, is the fact that there is no direct evidence on file to prove the immediate cause of his death. There is nothing to prove the contrary, he having been sick a long time, suffering from chronic diarrhea and disease of the stomach, the disability alleged for pension; and they being poor, had, it appears, no regular family physician whoe ould testify to the cause of his death. The fact that Mrs. Gaven is a dependent mother, and that he contributed to her support, is clearly established. She is quite old and feeble, destitute and broken-down in health, and has become a charge on the community in which she lives. If she does not obtain this relief, which, in the opinion of your committee, the Government owes to her, she will soon be an inmate of an almshouse.

The record also shows that her son was a brave and good soldier, and that he contracted the disease alleged in line of duty there is no doubt. In fact, if this missing link of evidence of the attending physician during his flast sickness or some other competent evidence could be procured as to the immediate cause of his death, the case would have been allowed or could yet be allowed in the Pengion Office. But your committee is informed, and from personal knowledge of this case we are satisfied, that under the circumstances it would be impossible for her to furnish the missing link in the testimony. The priest of her church and prominent citizens of the community in which she lives have interested themselves a great deal in this distressing and, as we believe, meritorious case, but have been unable to furnish the necessary evidence to plainly prove the immediate cause of his death.

This old and destitute mother has excited the sympathy of the entire community in which she lives. She bears a good reputation as a pious, Christian woman, and is left entirely without friends or relatives who are legally bound to support her, and your committee is of the opinion that it would be a matter of great injustice to refuse her this small pittance and allowance, which in our opinion is due her, for the reason she can not furnish the necessary evidence which would clearly entitle her to receive a pension in the Pension Department. It has been said that by furnishing the necessary evidence she could prosecute her claim in the Pension Department, which is true, and after an unceasing effort by those who are now supporting her and who have taken a great interest in her behalf, it is clearly demonstrated to your committee that she can never furnish the necessary affidavits. Your committee is of the opinion that this is one of the cases wherein special legislation is peculiarly demanded, and that it is a case of merit, and unanimously recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is now getting quite late, and perhaps we had better rise in order to be able to pass the bills which have been considered in committee.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Iowa. Let us go on a little further. I have a bill here I want to call up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. KILGORE. I think the report ought to be read.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the report,

Mr. KILGORE (to Mr. HOLMAN). Does the report recommend an amendment reducing the amount from fifty to twenty-five dollars per and it is a meritorious case.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) is as follows:

The committee on Invalid Pensious, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12047) granting an increase of pension to George Colwell, have had the same under consideration and beg leave to submit the following report:

George Colwell served as private in Company I, Eighty-third Regiment Indiana Volunteers, from August 10, 1862, to June 1, 1865. While on foraging duty in January, 1864, near Larkinsville, Ala., he was bitten in left leg by a dog, on account of which injury he now receives a pension at the rate of $2 per month. It appears that in September, 1885, he suffered from a strain or probably dislocation of the knee of the previously injured leg, which, in connection with the original injury, has resulted in a disability rated by the examining surgeon at third grade. The Pension Office does not consider the present scrious disability as in any way connected with the service, and therefore rates for the bite only.

The evidence shows that the bite was quite serious. Claimant was under treatment therefor nearly three months, and ever thereafter the leg was weak. In September, 1865, the wound again opened up, confining him to his bed for several months. The wound from the dog-bite is described by the surgeons as about 4 inches above left ankle, in calf of leg, soft parts purple for 3 or 4 inches around the scar. Abscesses formed from time to time after the bite, as is clearly shown from the numerous cicatrices from ankle to knee. Whether the injury in 1885 was or was not a direct or indirect result of the original injury can not be clearly demonstrated, but, in view of the fact that the leg was greatly weakened from the army injury, its measurement being considerably less than its fellow member, as shown by the examination, it may be safely assumed that the former was at least indirectly connected with the latter.

Again, it may be held from a medical standpoint that the slight injury in 1885 would not have resulted in the serious disabi

The amendment was agreed to, and the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HOLMAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LOUISA PROVOST.

Mr. GALLINGER obtained unanimous consent to call up for consideration the bill (S. 1884) granting a pension to Louisa Provost.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Louisa Provost, widow of Peter Provost, late a soldier in Company B, Seventeenth Vermont.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the report. This is a meritorious case.

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) is as follows:

There was no objection.

The report (by Mr. GALLINGER) is as follows:

The committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1884) granting a pension to Louisa Provost, having considered the same, report as follows:

This is a Senate bill, the report in the case being as follows:

"The soldier rendered brave and efficient service for some two years, during which time, at the battle of Spottsylvania, he was severely wounded in the left ankle by a shell and taken prisoner. He remained a prisoner for about three months and was then exchanged. This wound never healed, and for it he was pensioned until his death, which occurred in 1882.

"The only question in the case is whether the wound was the cause of death. It appears from the statement of his attending physician, Dr. Fisk, of Roxbury, Vt., a regular practitioner in good standing, that thirty-six hours before his death he found the soldier in a cramped and doubled-up condition, suffering great pain from the wounded foot, which was greatly swollen and inflamed. It appears that the wound was ragged and dark-colored, with symptoms of mortification. All these symptoms continued to grow worse until his death. The inflammation in the bowels became specially aggravated, and the cause of his death is spoken of as inflammation of the bowels. We can see no reason to question the opinion of his attending physician that the wound was the direct cause of the inflammation and death."

Not being fully satisfied with the Senate report, your committee carefully examined the papers on file in the Pension Office in this case.

The certificate of the attending physician, evidently written by an ignorant man, is something of a curiosity, and it is difficult from that paper to intelligently determine the real facts in the case. It does appear, however, that the wound was a very ugly one; that on the day of soldier's death it was the cause of death.

As the bill is for a widow in needy circumstances, your committee give her the benefit of whatever doubt there may be in

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GALLINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

And then (at 10 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

statement in regard to the condition of these bills, so that the Senate can proceed with a full understanding of the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been taken up by vote of the Senate, the Senator from Missouri is entitled to the floor.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, on February 1, 1888, by direction of the Committee on the Judiciary, I reported Senate bill 270, Calendar No. 203, which provides for the establishment of a United States court in the Indian Territory at the town of Muscogee, with jurisdiction over all criminal matters within that Territory and with ample provision for all the machinery of a United States court. for all the machinery of a United States court.

Pending the consideration of that bill, after it was put upon the Calendar, the House of Representatives passed and sent to us House bill 1874, which provides also for the establishment of a United States court in the Indian Territory, but with a limited jurisdiction, much less than that provided in Senate bill 270, and which provides also that certain counties in the State of Texas shall become a portion of this judicial district, these counties being specified in the bill.

To that bill, House bill 1874, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr.

JONES] proposes an amendment, which is also pending. That amendment establishes a court in the Indian Territory, annexes certain counties in the State of Texas to that court, and enlarges the criminal jurisdiction of the court, extending it to a number of crimes and felonies which are not now punishable in the Indian Territory.

This is a brief outline of the condition of the bills at the present time.

The Committee on the Judiciary reported back House bill 1874 with the Senate bill as an amendment, striking out all of the House bill and substituting in lieu thereof the Senate bill which was read yester-

Mr. PLATT. The same bill?
Mr. VEST. The same bill which was reported by the Judiciary Committee unanimously, with one exception, the Senator from Texas [Mr. Coke] not entirely opposing the bill, but not agreeing to support it in the Senate if he should see proper to do otherwise.

That is the condition of the matter now as it stands before the Senate, and what the Judiciary Committee recommend is that all of the House bill be stricken out and the Senate bill substituted for it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri proposes to amend as follows

Mr. BERRY. That was read, I think, yesterday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Jones] had already moved an amendment which was in substance House bill 1874, which is the pending question and will accomplish the same purpose as that desired by the Senator from Missouri. om Missouri.
Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The amendment I propose is not in substance the House bill.

Mr. VEST. It is not the same. Mr. PLATT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Arkansas was to the Senate bill which was under consideration yesterday.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The situation is this: The House bill is before us for consideration. The Judiciary Committee propose to amend by striking out all after the enacting clause of the House bill and in-serting the bill which they reported. I propose to amend their amendment by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting what sent yesterday to the desk to be read.

These are separate and distinct propositions; one is the House bill; another the report of the Judiciary Committee as a substitute for it; another the report of the Judiciary Committee as a substitute for it; and then my own amendment as a substitute for the substitute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That there may be no confusion, then, the Chair will announce that the bill whose title will be stated is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 1874) to change the eastern and northern judicial districts of Texas, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves to amend by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting the substance of the bill (S. 270) to establish a United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes. ne CHIEF CLERK. A bill (H. R. 1874) to change the eastern and northern judicial districts of Texas, and for other purposes.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Mr. President, I can briefly state the reasons why I insist upon the adoption of the amendment which I offered rather than the bill proposed by the Judiciary Committee.

The evil sought to be remedied by these bills is the practical denial of justice at Fort Smith on account of that court being overrum with business. From the beginning to the end of the year the jail is all the time full of people who are brought from the Indian country to that town for trial.

If the bill proposed by the Judiciary Committee should be enacted into law there would simply be a transfer of this court from Fort Smith to Muscogee in the Indian Territory, and there would be no lightening of the work, no lessening of the number of cases to be tried in that court below the number now tried at Fort Smith; but, on the contrary, if I understand the full purport of the bill, the number of cases will be larger to be tried in the newly-established court in the Indian country than is now tried at Fort Smith.

This bill, then, disappoints the purposes for which the movement was in the first place commenced, and that of itself would be a sufficient reason why it should not be passed in the shape it is.

The proposition which I submit to the Senate is to establish a court in the Indian Territory with a limited jurisdiction, not with the full jurisdiction intended by the Judiciary Committee. I propose, in section 5 of the substitute which I offer, to provide—

That the court hereby established shall have exclusive criminal jurisdiction of all offenses against the laws of the United States committed within the Indian Territory, except cases of rape, murder, manslaughter, assault with intent to kill, arson, robbery, burglary and horse or mule stealing, and other crimes punishable by imprisoment at hard labor.

This is the criminal jurisdiction which I propose to confer upon that court. I am unwilling, to begin, to establish the very first court that we undertake to establish in that country with absolute and full jurisdiction over all criminal offenses. Establish this court of comparatively limited jurisdiction at first; let that be tried, and then in the course of a few years, if it shall appear to Congress and to the people that that court is able to enforce the law in all cases and in regard to all grades of offense within its jurisdiction, it will be well enough then to invest the court with complete and entire jurisdiction. I submit that it is not prudent, that it is not wise to establish the first court we organize in the Indian Territory with the fullest jurisdiction now exercised by Federal courts anywhere.

Mr. PLATT. May I inquire for information, what matters arising in the Indian Territory would that leave for the court at Fort Smith to continue to entertain?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. It would leave matters of rape, murder, manslaughter, and crimes punishable by hard labor in the penitentiary. This would of course have the effect of relieving the court at Fort Smith of a very large number of cases, and that court, without being compelled to sit the whole year through, might have some hope of disposing of its docket.

I regard this as a matter of such grave consequence that I say frankly that I would not have agreed to the consideration of this bill now if I had not been morally, yes, absolutely, sure that the proposition of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate can not become a law. I hope, however, that by securing a free conference between the members of the Judiciary Committees of the two Houses some solution of this question may be arrived at which will be alike just to the Indians and to the courts in the States surrounding that country. I believe it is a matter of great consequence to the advancement of the five civilized tribes that there shall be established in that country immediately a United States court; but I believe that it is of the greatest consequence that that court should be one of limited jurisdiction, and that we should not go to the full extent of conferring the greatest judicial powers upon this court in the first instance.

We all know that the courts of the Indian country, those which now exist there, are subject to criticism. It is claimed that they are not able to enforce their orders, or to enforce justice to the extent that it is enforced in more intelligent communities.

For these reasons, without attempting to enter into an elaborate argument, I respectfully submit to the Senate that the amendment which I propose in the nature of a substitute for the bill proposed by the Judiciary Committee is more prudent and cautious and more likely to accomplish good to the Indians and to the white people than the proposed bill of the Judiciary Committee, which I believe, so far from doing good to the Indians, will absolutely retard the progress of the Indians, and will set back any hope of establishing a court in that country which can enforce its decrees and command respect many years.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President—
Mr. PLATT. May I be permitted to ask a question of the Senator from Arkansas who has just addressed the Senate, before he takes his seat?

Mr. BERRY. Certainly.
Mr. PLATT. What objection is there in the mind of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Jones] to giving this court full jurisdiction, or jurisdiction over cases of murder, rape, etc.? The Senator did not clearly state, or if he did I did not apprehend, what evil he thinks would flow from that, nor why a court established in the Indian Territory, with judges appointed in the usual manner, can not as well disoose of such cases in the Indian Territory as the court at Fort Smith. I did not hear him state that.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I will state my reasons; and I am obliged to the Senator from Connecticut for asking me what they are. I will state my reasons; and I am I intimated in the beginning of my remarks that one primary difficulty was in the way. As I said, one of the many purposes intended to be reached by the passage of such a bill at all was to relieve the court at Fort Smith of work which it is physically impossible for one court at Fort Smith of work which is playantly be court at Muscogee, with the full jurisdiction conferred by the bill proposed by the Judiciary Committee, you are establishing a court with a larger jurisdiction than the court at Fort Smith now has, and if the court at Fort Smith can not dispose of the business coming before it now, the court at Musco-gee will be very much less able to accomplish it, because the docket will be very much larger.

So, then, if we are to undertake to establish a court, as suggested by the Judiciary Committee, it seems to me to be an absolute necessity that instead of making one court you should establish two, because it will require two courts to dispose of the business originating there.

That is one of my difficulties.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President, may I—

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. If the Senator will allow me to answer on the other point I have in my mind, I shall hear him presently. I will say frankly to the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] that in the state of society in the Indian country it is a question of juries. We know how the public feeling is in that country. We know of the old feuds that remind one of the times of the Highlanders in Scotland. We know the difficulties in undertaking to punish men who stand high and are influential in the community There is a doubt in my mind whether you will be able to get juries in the court which can be relied upon to enforce rigidly the orders of the court and to enforce justice in every case, I believe from my observation of the country that it is making very great progress, and while these people are entitled to commendation for what they have already accomplished, and while they have accomplished a great deal, I do believe from my observation of those people that it would be an unsafe experiment to try to organize a court there, and to select juries from the country for the trial of the graver offenses.

Now I will answer the Senator from Massachusetts any question he may wish to ask.

Mr. DAWES. I have not had time to study these bills. I want to know what jurisdiction is left to the court at Fort Smith if the Senate bill should be adopted.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. None whatever.

Mr. DAWES. Is that removed?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Absolutely.

Mr. DAWES. Absolutely removed into the Indian country? Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. That is my understanding of it. Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. That is my understanding of it. Mr. DAWES. To what district, then, will the counties of Arkansas that now belong to that district be attached?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The business in the State of Arkansas would remain just as it is. I meant that all the jurisdiction of the court there in the Indian country would be removed from the court at Fort Smith to the proposed court at Muscogee.

Mr. BUTLER. The bill does not abolish the court in Arkansas. Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. It does not abolish the court, but fransfers the jurisdiction in Indian matters.

Mr. BUTLER. The Indian jurisdiction of the court at Fort Smith, Ark., is transferred to a new court in the Indian Territory.

Mr. DAWES. Then the court in the Indian Territory would have all the Indian business, if I may give it that title.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Yes, sir. Mr. DAWES. That court at Fort Smith now has jurisdiction over those parts of the Indian Territory that are proposed by the House bill to be put under the court at Wichita and the court in Texas.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. Yes; that is true.

Mr. DAWES. Then will it not have more business than the court at Fort Smith now has?

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I think very largely more.
Mr. DAWES. I do not want to occupy the Senator's time, but the condition of things at the present time is deplorable for many reasons. The first is that the court at Fort Smith has more than can possibly be done with a disposition upon the part of everybody connected with it to discharge the duties faithfully, as I have no doubt is a proper characterization of the work of that court. Yet the amount of business to be done there is so great that it is impossible to have it done with that care and circumspection which is due to the gravity of the cases there. When I was there not long since there were nine men under sentence of death to be executed in a few days, and a few days ago in the newspapers was an account of the sentence to death of six men at another time, the result of six different trials; and the court is held there every working day in the year. There must be some remedy for

Besides, the taking of the offenders from the interior and western part of the Indian Territory clear across the Territory to Fort Smith, and taking along with them the witnesses who are necessary to the and taking along with them the whilesses who are necessary to the proper investigation of the cases, amounts in practice to a denial of justice as it is now. Men will shut their eyes when offenses are committed lest they be taken away from their business and taken off 200 or 300 miles to Fort Smith to appear before a grand jury and then go back soo miles to rort sinith to appear before a grand jury and then go back to their homes and return again when the case comes up for trial a month or two months afterwards, to be put off perhaps on some motion that may be made on the part of the defendant or on the part of the Government, and subjected to the ruin of their business with no compensation that will pay for the travel or support them while they are the business there. That is what I want to know.

Now, I have great trouble about this Senate bill, whether the condi-

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts, who has evidently given this question a good deal of consideration, whether or not it would be competent for a man to be selected to sit as a grand or petit juryman in that court who is not a citizen of the United States?

Mr. DAWES. There are a good many questions connected with the subject. One is suggested by the Senator from South Carolina. If the court is held in the Indian Territory the juries must largely be composed of Indians.

Mr. BUTLER. Who are not citizens of the United States.
Mr. DAWES. I am not well enough informed to know what kind of a court practically that will be. I have great faith, however, in the processes of education that come out of contact with the administration of justice, in the beneficial effect of witnessing on the part of these more or less civilized Indians, day by day, the administration of the law. There is a great benefit from that. But the point is whether they are ready at this moment to inaugurate a court with all its machinery, including the jury, which is a very important part of it, for it would be a mockery of justice to try men for their lives before anything but a competent jury. I know there are those who went down with me to that country who think it safe. My distinguished friend from Alabama [Mr. Morgan] is firmly of the conviction that such a jury as that is safe, if I understand him aright.

The importance of this bill can not be magnified. I hold myself guilty in undertaking to say anything about it when I know not enough about it to give any suggestion to anybody else, but I have been holding back because the Committee on the Judiciary has taken jurisdiction, properly enough, of this matter.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, the contest between the Senator from Missouri and my colleague, or rather the difference between the bills presented by each, is in reference to the amount of jurisdiction that shall be conferred upon the new court to be established in the Indian Territory. At this time the court at Fort Smith, Ark., has jurisdiction over a large portion of that Territory; some of the jurisdiction belongs to the district court in Northern Texas and some to the district court at Wichita, Kans.

The bill of the Senator from Missouri proposes to take that entire jurisdiction, including felonies and misdemeanors, and to confer it upon a new court to be established at Muscogee. The bill goes into effect, as I understand it, at once, and this court must begin immediately at a small town in the Creek Nation. There is no court-house there, no as in an town in the creek Nation. There is no contribute the tending in the confinement of prisoners, no arrangements whatever to hold any court at the town of Muscogee, and yet to-day there are not less than one hundred prisoners from the Indian Territory in the jail at Fort Smith, and I think there is scarcely ever less than that number confined there.

Neither my colleague nor myself has any objection whatever to the establishment of a court in the Indian Territory for the trial of misdemeanors and civil causes. We think that it ought to be established, but we do object at this time to giving it jurisdiction of the felonies committed within that Territory. I will state the principal one of all the objections. There are many objections to it, but in order that I may detain the Senate only a short time I will merely state the principal objection.

It is that under the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee it is proposed to take the jury commissioners and the jurors for the trial of all these offenses from the Indian Territory, making all those competent and qualified jurors who can understand the proceedings of the court in the English language. While there are good men and intelligent Indians in the nation, it is well known to most of the Senators on this floor, at least it is to all the Western Senators, that in the Indian Territory there are many men of bad character, men who have escaped from the States, who have acquired citizenship there by various means, who are wholly incompetent and disqualified for jury duty in any State in this Union and would not be allowed to sit upon a jury. It is known, in addition to that, that in the Indian Territory, and especially in the Cherokee country, as my colleague alluded to the fact, feuds can be found existing dating back for forty years; and it is also a well-known fact that in a contest between those parties where the crime of murder has been committed it is utterly impossible to find a jury in the Territory that would convict a party who had either money or influence to back him. This statement is justified by the fact that the Indian courts now have exclusive jurisdiction over crimes where both parties connected with it are Indians and citizens of the Indian Yet it has been said, and if I am not mistaken it was said by the judge of the United States court in his charge to the grand jury, that no man for years past, although there had been numerous murders committed in that Territory, had been convicted in the Indian courts of the Territory where he had any influence or money to back him.

Now, it is proposed to transfer this entire jurisdiction which now requires the court at Fort Smith to sit every day in the year from 8 o'clock in the morning until 5 in the evening, sometimes until 9 and 10, to transfer all those prisoners, not less than one hundred now, many of them charged with murder, a great many of them charged with rape, robbery, and every other felony known to the statute, to transfer those cases, and for such crimes as that, to a small town in the Cherokee Nation, having no facilities whatever, either for the confinement of prisoners or the holding of a court.

Not less than two years ago the Congress of the United States passed an act appropriating $100,000 to build a court house at Fort Smith in order to accommodate that court with this large jurisdiction. In addition to that they appropriated $50,000 more to build a jail for the express purpose of confining the prisoners who come from the Chero-kee Nation. The jurisdiction of that court, so far as it extends to crimes that are committed in Arkansas, amounts to nothing. It would not require the court twenty days in the year to do all the business that would come from the State of Arkansas.

The substitute in effect simply takes away the entire jurisdiction that is now controlled by the court, so far as the Indian Territory is That court has been established at Fort Smith and Van Buren for the period, I think, of forty or fifty years. There has never been any complaint that the laws were not administered faithfully, and fairly, and honestly, and that crimes were punished in the nation.

Therefore, as I said awhile ago, we are anxious to have this court established with civil jurisdiction. We are perfectly willing to have all misdemeanors tried there, so that we may see whether the law can be enforced by the appointment of jurors who can be had in that Territory in misdemeanor cases, and we are anxious also that civil jurisdiction shall be conferred upon that court, because that is almost an absolute necessity. That will make the experiment. Then it can be seen how it will work, and if necessary hereafter the felonies can be transferred also.

But to take the substitute of the Senator from Missouri, which transfers the jurisdiction of the court at once and without delay to a place that has no facilities whatever, every one who is familiar with the na-tion and with the Indian character there knows how difficult it will be to convict any man of a serious crime there, and it seems to me it would be to invite murder and every other character of crime in the Indian Territory, and that no man's life would be safe.

Then why should the court be taken there? The place of Muscogee is but a little more convenient to a large part of the jurisdiction of the court than the city of Fort Smith. A railroad now runs from Fort Smith or Van Buren to Fort Gibson, which is near Muscogee, and by reason of that railroad and other railroads, so far as accommodating the suitors and witnesses in a large portion of that Territory is concerned, it is equally as convenient to reach Fort Smith as to reach Muscogee.

It seems to me that every consideration should induce the Senate to pause and hesitate before they establish a court in that country with that character of jurors, and thereby invite the commission of crime which has already been too prevalent throughout that nation, and would have been much greater but for the fear of the punishment that is inflicted by the court at Fort Smith.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President, the arguments of the Senator from Arkansas, in my judgment, are conclusive as to the inexpediency and impolicy of establishing the court in the Indian Territory in accordance with the provisions of the Senate substitute for the House bill. The crowded condition of the court at Fort Smith, the great number of prisoners there, the inability of the court to do the business that goes into it from the Indian Territory, show with equal conclusiveness that some sort of relief is demanded.

In my judgment the bill as passed by the House of Representatives, which divides the jurisdiction of the Indian Territory between Fort Smith on one side and Denison and Paris, Tex., on the other, meets exactly the requirements of the case. The mileage for witnesses and for officers traveling over the Indian Territory from near the Texas borders to Fort Smith is immense. The expense is very great. The division proposed by the bill as passed by the House, giving jurisdiction from a certain line in the Indian Territory to Denison, and from a certain other line to Paris, Tex., and giving the remainder of the jurisdiction to Fort Smith, will not increase the expense in any respect, but will decrease very greatly the immense distances that have to be traveled now by officers and witnesses and parties in attending the Fort Smith court.

I believe with the Senator from Arkansas that the court should not now be established in the Indian Territory. I do not believe that a court should be established there with powers to adjudicate the rights of white people until that Territory has erected over it a Territorial government and is more directly under the laws and customs of the Government of the United States in its judicial proceedings than it would be with the court established as proposed by the Senate substi-tute for the House bill. I believe it will be a matter of regret, if the substitute is adopted, that it was ever done. Those people are not in a condition for such a court. The rights of the people of the United States which exist now or may hereafter exist in that Territory and to be litigated should not be submitted to such a jurisdiction.

If those people are fit now for the exercise of that sort of jurisdiction it is time that they were prepared for the exercise of it by the erection of a Territorial government over them. Until that is done they should not be intrusted with any such jurisdiction, and the great distance of Fort Smith from a large portion of that Territory suggests that the jurisdiction should be divided between that court and courts in Texas near to the Indian Territory border as provided in the House bill.

The bill prepared in the House with great care and passed there, which is here for consideration now, and for which the Senate committee has offered a substitute, is, in my judgment, the best solution of the whole question. I therefore shall vote for the bill as passed by the whole question. I therefore shall vote for the bill as passed by the House and against the substitute of the Senate committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The bill passed by the House of Representatives was an intensification of the existing law of extraditing everytimes was an intensification of the existing law of extraditing everytimes. body who did anything supposed to be an offense in this large region of country, some of the persons, depending upon where you happened to find them, to be sent to Texas, others to Kansas, and others to Arkansas. It was a bill of centrifugal extradition, whirling them around and dropping them into one State or the other as the case might be. That was the scheme. It would tend undoubtedly to increase the at-tendance of people at the court in the State of Kansas where these offenses are to be tried, and to enhance the value of hotel property there on account of there being more visitors. It would have the same effect, I suspect, at Paris, in the State of Texas, which was another place of revolving jurisdiction, to whip out a lot of people to that country, and a still heavier effect in whirling them down to the Arkansas River, where Fort Smith is situated.

The Committee on the Judiciary thought, inasmuch as confessed evils in the administration of justice outside of the region where the accusations were made or the offenses were committed were great, that if it were possible to move the august majesty of a court of the United States with a visible presence into the heart of that Territory and establish there a reign of administrative law, everybody could see and the offender could feel, in the neighborhood of the place where the offense was committed or alleged to have been committed, that it would be a great advancement in the administration of justice and a great advancement in the social good order of the community over which it was to exercise its powers. The committee thought (perhaps they were wrong) that it was the very principle I have last stated and that very practice which make social order, respect for law, and the administration of justice most valuable in the States and districts all over this Union where the administrative justice of the United States is exercised.

Mr. BUTLER. Would it disturb the Senator to answer a question just now?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not at all.

Mr. BUTLER. I am in entire sympathy with the bill as reported by the Senator's committee, and its objects, and I concur entirely in the views that the Senator has just expressed, but it has occurred to me in glancing over the measure that there may be some difficulty in the organization of the court and in the trial of cases, in the matter of selecting jurymen. I see the substitute provides in section 8-

That all proceedings in said court shall be had in the English language; and bona fide male residents of the Indian Territory, over twenty-one years of age, and understanding the English language sufficiently to comprehend the proceedings of the court, shall be competent to serve as jurors in said court, but shall be subject to exemptions and challenges as provided by law in regard to jurors in the district court for the western district of Arkansas.

I find in section 18 provision is made that where the defendants shall be citizens of the United States jurors shall be selected from the adjoining districts of the States. I, as I said, am not only not opposed to the measure, but I am in favor of it. However, it occurred to me that there might be some difficulty in getting proper jurymen, for I find in the Revised Statutes, section 800, page 150, the following provision:

Jurors to serve in the courts of the United States, in each State respectively, shall have the same qualifications, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained, and be entitled to the same exemptions, as jurors in the highest court of law in such State may have and be entitled to at the time when such jurors for service in the courts of the United States are summoned, etc.

I should be very glad to be informed by the Senator from Vermont, if he has thought of that aspect of it, whether an Indian who is not a citizen of the United States can be made a competent juryman.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was coming to that part of the measure.
Mr. BUTLER. I beg the Senator's pardon; I thought he was about to take his seat and I wanted to call his attention to that feature.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was coming to that part after I should have endeavored, as briefly as possible, to have Senators who do me the honor to listen to me understand the fundamental principle upon which the committee thought the measure ought to proceed. I have stated it, and I believe every Senator will acknowledge the force of it; whether applicable here or not it ought to be, if it can be. Having said that, I now come to what is really all there is left of the question of any possible objection to undertaking the institution of this court, and that is the one that is stated by the Senator from South Carolina. There will be undoubtedly a difficulty in respect of the obtaining of such jurors as in any one of the States, in suits or prosecution. cutions between or against citizens of those States, are usually obtained, for the reason that the development of social order, of cultivation, of education, of respect for law, of general information, has not gone so far in that Territory as it has in South Carolina, or Texas, or Vermont, or Missouri, or in any other of the States of the Union. But the people there, just like all other communities everywhere, even at the very origin of the jury trial, will get a jury of peers; and that is all we felt we could do, to start, as we thought, on an experiment that would tend to diminish crime and to build up social order and respect for law.

If it happens that the whole body of the people in the Indian Territory will not have as good a selection of juries as can be found in general in any one of the States of the Union, they will have a selection of juries that bear the same relation to the body of the people that they do in the best cultivated State there is in the Union; and that is the best that you can do if you are to have a jury taken from the region where the offense is alleged to have been committed.

Mr. BUTLER. I did not mean to imply in the question I put that competent jurors might not be procured in the Indian Territory. I have no doubt that jurors quite as competent can be secured there as in many of the States. It was not upon that point that I had doubt, but whether an Indian, not being a citizen of the United States, can be made a juryman in a United States court.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That was the second branch of the general ques-

Mr. BUTLER. I have no doubt that jurymen quite as competent can be selected in the Indian country as in many of the States, because

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not quite so clear about that as my friend from South Carolina is. I think I should rather prefer to be tried by a jury of Vermont or South Carolina—on the average, understand—than by a jury selected in the Indian country. I would a good deal rather be tried by a jury of Vermont or of South Carolina or of any one of the older States than by a jury selected in the Territory of Arizona. But if I were one of the people of Arizona and heart and part in their civilization, or want of it, if I were a peer there, I should not think that I had a right to complain if I were tried by a body of men who were just like me and engaged in the same pursuits. That is the theory of jury trial, and that is fair play.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont if he thinks that line of argument applies to Utah?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it does. If I were a polygamous Mormon in Utah I should want to be tried by a jury of polygamous Mormons. If I were a gentile I should want to be tried by a jury of gentiles, I am quite sure. So my principle applies everywhere; but as Falstaff or somebody said, it is a question of the application of it.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of the Senator if it is a question to be submitted to the man to be tried whom he is to be tried by? Mr. EDMUNDS. In every jurisprudence that I know anything about that bears a semblance to jury trial the man who is to be tried has the largest voice in the selection of the persons who are to be his jurors, by a process of algebraic equation in cutting out.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I think that does not a I think that does not apply to Utah, however, or to the Mormons.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it does. The right of challenge in Utah exists exactly as it does in Arkansas and Vermont and everywhere else. Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. The right to sit on juries does not seem to be the same there.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it is exactly the same.

Mr. DAWES rose.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator from Vermont allow me to ask him question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, the Senator from Massachusetts has the cross-examination for the present.

Mr. BERRY. When he gets through with the Senator from Massa-chusetts, I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont one question. The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MANDERSON in the chair). Senator from Vermont yields to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. DAWES. I want to get a little insight into this matter as to whether it is exactly the right test that the men who constitute the jury to try a man shall be the peers of the man who is to be tried. What is meant by the word "peer?" Does it mean peer in moral qualities, or peer in intelligence, or peer in respect for the law and regard for its observance? I knew a penal code prepared once for a reformatory institution and then it was submitted for approval to the inmates, and it did not work at all.

I think that the question whether a man is a peer does not mean whether he is just such a sort of man as the one who is to be tried. It means something broader than that; and my trouble is whether that idea of a peer to try a man can be applied as yet in the Indian Territory. I agree to everything the Senator from Vermont has said about the purpose of the proposed law, and I agree with him in stating that the only question is whether the condition of things in the Territory is such as to justify this measure. The bill of the Judiciary Committee is, in my opinion, infinitely better than all the rest if a safe court, such as must be a United States court, can be carried on with the material which is in the Indian Territory. You can not import into the Indian Territory jurymen. They must be taken from the vicinage. They must be, as the Senator from Vermont says, largely just such people as the man to be tried. I am not prepared to say that that condition of things exists. I do not know but that it does exist. If it does, I am for the Judiciary Committee's bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The question of my distinguished friend from Massachusetts is somewhat voluminous, I must confess, but I believe the pith of it, stripping it of the flounces and furbelows of rhetoric and dissertation, to be, what is a peer? which was, I suppose, an unfortunate expression that I used on account of my boyish reading of the common law. What is a peer in the sense of a juryman? Very likely I am wrong, but I had supposed that a peer, as the old charter of liberties obtained from King John by the barons provided, was the equal of the man accused, belonging to the same legal station in society, and if the accused be innocent and upright and the victim of a false accusation, having the same interests in the welfare of society, the prevention of crime and the punishment of it, and the protection of liberty that the accused man should have if he were innocent; and-

Mr. DAWES rose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask my friend to just give me leave to answer his question before he begins again. And if he was not innocent, but was guilty, the trial of his peers would be a trial by the men who had with him, as a common member of the same society, the duty of performing the same responsibilities and abstaining from the same crimes that by law rested upon the man accused. That is what I understand by a peer.

Mr. DAWES. That is what I supposed it was, until the Senator said that if he were a polygamous Mormon he would want to be tried by a jury each member of which was a polygamous Mormon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I did not say that he was my peer.

Mr. DAWES. The Senator said so much in that connection that it led me to inquire whether I had not been mistaken.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The point was as to an accused man, particularly if he were guilty, how he would like to have the jury composed. I confess that if I were a chicken thief I should be glad to be tried by a jury of chicken thieves. If I were a traitor, I should be glad to be tried by a jury of traitors. If I were a polygamist and were accused of polygamy, I should be glad to be tried by polygamists. If I were a public enemy, abetting any foreign nation in making war on the United States, and had to be tried for that, I should be glad to have subjects of that nation on the jury and none of the citizens of my country. That is my go.

Mr. DAWES. I hope the Senator is not advocating the Judiciary Committee bill on any such ground as that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Not at all. I am going to tell my friend the ground I am advocating it on, if he will give me leave.

Mr. DAWES. If the Senator is not advocating it on that ground, he does not meet the question whether there can be a proper jury had in the Indian Territory.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I know that; and the reason why I can not meet it is the fact that my friend will not give me time before he interrupts me again.

The PRESIDENT protempore. The Senator from Vermont declines to be interrupted.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no; I do not do that, but I will answer my friend's question if he will only give me an opportunity to do it.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator, while he is answering it, be kind enough to tell what he used the illustration for if he did not suppose it applied to the case?

Mr. BUTLER. He used it by way of parenthesis.
Mr. EDMUNDS. It applied to the argument of my distinguished friend, which I admit had no application to the case.

Mr. BERRY. I should like to make an inquiry for the Senator to answer in the course of his argument.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator from Arkansas will pardon me at this moment, because I have not, as my friend from Massachusetts feels, answered the real point. I will proceed to do that, and after-feels, answered the real point. I will proceed to do that, and afterwards hear my friend from Arkansas.

Mr. BERRY. Certainly.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, I will state to my friend from Massachusetts the serious question which exists in the practical application of this bill. The principle of it I suppose everybody will agree to be right. The question is whether the state of society there is such that the control of the first serious and the first serious agreements. right. The question is whether the state of society there is such as that a jury trial can be fairly and reasonably well carried out. That is the point. The committee from its information and belief thought that in respect of the trial of crimes and controversies which arose between residents of that Territory a jury could be obtained, with the increasing and very considerate population there, of respectable and intelligent persons who were permanent residents in that region in the vicinity of the place, whose interest and motive would be for the preservation of order and the punishment of crime always by the processes of fair play and according to the truth. That is what we thought; we think so still; and we have believed that the class of cases I am now speaking of which arise out of offenses committed in thest I am now speaking of, which arise out of offenses committed in that Territory, among the residents of that Territory, can be tried by juries that will be just as fair, and, I am inclined to say, if I can do so with-out certainly meaning any disrespect to juries at Fort Smith, with as good a hope of justice and impartiality as can be found at Fort Smith. in the State of Arkansas.

Mr. BERRY rose.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will pardon me one moment more, as what I am about to say will illustrate the last remark I have made, the state of things at Fort Smith had got to be such that in the very last session of this Congress the Judiciary Committee, on the urgent and very just request of the Senators from Arkansas and others who were acquainted with it, found that the number of convictions for even capital offenses, saying nothing about the others, at Fort Smith was simply prodigious; that it seemed to be very rare (that is my recollection, though I do not say now that our friends from Arkansas stated that; I am stating my own impression) that the doubt was solved in favor of the prisoner, but he was hurried in from a hundred miles, or 200 or 350, as it might be, but very few of his own witnesses could get there at all, the expenses were so great; and on a one-sided case the iuries would convict either from prejudice or from the fact that counterevidence was not brought in. I make no criticism upon them in that respect. So executive intervention following the judgments of the court upon these convictions by the juries had to be appealed to and applied for over and over again with a frequency that was perfectly startling. Accordingly the Judiciary Committee, with the full concurrence and assistance of my friends from Arkansas, reported a bill to provide for giving people convicted in that way (and of course we had to make it universal) a right to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States in short order, and to mitigate that apparently very great evil of the danger to human life in the trial of causes at Fort Smith in Arkansas.

That undoubtedly is a misfortune of the situation. That misfortune the committee think will be largely diminished, ameliorated, if not entirely removed, by carrying the visible and practical administration of justice in the form of a court of the United States into the heart of the Territory, where witnesses are near by and where impartiality would be certainly quite as likely to be exercised as in these cases of real extradition for trial. That is what we thought. It is an experiment, it must be confessed. No new thing is begun that is not an experiment. Perhaps it will fail. I hope it will not.

Mr. BERRY. Will the Senator answer my question now?

Mr. EDMUNDS. With pleasure, if I can.
Mr. BERRY. This bill in the general qualifications for jurors does not even require them to be citizens of the United States. It provides, however, that in exceptional cases, where the defendant is a citizen of the United States, a jury may be summoned from the adjoining States and he shall be tried by citizens of the United States. If when citizens are passing through the Indian Territory, traveling upon a railroad train, a murder should be committed, a train should be derailed and wrecked by some lawless Indian, I ask the Senator if he believes that justice would be administered, and that Indians, citizens of that Territory, would be punished in the same way that they would be punished at Fort Smith for an offense of that kind?

That is one question that I desired to ask. The second proposition is in regard to convictions that have been had at Fort Smith, in which the Senator seems to reflect upon the juries of Arkansas. there has never been any complaint on account of the juries. not say that no man has ever been hung there who should not have been hanged. I do not know. That court is presided over by an eminent judge, a Republican in politics, a man of ability and character. If there is any complaint about too many convictions, it can not lie at the door of the juries of the State of Arkansas, as the judge has full control of their verdicts.

But the question that I especially wanted the Senator to answer was, if he thought there would be the same security for the life of citizens of the United States passing through the Territory or having business there who are to be tried only by Indian juries or juries made up of refugees from other States who have acquired citizenship there, refugees from justice in many cases? I ask him if life or property would be more secure there than it is at this time when they have the fear of the punishment that comes rom fthe court at Fort Smith hanging over

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think the fear of the offenders as to justice would be just as great in respect of the United States court held at Muscogee as it would in respect of the United States court held at Fort Smith.

Mr. BERRY. With Indian juries?

Mr. BERRY. With Indian juries?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am coming to that. It is one of my misfortunes that I can only say one thing at a time. I think that the respect for the court and the fear of punishment as it regards the nature of the court, if the offender knew that the judge, and the marshal, and the clerk, and the district attorney, and all the paraphernalia of immediate pursuit, of immediate arrest, of immediate exploration and the finding of witnesses and his being brought up forthwith for a preliminary hearing and everything made secure for his impartial trial somewhere, would be greater than it would if he thought the hand of justice was 300 miles away. That is what I think as to that.

Now, as to the jury, I think, if I am right in what I have said in reply to the Senator from Massachusetts, that the chance (if you can use the word "chance" in regard to the administration of justice) of a use the word "chance" in regard to the administration of justice) of a just verdict in the case of destroying a railroad train, occasioning the Just verdict in the case of destroying a railroad train, occasioning the loss of human life, would be just as great of a conviction by a jury of residents of that Territory impaneled at Muscogee as it would be of a jury of residents impaneled at Fort Smith, Ark.; for I believe, and that is our information, that the great body of that people (and by "people" I include the Indian who is not a citizen of the United States, and that is why we use the word "resident," and the citizen of the United States who is a resident) are so improd with the desire for that and that is why we use the word "resident," and the citizen of the United States, who is a resident) are so imbued with the desire for that very public order which they know, if they are capable of reflection at all, is as necessary to them as it is to everybody else, that if the overthrowing of a railway train by a malicious person was to occur, they would be just as eager to punish him, if the case were proved, as a jury in the State of Vermont would be. Otherwise we ought to have a more arbitrary or Russian government there; and one single man, as of the times of five hundred years ago, to be the master of the whole situation, should be the person to hear and try, determine and convict everybody accused of crime. But we have found in human experience that that is not the best way for justice after all.

Therefore, it appeared to the committee, because I do not wish to spin out the time, after the most careful consideration we could give to it, that this experiment, as it is an experiment, is a hopeful one, and that it promises, so far as our foresight can go, most beneficial

Mr. BERRY. Why not try it on all misdemeanors and civil cases first and see how it works on those, and then try it on felonies afterwards?

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. President, the amount of business which is transacted and intended to be transacted at Fort Smith is such as to show the necessity of a division of the business which is returnable at that court. The cost to litigants in going a great distance to reach the court in civil cases, the cost to the Government and to defendants in going so great a distance to attend trials, the expense entailed by the bringing of witnesses and parties to trial, are so great as to show the necessity of a transfer of a part of this business to another court.

The question recurs, where is that jurisdiction to be located and how arranged? The Senate Judiciary Committee's bill proposes to establish a court in the Indian Territory with very large jurisdiction. It raises the question as to whether we can safely expect that juries can be impaneled and trials be had intelligently and fairly in such a court.

The bill as passed by the House proposes to divide this jurisdiction by attaching a part of the Choctaw country to the eastern district of Texas, and providing for a court at Paris, on the immediate border of that country. It proposes to take another part of the Territory, the western part, the part of the Chickasaw country, and attach it to the northern district of Texas, with a court to be held at Denison, immediately on the border. A railroad passes through the Choctaw country to Paris, and a railroad passes through the Chickasaw country to Denison, so that communication is easy.

This would leave the eastern part of the Territory, with its business returnable to Fort Smith, to be disposed of as now. The southern part of the Territory would have its business returnable to Paris, immediately on the border. The southwestern part of the Territory would have its business returnable to Denison, immediately on the border. This would accommodate the business that is required to be accommodated, greatly reducing the cost of the conveyance of witnesses and parties to these several courts, greatly reducing the cost of litigation both to the Government and to ordinary litigants, and preserving the place of trial where there would be no doubt about the obtaining of intelligent juries.

It would save the expense of a new judge, of a new marshal, of a new clerk. However, the latter is mostly a matter of fees, but it would save the expense of a new judicial district, accommodating the litigation in districts now in existence without additional cost to the Government, reducing the cost of conveying prisoners to the place of trial, reducing the cost to parties of attending the place of trial, and placing these people within reasonable and convenient distance of the places at which trials are to be had, and avoiding the danger of conferring jurisdiction on a court wholly within the Territory, as is proposed by the Senate substitute, among a people not deemed so far capable of self-government as to be under even a Territorial form of government.

It is suggested that to organize a court within the Indian Territory will have its educational advantages and a moral influence by showing to those people how justice is administered, the agencies by which it is administered, and give them the benefit of witnessing trials in the Territory. Of course all this is very desirable. I recognize that the trials at nisi prius are great instrumentalities of education among the people of this country and Great Britain; but, Mr. President, before we enter upon that experiment it ought to be with a people that are at least capable of being organized into a Territorial form of government.

Those familiar with that country know that there are some very intelligent people, mixed-bloods mainly, in these nations. The great body of them, however, are pure-bloods, and out of the pure-bloods I suppose it would be almost impossible to find a single man qualified with intelligence to perform the duties of a juryman. It would be almost impossible to find one that could speak the English language or understand it when spoken. I see that these bills contemplate that the proceedings of the court shall be in the English language. Among the full-blood Indians this would be all a dull mummery. They would have no conception of what was going on unless an interpreter was employed to make known to them what was being done.

So it seems to me it is too great a risk on a speculative idea of educating these people into a capacity for self-government to establish a court within the Territory; and besides, consider the location of the court at Fort Smith, the one at Paris, and the one at Denison, and then take the location at the place where it is proposed to locate a court in the Territory, and the people are as near to these several jurisdictions as they would be to that particular jurisdiction. So, then, in point of convenience to litigants, in point of saving expense, the House bill has an advantage over the Senate bill and over the bill presented by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES].

Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Jones].

I thought, leaving out the speculative questions that arise in this case, I would call attention to these practical facts: In the first place, the necessity of a new jurisdiction there; in the second place, the danger of locating a court among such people to be administered by the aid of jurymen who neither understand our laws, our language, nor our customs; and in the next place, the relief which the House bill would give to litigants and to the Government in the saving of expense and travel, and the placing of the courts sufficiently convenient to these several persons.

several persons.

For these reasons I trust that the Senate substitute may not be adopted for the House bill.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, this is a subject in which I have felt a very great interest for several years. I had the honor of being a member of the committee of this body which went down to the Indian Territory and made a thorough inspection of the civilization of the five civilized tribes—that was three years ago—and published a report in three volumes, which are here, containing a vast amount of evidence in connection with this topic. Amongst other things that committee have incorporated most of the general laws and the constitutions of these different Indian tribes that have adopted any constitution. The Chickasaws and the Choctaws and the Creeks and the Cherokees have each of them, I know, constitutions. The Seminoles have a written constitution also, but it is more declaratory of principles than an arrangement of civil government. This committee made a report after due investigation of the condition of those tribes of Indians, and if they have correctly presented the facts more has been done for the civilization of those five tribes within a period of thirty or forty years than has been done for any set of men in the world, and nearly the whole of it has been the work of their own hands. They have adopted in their constitutions forms of government that belong to the States of the American Union, and they are very elaborate and very complete.

can Union, and they are very elaborate and very complete.

Some of these constitutions were adopted as far back as 1839, and contain the express requirement that the right of trial by jury shall exist; and it is a right that is practiced in each of these tribes and has been now for more than thirty years. Justice is administered within the civilized tribes in their courts just as well as it is in Dallas County, Alabama, where I reside, and they have a better constituency there for the purpose of selecting jurors in the Creek or Cherokee or Chockaw or Chickasaw Nation than we have got in Dallas County, Alabama; and yet we have a very enlightened white population there—perhaps there is not any in proportion to numbers that can excel them—but we have in Dallas County, Alabama, about 35,000 negroes to about 9,000 white people; and our jurors, grand and petit, are drawn from the body of the people of the county without respect to color or any other thing except the personal qualifications of the jurors.

cept the personal qualifications of the jurors.

I have tried many cases before juries mixed and juries almost, if not entirely, composed of negroes, and I have found that we have got intelligent verdicts because we have had the intelligent portion of that population to put in the jury-box. The law is carefully administered there in respect of the selection of the individual who shall become a grand juror or a petit juror, but they are not more careful there than they are in the Indian country; neither is the practice more successful in getting good juries in Alabama than it is amongst the different tribes of these five civilized nations.

I have found that the jury system and admitting negroes to the juries in the State of Alabama has, in my opinion at least, been the very greatest civilizer that has ever been adopted, and I have seen no occasion to complain of the administration of justice there through the negro juries.

These people out in the five tribes have been progressing in their civilization, as I have remarked before, with a rapidity that is unexampled, and one of the best agencies that they have ever found at all in the development of a high order of civilization—for it is both high and Christian—has been the jury system. We know—I know, at least—that amongst the full-blooded Indians out there many of them speak the English language, and speak it well, and some of the very best lawyers in this whole country are full-blooded Indians in that part of the world. Their courts are organized completely in every particular. They have a full system of county courts and probate courts, and then the system of circuit courts, and a supreme court usually presided over by three justices, in which written opinions are delivered by the judges of the court, and they compare favorably with any other opinions I know of in the State courts for their intelligence.

Now, Mr. President, I have not the time to go through with these different constitutions, although they lie before me here, and the acts of their different Legislatures to show what ample and exact provision has been made in these civilized tribes for the administration of justice, but I think I can claim, without any possibility of a successful denial, that these Indians are unequaled, and have been for years and years, in the administration of justice in the highest and best way that justice is administered in any of the States of this Union.

Here are three propositions before the Senate to-day, one coming from the House of Representatives which parcels out the jurisdiction now existing exclusively at Fort Smith between Texas and Kansas and Arkansas, so as to have three courts and a division of the jurisdiction which is at Fort Smith, Ark., now distributed around in these three courts. That would be some relief in respect of the distance men have to travel to go to court, but it maintains the old system of holding the court outside of the Territory in which the offense is alleged to have been committed or where the right accrues.

The modified bill of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Jones] proceeds on the idea that this Indian court when established, or rather this American court, this United States court when established within the Indian Territory, ought to have a limited jurisdiction and that there ought still to be a reference of all the larger and heavier offenses to the court as it exists now at Fort Smith. That may be a convenience; I can not say it would not be a convenience for the present; perhaps it is; and if the bill of the Judiciary Committee is adopted by the Senate the time ought to be deferred for it to take effect, perhaps for a year or two years or something like that, until we could get the whole system entirely matured.

The Senate bill, however, comes in with a plenary jurisdiction in favor of a United States court to be held at Muscogee in the Creek Indian country, down on the railway there, a very convenient location. The object of that court is the administration of civil and criminal justice in that Territory. That is the whole purpose of all this proposed legislation.

As to the locality, it is one merely of convenience in the first place; and in the second place, it is the effect that is produced by the holding of a court within that Territory upon the civilization of the Indians, and the further effect also of planting within that Territory in an act ive way the exercise by the United States Government of its power and jurisdiction over these people. We have got, sooner or later, to incorporate them into this Union either as a State or a Territorial government and after awhile as a State, and this is a step in the right direction. It is the first necessary step to take, that of establishing courts there for the administration of justice.

Now, these comparative matters having been disposed of, the only remaining question in this case is whether or not you can get within the borders of these civilized tribes competent jurors. The provisions of this bill are entirely complete, I think, in respect to the power to be exercised by the court in making the selection of competent jurors. If competent jurors can be found in the Indian Territory they can be organized under the bill of the Judiciary Committee just as completely at Muscogee as they could be at Fort Smith. I take it for granted, in fact I know, that a court at Muscogee would be just as well protected as at Fort Smith, so far as its authority is concerned; the judge and the jurors would be as safe at Muscogee as they would be at Fort Smith or at any other place.

I know also-because that is the testimony this committee developed—that at this time there is a large manifest interest among the Indians for having a court held within their Territory. They would welcome this tribunal into the Creek country or any part of it, and it would be obeyed and observed with religious fidelity, and it would be really the most potent of all the civilizing agencies that have ever been established in that wonderfully beautiful country and amongst that wonderfully progressive people. There is not a doubt of it.

Then the court would be safe, and that leaves the only remaining question whether you can get competent jurors. The Indians-have found competent jurors there for twenty or thirty years for the trial of their causes as between each other. This bill provides that where the defendant in the case or the plaintiff in the action, I believe either, is a white man, a citizen of one of the States of the Union, he shall have the right man, a citizen of one of the States of the Union, he shall have the right to demand a jury to be drawn from some adjoining judicial district of the United States, so that he can leave the Indian country and go abroad with the powers of the court and summon jurors and carry them to Muscogee to be organized there for the purpose of trying his case. When a question arises, however, between the Indians, that will be disposed of by juries who have been disposing of cases of the same kind for thirty years and doing it with remarkable intelligence and justice and firmness.

So, Mr. President, the question narrows itself down to this one proposition: Can you find out of this great body of Indian citizenship and white citizenship which occupies these five civilized nations a sufficient white citizenship which occupies these five civilized nations a suncient number of Indian men to get a good and competent jury?

Mr. BUTLER. If my friend will pardon me one moment, I desire to say that I draw a distinction—I do not know that it is well founded—between a competent juror and a juror who is qualified to serve. The only doubt I have about the provision of the bill is whether you can make a person who is not a citizen of the United States a juror in a United States are supported and I have a beautiful provision and her the United States court. I understand and I have been informed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Dawes] that applications have been made by Indians under the law to become citizens of the United States, made by Indians under the law to become citizens of the United States, thereby inferentially at least holding that they are aliens. That is the only doubt I have about it, whether Congress has the right to say that a person who is not a citizen of the United States is qualified to serve on a jury in a United States court. I should be very glad to hear my friend from Alabama on that aspect of the question.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the Congress of the United States, within any place where it has jurisdiction to enact law in respect of the qualifications of jurors, can fix the qualifications. There is no con-qualifications of jurors, can fix the qualifications. There is no constitutional prohibition upon the power of Congress to fix the qualifications of jurors so as to extend them even to aliens if we choose to do it.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I suggest to my friend that we should have to repeal that provision of the Revised Statutes which says jurors shall have the same qualifications as are held by jurors in the respective

Mr. MORGAN. That is done precisely in this bill, in the eighth sec-

SEC. 8. That all proceedings in said court shall be had in the English language; and bona fide male residents of the Indian Territory over twenty-one years of age, and understanding the English language sufficiently to comprehend the proceedings of the court, shall be competent to serve as jurors in said court, but shall be subject to exemptions and challenges as provided by law in regard to jurors in the district court for the western district of Arkansas.

Mr. BUTLER. That says "male residents" shall be competent jurors, but we must not lose sight of the fact that that Territory is not even a part of the United States. It is a foreign government in one aspect of

Mr. MORGAN. It makes no difference. When we organize this court there, it is a judicial district of the United States, and whether there is a Territorial government there or whether there is a foreign government or an alien government there makes no difference. We organize it as a judicial district and we prescribe the qualifications of There is no difficulty in the Constitution of the United States against this exercise of power by Congress, and I therefore think that the question is not one of any material consequence at all. This does repeal the general provisions of the jury law quoad.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If there is any doubt about that it can be recti-fied. It is a mere matter of technical difficulty. I agree with the Senator from Alabama; but of course it will have to be looked into in conference.

Mr. MORGAN. I maintain that the issue is narrowed down to this simple proposition——

Mr. COKE. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama a question. I understand him to say that juries may be taken from adjoin-

Mr. MORGAN. On the demand of the defendant, if a white man. Mr. COKE. How is the process of the court in the Indian Territory to be enforced outside of that Territory?

Mr. MORGAN. This bill provides for that. The court may send out a venire for the purpose of summoning jurors in any adjoining district. The bill provides for it, and the bill would be incomplete without that provision. Of course I am not very familiar with all the terms of this bill. I am not on the Judiciary Committee, but on looking it over I have found, to my entire satisfaction, that it is a very complete system of law. I think there is no difficulty in the working of the system as provided in this bill which the Judiciary Committee has proposed to substitute for the House enactment.

Now I come to my point again that there is but one issue in this case as it is presented; that is to say, there is but one objection to the establishment of this court out there, and that is the possibility that you will not get Indian jurors. That is the whole of it. That difficulty removed, no other difficulty has been suggested as standing in the way of the passage of this proposed law as recommended by the Judiciary Committee.

I maintain, Mr. President, and the history of these people shows it, Thankain, Mr. Fresident, and the instory of these people shows it, their dealings with us day by day show it, that they are not only capable of being jurors, but they are capable of being judges, and very excellent judges. There are lawyers to-day in the Cherokee Nation and in the Creek Nation who, I think, would be the peers of almost any lawyer on this floor—very able men. They show it in their legislation. Here are their statute-books [exhibiting], covered with enactments, constitutional organizations of government, and all of that, just as perfect and as complete as have been made by any of the States of the American Union. Now why should they not have this agency of the American Union. Now, why should they not have this agency of the law, and why should we not recognize them as a people who should participate in some sense or other in the administration of the judicial power of the United States within themselves and amongst themselves?

Mr. President, it is a denial of justice, and it is an important denial of justice, to say to these people that they shall not participate in the administration of the laws of the land when the argument can not be correctly made against them that they are either too corrupt to participate in it or that they are too ignorant to do it.

Sir, you can get just as good jurors out there as you can get in Dallas County, Alabama, and your chances are 20 or 30 or 40 or 50 per cent. greater for getting a good jury out of these five civilized tribes than they are in Dallas County, Alabama, where the population is about 35,000 negroes to 9,000 white. We find no difficulty about it; we admit the negroes to the jury, and we never feel that we are in any danger from that source, because the selection made by the court of the material that enters into the juries is always intelligent and impartial, and the result is usually a good one.

I hope some of these bills will pass. I am willing to take any one of them if I can not get the one I prefer, except the one parceling out the jurisdiction between the three States of Kansas, Arkansas, and Texas. That does not do any good; that does not meet the evil; that does not introduce the court into the Territory where it ought to be; but either of the other measures would suit me, because I want to get a start upon it. Pass the bill of the Senator from Arkansas, and within a few years, perhaps at the next session of Congress after this has been tried amongst the Indians, you will find a court there that you would be delighted to improve by the enlargement of its juris-

My faith in the success of the plan is so entirely positive after a thorough personal examination of the question and after thinking over it for several years, that I would most freely adopt the recommendation of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate. I believe that is what we ought to do. If we can not get that I am willing to fall back upon the other. But do let us have a court amongst these people, and let them feel that after all they have some interest in the United States and some right of participation in our Government through the courts.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, I have a good deal to say on this subject, but I am so anxious to get a vote and get this bill into conference that I simply want to make a single remark. I do not expect that the bill which I reported here will be enacted into a law, for many reasons which I could give. I expect we shall obtain some compromise measure which will be satisfactory, if not entirely so at least partially so, to everybody interested in the matter.

I hope the Senate will vote down the proposed amendment and pass the Senate bill as reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, and ask for a committee of conference so that we can adjust this matter

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DOLPH in the chair). The question is on the adoption of the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Jones] to the amendment reported by the Judiciary Committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary which has been read.

Mr. REAGAN. What is the question?
Mr. EDMUNDS. On agreeing to the amendment recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The title ought to be amended. I move to amend the title so as to make it read: "A bill to provide for holding a court of the United States in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title of Senate bill 270 might be added.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That will do.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the title so as to read: "A bill to establish a United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The title will be so amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Missouri wishes to move a conference, I think.

Mr. VEST. Yes. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments and ask for a committee of conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. Vest, Mr. Ed-MUNDS, and Mr. WILSON of Iowa were appointed.

ALASKA SALMON FISHERIES.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved. That the United States Commissioner of Fish and Fisheries be, and is hereby, directed to report without delay to Congress such information in reference to the salmon fisheries of Alaska and the conditions under which the same are now prosecuted as may be in his possession, and to recommend such legislation as may be necessary to prevent the impairment or destruction of these valuable fisheries.

of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 3401, in relation to the Pacific

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent for the informal laying aside of that bill and the taking up of the fortifications appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the fortifica-tions appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. FRYE. Is that an appropriation bill? Mr. DAWES. It is.

heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes.

Mr. DAWES. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, and that it be read for amendments, and that the committee amendments may be passed upon first as they are reached in the reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts asks that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, and that the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations may be acted upon as the bill is read. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 5, page 1, after the word "appropriated," to insert:

To be available until expended, and to be expended under the direct supervision of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification, created by the fortification appropriation act approved September 22, 1888, and in the manner prescribed by said act.

So as to read:

That the sums of money herein provided for be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be available until expended, and to be expended under the direct supervision of the Board of Ordnance and Fortification, created by the fortification appropriation act approved September 22, 1888, and in the manner prescribed by said act, namely.

Mr. MANDERSON. I move the following amendment, to come in at the end of line 19, on page 2:

For the purchase of movable submarine torpedoes propelled and controlled at will by power transmitted from shore stations, $200,000.

Mr. HARRIS. Is that an amendment to an amendment reported by the committee?

Mr. MANDERSON. It is an amendment that is agreed to by the committee, and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. Plumb], who has it in charge, is here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands it to be a committee amendment.

Mr. HARRIS. That explanation is satisfactory.

The Secretary read the following report, submitted by Mr. QUAY January 9, 1889:

The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (R. H. 4581) for the relief of Thomas Mathews and others, have had the same under consideration, and respectfully report:

This bill having passed the House at the first session of this Congress, was reported to that body from the Committee on Ways and Means. The report of said committee, which is hereby adopted, is as follows:

said committee, which is hereby adopted, is as follows:

"That the Committee on Ways and Means of the Forty-eighth Congress made favorable report of this bill after referring the claims therein provided for to the Secretary of the Treasury for consideration, and after due investigatien this committee adopt their favorable report, and append hereto a recent letter from the Secretary of the Treasury in relation thereto.

"The collector of customs at the port of Oswego, N. Y., from the 1st day of April, 1873, to the 31st day of December, 1882, inclusive, demanded and collected of the persons and firms hereinafter named the several sums set opposite their respective names. These several sums are made up of fees collected by the collector at said port during the time named for certificates claimed to be of the character authorized and covered by section 2554 of the Revised Statutes (section 2, act of March 2, 1879, Statutes at Large, vol. 1, page 706). The legality of these several payments was tested in the case of Cochrane vs. Schell, Supreme Court of the United States, October, 1882, term, in which decision it was held that the stamp affixed to consular invoices (on importations similar to those made by the persons named in the bill) was not such a certificate as warranted the collection from the importer of a fee of 20 cents. In a letter from the Secretary of the United States Treasury concerning the subject-matter of this bill and the fees therein mentioned, dated December 19, 1884, the Secretary disposes of the whole matter. Following is a copy of the letter:

of June last to the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting for his consideration (H. R. 7108) a bill for the relief of Thomas Mathews and others, I have the honor to return herewith a copy of a letter under the date of the 10th instant, from the collector of customs at Oswego, N. Y., advising the payment to Thomas Mathews and the other persons named in the bill of the amounts set opposite the several names of the same persons in his letter. The claims to these sums arise under a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, procured at the October term, 1882, in the case of Cochrane vs. Augustus Schell, in which decision it was held that the stamp affixed to consular invoices (on importation similar to those made by the persons named in the bill) was not such a certificate as warranted the collection from the importer of a fee of 20 cents. The sums named in the letter were for fees of this character exacted under the supposed authority of section 2654 of the Revised Statutes (section 2, act of March 2, 1879, Statutes at Large, volume 1, page 706). Accompanying the letter are detailed statements of the sums collected from each person named in the bill, with the date of collection as taken from the records of the collector's office.

"Sir: The Department is in receipt of a letter, dated the 6th instant, from Mr. Henry Talbott, clerk of your committee, in which he incloses bill H. R. 4881, entitled 'A bill for the relief of Thomas Mathews and others,' and requests that you be advised whether the Department has any information in the matters referred to in the bill since the date of its communication to Mr. Herbert, of the Committee on Ways and Means, of December 19, 1884, which is embodied in the report of the committee on the bill in Forty-eighth Congress (Report No. 5080)

S. Statutes at Large, vol. 13, p. 202), now section 2932 of the Revised Statutes, the decision of the collector of customs at Oswego, in exacting such fees, became 'final and conclusive.'

1. J. C. BURROWS,
Committee Ways and Means,
"United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C."

The committee is, as a rule, reluctant to recommend relief in cases where fees or duties were paid without protest and appeal, but the relief provided by this bill is recommended by the Treasury Department, and the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that the exactions from the claimants were illegal.

The case is in several respects exceptional.

The committee therefore recommend that the bill be concurred in.

Mr. COCKRELL. Now read the letter below there, of February 9, 1888

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SIR: The Department is in receipt of a letter, dated the 6th instant, from Mr. Henry Talbott, clerk of your committee, in which he incloses bill H. Respectfully yours,

I. H. MAYNARD, Assistant Secretary.

Hon. J. C. Burrows,
Committee Ways and Means,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. COCKRELL. The point I want to call attention to is the letter of Mr. Maynard, from which it appears that the first report made by the Secretary of the Treasury did not disclose the fact that these fees were paid without any protest or appeal. No objection was made.

were paid regularly without objection or protest as required by law. After the lapse of years, a decision of the Supreme Court in a similar case held that the officer was not entitled to exact these fees. The whole revenues of the Government may be liable to be disturbed if that rule is adopted, and if after the lapse of years where fees have been paid and revenues collected without protest or objection they can be refunded because a court may in some other case decide that their collection was not authorized by the existing law. I say the whole revenues that have been placed in the Treasury Department may be very largely disturbed, and this is the first case I remember where the Senate has departed from the rule of making a payment in a case where there was no protest or objection made.

no protest or objection made.

Mr. SHERMAN. The distinction between the case to which the Senator refers and this case is very marked, although I will not vote for any bill of this kind. The cases to which he refers are where duties are collected and paid without protest or notice. In such cases it would not be safe for the Government ever to refund, but that does not distinction between the two classes of cases.

I do not think as a matter of public policy it is wise to refund money that has been voluntarily paid in pursuance of what was supposed to be the law, and therefore the Senator is right in that particular that it is not a good plan to refund money which has been paid without protest, and if this were a duty levied under what was claimed to be existing law and paid without protest or notice, it would be very dangerous to refund it because that principle would apply to many millions of dollars that have been paid. In such cases the duties paid enter into the cost of the article and are reimbursed by the sale of the article in the markets of the country. Therefore the Government has never, to my knowledge, made a refund of duties paid that had been paid without notice and protest. There is, however, a distinction between that case and this because these are fees illegally exacted according to a decision of the Supreme Court.

Mr. MITCHELL. I ask the Senator whether there is any difference between a case where too much tax has been collected under some misinterpretation of the law by the executive officer and a case where the law imposing the tax has been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court? I should like to have the opinion of the Senator upon that.

Mr. SHERMAN. Wherever the duty enters into the cost of the article for consumption and is paid without notice or protest, then it is never refunded, because it is supposed that the importer is reimbursed from the sale of the article; but I do not know that that would apply to the case of fees illegally charged, because there is quite a distinction between the two cases.

Mr. HISCOCK. As I understand it, there is practically no way for a claimant in a case like this to get relief except through an act of Con-There is no protest that he can make and nothing that he can do, and he must come to Congress for the purpose of having the money oo, and he must come to Congress for the purpose of having the money refunded to him. I think there is no protest provided for where simply the question of fees is involved, where they have been exacted.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio, who deservedly ranks as the highest authority we have on such questions as this, whether he puts this rule upon the fact that the duty paid enters in the sale of the article by the importer into the price he obtains? For instance, suppose an importer considering the duty to be one supposed. instance, suppose an importer, considering the duty to be one sum, makes a contract to deliver to a customer a certain article for a particular price and a higher duty is assessed than he anticipated, so that he has not been able to add the duty to the selling price, does the Senator from Ohio in that case understand that the policy of this rule applies so as to be a good reason for refusing payment because protest did not happen to be seasonably made?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Government can not enter into an inquiry as to what the importer has done or what contracts he has made as to the disposition of his goods. If he pays the duty exacted of him by the collector and makes no protest, makes no demand, according to the plain provisions of the law he is expressly excluded from making any claim for a refund; and that rule has never been relaxed, nor does the Government stop to inquire whether he has sold the goods beforehand or not. In the case put by the Senator from Massachusetts, as a matter of course the protest would be made naturally. The fact that he did not make it shows that he put the same construction upon the law as the collector did. Therefore, I do not consider that point material to the difference between the two cases, and this is that the law does not require a protest in this case where illegal fees are exacted.

Mr. COCKRELL. The report of the Secretary says it does. tary Maynard says—and I call the Senator's attention to it—

It would seem, however, upon reading said letter of the 19th December, 1884-That is the first one-that the Department failed to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the customs fees in question, which the bill proposes to refund to Mr. Mathews and the other parties mentioned, were paid at the custom-house at Oswego, during the period stated, without protest and appeal, and consequently that under the provisions of the fifteenth section of the act of June 30, 1864 (U. S. Statutes at Large, vol. 13, p. 202), now section 2932 of the Revised Statutes, the decision of the collector of customs at Oswego, in exacting such fees, became "final and conclusive."

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the Senator look at the law and see whether or not that is required?

Mr. FRYE. This is opening up a pretty broad discussion here, and if I have the right I shall have to call for the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine is entitled to call for the regular order.

Mr. HISCOCK. This will take but a little while. I think the Senator will find if he examines the statute that a protest is not required. Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator will permit me I will read the clause of the statute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Maine yield? Mr. FRYE. For that purpose.

Mr. COCKRELL. Section 2932 of the Revised Statutes provides:

Mr. COCKRELL. Section 2932 of the Revised Statutes provides:

The decision of the respective collectors of customs as to all fees, charges, and exactions of whatever character, other than those relating to the rate and amount of duties to be paid on the tonnage of any vessel, or on merchandise and the dutiable costs and charges thereon, claimed by them, or by any of the officers under them, in the performance of their official duty, shall be final and conclusive against all persons interested in such fees, charges, or exactions, unless the like notice that an appeal will be taken from such decision to the Secretary of the Treasury shall be given within ten days from the making of such decision, and unless such appeal shall actually be taken within thirty days from the making of such decision; and the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury shall be final and conclusive upon the matter so appealed, unless suit shall be brought for the recovery of such fees, oharges, or exactions, within the period as provided for in the preceding section in regard to duties. No suit shall be maintained in any court for the recovery of any such fees, costs, and charges alleged to have been erroneously or illegally exacted, until the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury shall have been first had on such appeal, unless such decision of the Secretary shall be delayed more than ninety days from the date of such appeal in case of an entry at any port east of the Rocky Mountains, or more than five months in case of an entry of those mountains.

So that they are placed upon a perfect equality.

So that they are placed upon a perfect equality.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the law places fees exacted upon the same footing as duties, I do not think it would be wise to open the door for that class of cases. My general impression was that it was confined to a rate of duty which is already fixed and upon which there can be no appeal unless there be notice given and suit commenced at the proper time. The law seems to put these fees upon the same footing, and therefore I do not think the bill ought to pass.

Mr. COCKRELL. Under the circumstances I hope the Senator from New York will not press the bill, because I shall be compelled to object to it; and now that the matter has been brought before them, let the Committee on Claims consider and settle it.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumes the consideration of the bill (S. 3401) in relation to the Pacific railroads, the pending question being on the motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] to recommit with instructions.

Mr. FARWELL. I ask that Calendar number 2599, being House bill

3112, for the relief of Phineas T. Richardson, be now considered. It will only take a moment. I will say that the Committee on Military Affairs recommend the passage of this bill, and also the Secretary of

Mr. FRYE. If I yield to the Senator from Illinois, for whom I have a very profound respect, I shall be obliged to yield to other Senators. Therefore I must object.

PRINTING OF A BILL.

Mr. COCKRELL. I must claim of the Senator from Maine the indulgence of being allowed to ask an order to have a bill printed. The bill (H. R. 6106) for the relief of certain volunteers and regular soldiers of the late war and the war with Mexico, which was passed the other day with a substitute from the Senate, has not been printed in bill form. It was read and printed in the RECORD, having been considered when it was first reported, and I now ask that it may be printed in separate form.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and it will be so ordered.

INDEBTEDNESS OF PACIFIC RAILROADS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3401) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act; and to provide for a settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain of said railroads, and to secure to the United States the payment of all indebtedness of certain of the companies therein mentioned.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is the motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. STEWART. I should like to have the resolution of the Senator from Oregon read.

military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862; also to amend an act approved July 2, 1864, and also an act approved May 7, 1878, both in amendment of said first-mentioned act; and to provide for a settlement of claims growing out of the issue of bonds to aid in the construction of certain of said railroads, and to secure to the United States the payment of all indebtedness of certain of the companies therein mentioned, with the accompanying report, No. 1950, first session Fiftieth Congress, be, and the same is hereby, recommitted to the Select Committee on the President's Message transmitting the Report of the Pacific Railway Commission, with instructions to include in said bill such proposed legislation as in the judgment of such committee is proper, providing for the ascertainment of the amount of the indebtedness to the Government justly payable, due and to become due, by the Central Pacific Railroad Company as the successor to the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California and the Western Pacific Railroad Company, in respect of the bonds of the United States herefore issued to aid in the construction of the Central Pacific and the Western Pacific Railroads, and for the proper security and funding of the same.

Mr. STEWART Is a substitute for that resolution in order?

Mr. STEWART. Is a substitute for that resolution in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A motion to commit can only be amended by a motion to instruct. There can be no further amendment offered

Mr. STEWART. My motion is to recommit with instructions, and I want to offer it as a substitute for the pending motion of the same character.

The PRESIDENT protempore. The Chair can not entertain a motion to further amend the motion to commit.

Mr. STEWART. I will then give notice that when the pendiug motion is disposed of I shall offer what I send to the desk to be read. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read for information. The Secretary read as follows:

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That Senate bill 3401, providing for funding the indebtedness of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, be, and it is hereby, recommitted to the Select Committee on Pacific Railroads, with instructions to report a bill which shall provide for the payment of the indebtedness to the United States of the several Pacific railroads for the construction of which bonds have been issued, by requiring sums of money equal to the indebtedness to the United States of the Union Pacific Railroad Company and its branches, and the Central Pacific Railroad Company, as the successor of the Central Pacific Railroad Company of California and the Western Pacific Railroad Company to be expended by said railroad companies, respectively, in the construction of such improvements on the main lines of said railroads, including double tracks and tunnels to avoid high grades, and such new unincumbered branch railroads as Congress may approve, and in the construction of such hydraulic works for the purpose of irrigation as Congress may authorize, with such limitations upon freights and fares to be charged by said railroad companies on the roads so improved and constructed as will insure cheap transportation.

The PRESIDENT was tempore. The question recurs on the motion

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL].

Mr. STEWART addressed the Senate. Having spoken for some

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish the Senator would kindly yield to me for a few moments. It is getting late and this is Saturday afternoon. I desire to ask the Senate to concur with the House in a bill that has passed both the House and the Senate very nearly in the same form. It is a bill to organize the militia of the District of Columbia, House bill 4961, Calendar No. 2648.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nevada yield?
Mr. STEWART. I yield for that purpose.
[Mr. STEWART's speech will be published after it shall have been concluded. See Appendix.]

DISTRICT MILITIA.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask unanimous consent to call up House bill

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read by title. The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 4961) to provide for the organization of the militia of the District of Columbia.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be read for information.

Mr. HOAR. How long a bill is it?
Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator permit me to make a word of explanation?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the bill read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let me make an explanation first. The bill was presented to both Houses. It passed the Senate with certain amendments, considerably reduced in form, not changing the substance but reducing the extent. The Senate passed it. The House amended the same bill somewhat differently. Our bill was better rhetorically, but their bill is better economically. They reduce the expense considerably. The Senate Committee on Military Affairs instructed me to report the House bill favorably and to ask a concurrence practically with the House.

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] asked how long was the bill. That is the only difficulty, but I thought this was as good a time as any to read it. I think it will take about sixteen minutes to read the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks that the bill may be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. For information, subject to objection.

The Secretary read the bill, and by unanimous consent the Senate,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (8. 3401) to amend an act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, in this little District, where the Army of the United States now in respect of such expense performs the duties for which this expense would be paid; and it sets up here a military organization to be paid for by the United States which is a somewhat large one in respect of having a commanding general authorized to have parades and days of duty in his discretion at the price per day named for all these officers and men. Very likely it is a good thing of itself, but if any commanding general wishes to have frequent parades the footing of the bill at the end of the year would be something enormous if I can understand it from this rapid reading.

I have next simply to suggest, and my duty will be done about it, that some of these provisions in regard to arrests, etc., of people who interfere with these organizations are, I am very much afraid, quite outside of the line of the constitutional possibilities that belong to Congress in respect of private liberty, in that it is proposed to make the police court of this District the first, last, and final judge in many instances of whether an offense has been committed which interferes with this establishment that is thus set up.

Having said this as a mere suggestion to my friend from Connecticut, who has charge of this bill, I have nothing more to say. I never saw it before, and I should not be quite willing to vote for it at this present moment as it stands.

Mr. HARRIS. What is the estimate that the Senator makes as to Mr. HARRIS. What is the estimate that the Schator makes as to the probable expense of the organization?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is quite impossible to make an estimate in this hurried run, but I see in the way things are to be paid, the frequent public operations, and so on and so on, that it would be, I can not say how great, but I should think it would be rather larger than we should wish to go into as a mere ornamental arrangement without more consideration than we can give it to-night.

Mr. HARRIS. How is that expense to be paid?
Mr. EDMUNDS. Out of the Treasury of the United States.
Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, this bill is modeled upon the best militia bills of the several States. The expense, the cost under it, will not be near as large as the State of Connecticut pays for the care of its

The Senator from Vermont wisely calls upon us to look out for the expenditures under the bill, and he speaks of the possible expense, considering the fees to be paid whenever the men are called out. body is paid for a parade, excepting the musicians, $6 a day for the principal musicians and $4 for the others and $2 for the regularly enlisted corps of field music.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is it $8 for the chief musician?
Mr. HAWLEY. Yes, $8; that is a difference of $2. I would rather pay that myself than have the bill fail. The soldiers get no pay at all.
Connecticut pays $1.50 or $2 a day to its soldiers in its annual parade of six days. I find nothing here for that. They are allowed, it is true, to draw their clothing under exactly the same regulations that govern the regular Army. A suit of clothing will last from three to five years. There is no other expenditure here except the rent of armories and the ordinary offices.

In many of the States, in my own State, the State pays for every In many of the States, in my own State, the State pays for every necessary armory. In some cases four or five or six companies are able to join in the same armory. In other cases an armory is for a single company alone. There are some rents, there are the clothing and arms to be properly receipted and accounted for as if they were part of the regular Army, under the same regulation precisely. This District being the child of the nation and not of any State, the expense will be less than that of any ordinary State militia that is in any way organized in modern style with no pay to private soldiers whatever and no pay to modern style, with no pay to private soldiers whatever and no pay to officers, with pay for nobody but the musicians.

The Senator's criticism is as to the right of way, the arrest of any-body disturbing them. I do not think there is anything in that of which anybody can complain. It is simply an ordinary regulation, such as the police would enforce on any day of any parade.

This bill repeals the act of 1803. There has been no change of the militia law in this District within the last eighty-six years, and it is time it was revised.

It is an interesting fact that now every citizen liable to military duty here is required to keep on hand a musket, a rifle, so many flints, so many balls, so much powder, a sword or hanger, a spontoon-and there many balls, so much powder, a sword or hanger, a spontoon—and there are not two hundred people in the District except some of the very oldest citizens who know what a spontoon is. The law is nearly one hundred years old, and altogether antiquated.

A number of patriotic and public-spirited young men have maintained an admirable military organization, or a number of organizations, at their own expense entirely for arms and for armories and rents and all that. This relieves them of only a nortion of the burden. It proall that. This relieves them of only a portion of the burden. It provides for a very compact and handsome organization. The public sentiment of this District and of the country would be very much disappointed if there were no organizations whatever to turn out on various occasions of ceremony.

Mr. COCKRELL. Will it be any interruption of the Senator if I say a word?

Mr. HAWLEY. Certainly not.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have not had time to compare these bills. The House bill which the Senator has called up is No. 4961, and we passed through the Senate on the 17th day of May last Senate bill 2602, and that bill was reported in the House July 14, 1888, with an amendment, referred to the House Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

Now, I see that the two bills are very materially different, and I see that the House committee reported the Senate bill as it passed, with only one or two amendments.

Mr. HAWLEY. But let me suggest to the Senator before he goes

Mr. COCKRELL. One moment. Let me call attention further—for I have only had time to read two or three sections—that as I unfor I have only had time to read two or three sections—that as I understand the House bill its theory is to take all the citizens of the District of Columbia and put them in the militia. I say that kind of a militia will not be worth a continental cent, whereas the Senate bill proposes to make so many companies of militia, and they will be organized from the young men of the District who take an interest in it and will amount to something. The House bill does not amount to anything in the world, in my judgment. It will be absolutely useless to undertake to take all the people of the District under forty-five years of age, and that is exactly what this bill does.

Mr. HAWLEY. No, Mr. President.

Mr. COCKRELL. The first section provides—

That every able-bodied male citizen resident within the District of Columbia.

That every able-bodied male citizen resident within the District of Columbia, of the age of eighteen years and under the age of forty-five years, excepting persons exempted by section 2, and idiots, lunatics, common drunkards, vagabonds, paupers, and persons convicted of any infamous crime, shall be enrolled in the militia.

Now, section 2 of the Senate bill says "that in time of peace the National Guard shall consist of not more than thirty-six companies of infantry," etc., with the limits described. It is the better way, and there will be no trouble in the world to take up the House bill, strike out all after the enacting clause, and substitute the Senate bill just as we passed it through the Senate and then ask for a conference. It will go back and a conference committee can be appointed and it will become a law at this session. Then the conference committee will have both bills before them.

The Senate bill received pretty careful consideration and has been reported favorably by the House committee with only one or two amendments, and it does seem to me that that would be a great deal the better course.

Mr. HARRIS. I should like to ask the Senator from Connecticut or the Senator from Missouri if the House bill that I understand the Senate to be now considering has been referred to and reported back by the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. HAWLEY. It has.

Mr. HARRIS. That is what I did not understand.

Mr. COCKRELL. I confess very frankly it has been reported by the committee, but I was so detained that I could not be at the committee meeting at the time it was considered, and I have never had any time to examine the bill until now.

I think the Senate bill was pretty well matured. The Senator from Connecticut will remember that he gave considerable attention to the preparation of the Senate bill, and it was discussed. We have not had time to discuss this bill. The Senate bill has gone to the House. The House committee considered it for three months and then they acted upon it and reported it favorably with very few amendments. I think it is much better for us to take that and ask for a conference. There is no difficulty about the time. There is abundance of time, and that would be a great deal the better course.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator allow me to correct him some-

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.
Mr. HAWLEY. It is true that in the original bill—it was stricken out of the Senate bill-there was an enrollment of the militia provided for, but that is to be done by the assessors of the District. It does not mean that they shall be organized. It is a mere census of the persons liable to military duty, for the House bill contains the same provision we had in the Senate bill on the top of page 5, in sec-

That in time of peace the National Guard shall consist of not more than twenty-eight companies of infantry, which shall be arranged by the commanding general into such regiments, battalions, and unattached companies as he may deem expedient.

The Senate allowed it to be thirty-six companies. The House reduced the number to twenty-eight, reduced the cost, reduced the number of troops from thirty-six companies, which would ordinarily average sixty men in a company, to twenty-eight; and those previous sections which made the difference in bulk between them contained some sections which are chiefly words and are of no consequence. The enrollment, I say, is a mere census of the men liable to military duty and does not contemplate their being organized into companies at all.

I do not think there is any material difference between the two bills. I think the Senate bill is better in some things and the House bill in

I beg leave to say also that one reason why I would rather not wait for a conference, if there be no material difference between the bills, is that a moderate appropriation will be necessary in order to enable these men to perfect their organization, and unless the proper officers are able to make their estimate and have it submitted to the Committee on Appropriations within two or three days they stand very little chance of getting action without postponement for a year.

Mr. COCKRELL. The conference committee can put in an amendment making an appropriation to carry out the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. If the Senator from Missouri, whom I respect in these matters very much, really insists upon it, I shall consent to the substitution of the bill the Senate passed for this and to having a conference. I think there is no danger whatever, though, in acting upon this bill as it is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There are a great many places in this bill—and I say it with diffidence, because it is the first time I have seen it—which appear to me to be open to grave consideration; first, as it regards the point of expense (which so far as the public safety is concerned is nothing, I admit, compared to having a proper organization here), and second, as regards the regulation of affairs here which, as I said before, I very much fear in some respects will turn out to be utterly unlawful.

But I wish to call attention just now to the provision of section 49, which is a small matter, but it bears on the question of expense:

SEC. 49. That all officers and employés of the United States and of the District of Columbia who are members of the National Guard shall be entitled to leave of absence from their respective duties, without loss of pay or time, on all days of any parade or encampment ordered or authorized under the provisions of this act.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will explain that.
Mr. EDMUNDS. If the Senator will allow me to state my point first, then he can explain. If I understand this bill on this hasty reading, the commanding general is authorized to order parades and encampments, etc., from time to time as he may deem expedient. Perhaps there is a limit as to the number. I ask my friend from Connecticut to state to me on what principle it is that if I happen to be a justice of the peace in the District of Columbia or a clerk in the War Department, and choose to be an active member of this militia, I may be absent from the parade to which I am called and draw my pay as a justice of the peace or a clerk in the War Department, and at the same time draw my pay for attending an encampment that I do not attend. I shall be glad to have it explained. They are to be excused from attendance without loss of pay.

Mr. HAWLEY. On all days of parade or encampment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. I see the Senator's point, I think, that a man might go away under pretense of going to his company and go off fishing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no; quite the reverse. What this says is that as to this military organization when there is a parade or encampment which the soldier is called to attend he is entitled to his $2 a day or whatever it may be.

Mr. HAWLEY. He gets nothing.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It says he shall be entitled to a leave of absence without loss of pay or time. That is a leave of absence from his commanding officer.

Mr. HAWLEY. Precisely. I understand the Senator. It is not a

Mr. HAWLEI. Frecisely. I understand the Senator. It is not a leave of absence from military duty; he does not mean that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is just what it says.

Mr. HAWLEY. Oh, no; "shall be entitled to leave of absence from the respective duties." It means, of course, his duties as an em-

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President—
Mr. HAWLEY. Now let me finish the explanation. As the National Guard is constituted in many States now-and it is a matter of national pride that it should be in reasonable shape as it is in a number of the States—when the young men go off for a few days' training, so far as I know in actual practice, without an exception, clerks and others are permitted by their employers, it being a dull season when they can be spared, to go without deduction from their salaries. Otherwise the young men would have to pay two or three dollars a day for the privilege of going out to train themselves as defenders of the country. This says that Uncle Sam shall be upon the same ground that the ordinary citizen puts himself upon when he permits his son or his clerk to go out and spend a day in the militia and does not dock his salary.

I think that is very reasonable.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it is, but if that is the case the Senator from Connecticut understands this section to mean that when a clerk in the War Department, for illustration, goes to attend an encampment and does it, he shall not lose his day's pay of $3, or whatever may be the proportion of the monthly salary he would get as a clerk in the War Department. Is that what the Senator means?

Mr. HAWLEY. I am not sure that I understand the Senator. Does he mean to say that he expects these men to go away under pretense of going to the encampment, and not go there, and that then they should be docked?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no.
Mr. HAWLEY. The bill means that when they go on training day they shall not lose their pay in the War Department.
Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not what it says.
Mr. HAWLEY. That is what it means.
Mr. COCKRELL. Will the Senato from Vermont permit me to read what we did in the Senate bill?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. COCKRELL. This very question was up, and it was an important question, and I insisted on its being settled in the bill we passed; and here is the section we passed in the Senate:

SEC. 32. That all officers and employés of the United States and of the District of Columbia who are members of the National Guard shall be entitled to leave of absence from their respective duties, without loss of pay or time, on the six days of encampment ordered or authorized under the provisions of this act.

Under this bill the commanding officer can take the employés of the Government and put them on duty for thirty, sixty, or ninety days, and the Government will have to pay them.

Mr. HAWLEY. But the President is commander-in-chief of the whole of them.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not under this.
Mr. HAWLEY. He is by the letter of the bill and also by the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. COCKRELL. I know, but that practically amounts to noth-

Mr. EDMUNDS. But it is the particular duty of this commanding general. By section 43 it is provided-

That the National Guard shall perform not less than six consecutive days of camp duty in each year, at such time as may be ordered by the commanding general.

He is the master of that.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is not the President. It is the man appointed by the President.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He is the man appointed, and he may order out these people for any length of time he thinks proper. If the fortythird section means what the Senator from Connecticut says it was intended to mean I have not the least objection to it, but I am afraid it does not, for I think when a clerk in the War Department or in the Post-Office Department or elsewhere goes to perform military duty his pay should not be docked for that day in civil employment. That is perfectly right, as it strikes me.

Mr. HAWLEY. I thought the Senator said so.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not think it reads in that way. Mr. HAWLEY. I can not make it read anything else.
Mr. SAWYER. I ask unanimous consent that we take up the two pension bills remaining on the Calendar from yesterday.

Mr. HAWLEY. This bill is before the Senate now, and let us settle it one way or the other.

Mr. SAWYER. I thought you had got through.

Mr. SAWYER. I thought you had got through.
Mr. HAWLEY. Not yet. I wish we had.
Mr. COCKRELL. I dislike exceedingly to antagonize this bill in any shape, manner, or form. I assisted the Senator from Connecticut in the passage of the other bill through the Senate, and we agreed on the amendments, and we provided against the very abuses that I say are not provided against in this bill; and it is for that reason that I think we ought to substitute the Senate bill, which was under discussion, and amended and very materially changed, and all these things about indefinite payments and so on were brought down. I think the Senator ought not to object to the Senate bill being substituted for this

Mr. EDMUNDS (to Mr. COCKRELL). Move it as an amendment to this bill.

Mr. COCKRELL. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause and substitute the bill just as it passed the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri moves to amend the bill. The amendment will be read.

Hedden, collector of the district of the city of New York, in settlement of his account a credit for the sum of $3.073.74, the same being now charged to the said Edward L. Hedden as collector of said district, for moneys received at the post-ofice in the city of New York, and for remittances made by postmasters at other places in the United States, for duties collected on books imported through the mails between the 1st day of July, 1885, and the 29th day of August, 1886, and for which the said Douglas Smith also has failed to account without default or negligence of the said Collector Hedden.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. KILGORE. I would like to know more about it.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. KILGORE. No; I am asking for information.

Mr. COX. I will give the gentleman the information he seeks.

There is not a dollar of the amount covered by this bill which comes out of the Treasury. These collectors—a Republican and a Demo-crat—have settled their accounts with the Government, amounting in the aggregate to $700,000,000, and all of this vast amount has been settled and accounted for, leaving the small balance covered by this bill on the books against them. The balance against them arose from irregularities in the accounts kept by a clerk named Douglas Smith, who failed to account for the sums which make up the aggregate of who failed to account for the sums which make up the aggregate of the bill, and this proposes, under the precedents established in the case of President Arthur and others, to give credit for that amount and liquidate the account. I will state that this was reported in the Senate by Mr. BECK, and the House committee reports it invorably.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. And unanimously.

Mr. COX. And unanimously. I ask, therefore, that these men shall have the relief sought by the bill.

Mr. KILGORE. From what committee does this come?

Mr. COX. From the Committee on Claims

Mr. COX. From the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GALLINGER. I found the bill on the Calendar, and therere called it up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair supposed the error occurred in that way.

Mr. KILGORE. And passed the Senate?

Mr. COX. Yes; passed the Senate on a report prepared by the Senator from Kentucky, Mr. Beck.

Mr. HOLMAN. The clerk through whom this irregularity occurred-was he appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. COX. No, sir; he was a clerk in the Post-Office, and was assigned to the duty of verifying remittances of money from postmasters for duties on books, but proved to be a defaulter without any fault of the collectors, whose transactions with the Government, as I have said, amounted to over seven hundred millions of dollars.

Mr. REED. The responsibility nero and Mr. REED. The responsibility nero and Mr. COX. Purely technical.

Mr. HOLMAN. This clerk, I understand, was a clerk of the Post-Office Department?

Mr. COX. Yes, sir.
Mr. SPINOLA. And is now in jail.

Mr. COX. He was a bad man.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of

There being no objection, the bill was considered and ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. COX moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MATTIE S. WHITNEY.

Mr. HOOKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 10482) to carry out the findings of the Court of Claims in the case of Mattie S. Whitney, as administratrix of Franklin S. Whitney, deceased, heretofore referred to said court, and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the report in that case be read.

The report (by Mr. Stone, of Kentucky) was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of

Mr. HOPKINS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, this claim, reported from the Committee on War Claims, was before the House at another time during this session. At that time I had occasion to raise the question that unless time was given for debate, and full time, I should object to its consideration, and I produced a record of the Southern Claims Commission in which they have reviewed the case and allege that the claimant was disloyal during the late war. Now, I repeat the statement that unless time is given to discuss this bill fully, and these parties who are prosecuting the claim produce evidence to overcome this allegation of disloyalty, I must object to it now. If the party is willing to allow time for discussion, then I am willing to have it submitted to the House on its merits.

Mr. HOOKER. The decision of the Court of Claims establishes that question beyond doubt and absolutely.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Speaker, I must call for the regular order if there is to be discussion here.

Mr. HOOKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois object?

Mr. HOOKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois object?

Mr. HOOKER. Suppose you say one hour, and I will give you the whole of it.

Mr. BLOUNT. With the view of proceeding with the appropriation bill, I must demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. That request of the gentleman from Mississippi will be pending, and the gentlemen can try to arrange the matter by conference between themselves. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

Mr. WARNER. I ask the gentleman from Georgia to withdraw

Mr. WARNER. I ask the gentleman from Georgia to withdraw the call to enable me to call up a matter.

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not see how I can do that. The gentleman from Mississippi has a bill pending.

Mr. WARNER. This does not interfere with that bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. If the regular order is withdrawn of course that question is before the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to what I believe to be a question of

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is this: The gentleman from Kentucky, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs; the gentleman from chairman of the Committee on Foreign Anairs; the gentleman from Missouri, chairman of the Committee on Commerce; the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, from Texas, and myself, as chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, in order to expedite the business of the House, desire to have orders fixed for night sessions for the consideration of unobjectionable measures. What I wish to ask is, if it is not in order to submit a motion to set apart evenings for that purpose?

The SPEAKER It is not Unanimous consent will be proceeded.

The SPEAKER. It is not. Unanimous consent will be proceeded with, and gentlemen will be recognized in their order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I appeal to the gentleman from Georgia and ask him to let these committees have an opportunity to submit that Mr. BLAND. There is plenty of time during daytime for the business now before the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. We will give those committees time.

ELIZABETH B. SMITH.

I rise to a privileged question. Mr. BAYNE. The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to call up for consideration the bill S. 2910, on which the previous question has been ordered, and on which I desire to have a vote. It can be disposed of in a very few minutes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 2910) to increase the pension now paid to Elizabeth B. Smith, widow of Bvt. Maj. Gen. Thomas Kilby Smith, United States Volunteers.

The SPEAKER. This is one of the bills coming over from the Friday evening session.

Mr. BLOUNT. I raise the question of consideration upon that bill at this time.

Mr. BAYNE. I hope my friend will not raise the question of consideration.

The question was taken, and the House refused to consider the bill. Mr. BLOUNT. I move to dispense with the morning hour for the call of committees.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. ENLOE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 3312) to create the northeastern division of the southern Federal judicial district of Georgia, and to take certain counties from the northern district, and add to the southern district, and to provide for holding courts in said northeastern division, and for other purposes;

A bill (H. R. 1368) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes; and A bill (H. R. 11693) to amend section 555, Revised Statutes relating to the District of Columbia.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Georgia, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills. The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole

(Mr. CRISP in the chair).

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills, and the Clerk will read the first bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12490) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of this bill.

Mr. REED. That is not to interfere with general debate.
Mr. BLOUNT. Not at all.
Mr. BINGHAM. Does that amount to precluding general debate?
The CHAIRMAN. It does not.

Mr. BLOUNT. Before we proceed, as there are indications of a desire for general debate on this bill, I would like to ask my friend from Pennsylvania what time he desires.

Mr. BINGHAM. We desire one hour on this side of the House. Mr. BLOUNT. Will two hours for general debate be sufficient? Mr. BINGHAM. I do not know what that side of the House de-

This side desires one hour.

Mr. BLOUNT. I think, then, we had better reserve one hour for this side, and I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to two hours, to be equally divided between the two sides of the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not know whether I shall want to participate in the general debate, but unless I can be accorded some time I

Mr. BLOUNT. Then, Mr. Chairman, we will proceed, and, at the proper time, I will move that the committee rise and let the House determine to what time general debate shall be limited.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that general debate upon this bill be limited to two hours. Is there objection? Mr. TOWNSHEND. I think that the gentleman from Georgia is right about not wanting to fix any time just now. The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the bill reported from the committee carries $66,595,344.28. The amount to be derived from postage and other sources of revenue is $62,508,759.28, and there remains, therefore, the sum of $4,068,585 to be taken out of the Treasury of the United States by process of taxation. The amount to be paid out of the Treasury of the United States is larger than was anticipated when the report was made on the bill at the beginning of the last session of Congress. This comes largely from a few-causes. In the first place, sir, in the matter of railroad transportation, while the expenditures have been increased from $654,000 to $1,354,000 in previous years, the amount contained in this bill over the bill of the current fiscal year reaches the enormous and unprecedented sum of $2,216,687.40. This large percentage of increase, however, is only apparent.

There is a deficiency in the appropriation for the railway mail service estimated by the Department, which will likely appear in the deficiency bill hereafter of more than $1,000,000. This, sir, has grown out of several causes. In the first place, the increase of mileage is much more than it was; in the next place, the percentage of increase of mail matter has run up from about 12 to 20 per cent. Of course the amount due the railroads has increased in a corresponding degree. The next item to which I call attention is a very large one, in relation to the free-delivery service. The estimated increase has run from $7,000,000 to $8,000,000, and as compared with many other previous years it requires explanation.

The eight-hour law alone brings an increase of expense in the next year of $1,400,000. In addition to that the act of 1887 (the exact date of which I can not now recall) increasing the number of cities to which the letter-carrier service might be applied by lowering the standard from cities with a population of 20,000 or $20,000 gross receipts to cities containing a population of 10,000 or having $10,000 gross receipts has contributed very largely to this increase. The actual increase of expenditures, however, in this fiscal year, growing out of the increase of service alone, is spoken of by the superintendent in the following language:

In this estimate it will be seen that in addition to the amount which is required to be appropriated under existing laws but $253,750 is for additional car-

That is, out of the million dollars, only this amount, $253,750, goes to additional carriers. But there must be added to this, by virtue of our own legislation here, the following sums:

For promotion of two thousand seven hundred carriers, under the act of August 2, 1882, $440,000; pay of substitutes, $206,000; pay of substitutes for additional carriers on vacation, $8,000, and so on.

By reason of legislation which we have heretofore enacted we have forced forward the expenditure in the matter of the letter-carrier serv-But while this increase in the cost of that service has taken place there is another aspect of the subject which is much more satisfactory. From the years 1874 and 1875 the letter-carrier service has paid its own expenses, and, notwithstanding the million dollars of additional expenditure during the current fiscal year resulting from the eighthour law, we shall have a surplus revenue from that service. So, with reference to the next fiscal year, notwithstanding the addition to the cost of the service of $1,400,000 by reason of the additional pay to letter-carriers under the eight-hour law, we shall still have half a million dollars surplus revenue from the letter-carrier system.

So, sir, it is some consolation to us to know in connection with this large increase of expenditure in the postal service, illustrated not merely in this point of the pending measure, but also in warm the known.

in this point of the pending measure, but also in many other branches of the service—it is some consolation to us to know that while there is an enormous enlargement of the service and of its cost, yet the amount taken out of the public Treasury has been decreased, and the enlargement of the service is only indicative of the enormous activity existing in our commercial and social life.

Mr. Chairman, the item for clerks in post-offices brings about an increase of the appropriation for the current fiscal year of about $600,000. I do not propose to discuss in detail other items of the bill than this particular one, because by reason of the similarity of the service, and for the further reason that the rules of this House exclude new legislation upon an appropriation bill, the similarity of the bill from year to year makes elaborate explanation of details unnecessary and fatiguing.

The item of clerk-hire, as I have said, shows much beyond the usual ercentage of increase. This results from two causes: first, not as percentage of increase. This results from two causes: first, not as liberal appropriations for that service as we should have had heretofore; and second, the legislation classifying clerks in first and second class offices inserted in this bill by unanimous consent of the House. As I shall discuss the second proposition, the necessity for classification, I shall illustrate the first, so I shall proceed at once to the consideration of the classification of clerks in first and second class offices and the reasons therefor.

We have here fixed the salaries of postal clerks, because we have found that by a failure to do it in the past, when insufficient appropriations have been made the clerks have been cut down to a meager amount of compensation and the service itself has been rendered unsatisfactory to them and less permanent in the character of its employés. So with the letter-carrier service: it was so delicate in its nature and so important that the Congress of the United States saw fit to classify the lettercarriers in the several cities of the country entitled to them into various classes, which I will not now stop to enumerate. Not only that, but leaves of absence were given to them, and then the eight-hour law was passed. We have gone on in this line of legislation, prompted by a desire for the betterment of the public service, until the clerks in the post-offices only have been left at the mercy of an arbitrary assignment of salary, made, perhaps, by a clerk in the Department, who has but few facilities for informing himself or for forming a judgment in that connection. In the report of 1883 the then Postmaster-General,

Judge Gresham, transmitted to Congress the report of the First Assistant, which contained the following language:

As evidence of the increased requirements of the service and the close surveillance of this important subject, your attention is called to the fact that 2,758 allowances for clerk-hire were made during the last fiscal year; an increase of 478, or 20.9 per cent., as compared with the previous year, and 1,422, or 105.4 per cent., more than was made in 1880-21. Two thousand six hundred and four applications for clerical assistance were declined, chiefly because the appropriation was exhausted. In fact, in order to keep the urgent demands of the service within the limited appropriation at the disposal of this Department, it was necessary to "create" a fund by making the reductions at 185 offices.

In other words, the fund was given by Congress; he was required to conduct the service with it; and when the service was growing he could only carry it on by reducing the salaries of the employes. At the very time when the service was requiring better capacity the exigencies of the appropriation demanded poorer compensation. In 1884 the then Postmaster-General used the following language:

The increase of the postal service, especially the large increase of letter-mail occasioned by the reduction of postage from 3 to 2 cents, has made additional clerical assistance absolutely necessary in almost every office of the first, second, and third classes. From the best data obtainable it is estimated that in all the offices the additional clerical labor required is about 20 per cent. Post-office clerks as a rule are underpaid; their duties are exacting and require close attention.

In this very same report Mr. Hatton goes on to make the very same complaint that was made by Judge Gresham. Mr. Vilas, in his report of 1887, discusses this subject in the same way, reaching the same conclusion. The present Postmaster-General again calls the attention of the House to it in the report of last year. And the President of the United States, in his last annual message, has seen fit to direct the special attention of Congress to this class of employés.

Mr. Chairman, to show the irregularity in the matter of compensation of clerks, I will read the percentages of increase for a series of years, showing how seemingly without rule the estimates and appropriations have been made.

In 1883 the percentage of expenditures over 1882 was 11.05. percentage of expenditures in 1884 over 1883 was 8.08; in 1885 over 1884, 2.91; 1886 over 1885, 2.13; 1887 over 1886, 8.10; 1888 over 1887, 2,40.

Now, the increase in the revenues has not proceeded according to the percentages included in the paper from which I have just read. The result, as appears in the report from Postmaster-General Gresham, has been that where the appropriations were large different classes of clerks were allowed a certain sum, and where during the next fiscal year the increase of appropriations was less he had to resort to a reduction of the salaries of employés in order to keep within the appropriation.

Mr. Chairman, it does appear to my mind, and I think it must appear to every gentleman who considers this matter for a moment, that when the Government of the United States assumes to take exclusive control over the mails of the country and to handle sixty-odd million dollars, not taken out of the people by taxation but by rates that which their correspondence such an universes like method as that which on their correspondence, such an unbusiness-like method as that which I have exhibited ought not to be thought of for a single moment. There is no reason why the clerks in the post-offices in the country, engaged in distributing its mails and giving energy, vitality, and efficiency to the business of the country, should not have salaries proportionate to the work assigned to them; and those salaries should have permanency, so that the clerk entering upon the service to-day with a certain salary may understand that this salary is not to be cut down the next year or the next. Thus we shall afford to efficient officials the strongest inducement to remain in the public service.

Mr. Chairman, I think it is quite apparent under the facts I have stated that it is important that in all the offices of the country the clerical force should have an ample salary, not for a year, but fixed by law, so that when he enters it the clerk may know that so long as by good service he is able to maintain his position his income from it will be of a fixed nature and not subject to the caprice or accident which may occur to appropriations for clerk-hire on the part of the Congress of the United States. Therefore, sir, the committee viewing it in this light, having had the information of so many eminent persons connected with the postal service and their reasons for classifying clerks in the first and second class offices, the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads have endeavored to meet the situation by co-operating with the present Postmaster-General, not in the matter of arguing whether or not the salaries of these clerks should be fixed, but in presenting a measure in this bill which actually does fix their salaries.

If this bill shall be adopted, then if the Congress of the United States shall fail to appropriate the proper amount for clerks in the first and second class offices there is an inhibition on the part of the present Postmaster-General to reduce the salaries of any of those clerks in order to make his appropriation hold out. It comes back to us in the form of a deficiency. It is the right of the clerk to have the salary form of a deficiency. It which has been provided.

It will be impossible for me to bring in the data in all their details used in the determination of the classification of clerks. I can only state them generally. The Department took the roster in the various first and second class offices. They took the salaries attached to employés in the various kinds of work in the several offices, the registry division, the money-order division, of the employés attached to the different forms of labor in every office in the United States, and from those data, and from information through a commission, and from information obtained through the use of inspectors, etc., they have reached the classification of the clerks in the first and second class post-offices throughout the United States.

I will not undertake to say that the bill is perfect. I will not undertake to say a better classification might not have been made, but I do say that gentlemen assembled as we are from the different sections of the country, from various avocations in private life, have not the facilities in experience and information for reaching the best conclusion which is to be had on this subject.

I am also aware, sir, that the post-office officials are lacking in certain elements of information which are necessary to reach the exact method of classification which should be had. I do not believe it is possible that there is any source of information to which we could resort that would bring about a perfect system.

What we think there is in this bill to commend it is that there is a classification at all, that henceforward the clerks who are employed in the post-offices of the country at a salary which the roster discloses to have been sufficient to retain them in the service should not have those salaries cut down at the expense of the service, and if we shall blunder, as blunder we may in matters of this sort, hereafter the correction will come to us in the shape of a deficiency.

We think there is this further recommendation of this classification. Whatever defect in information may appear at this time or hereafter is most likely to be corrected by the experience under the operations of this bill. And that is the hope we have in relation to it.

Mr. Chairman, beyond this at this time I do not think it necessary to occupy the time of the committee, and I shall prefer to wait for a detailed explanation of the bill in the five-minute debate.

I move now that the committee rise for the purpose of limiting the general debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. Rogers having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. Criss reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12490) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and resume the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill; and pending that motion I move that all general debate be closed in two hours

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move to amend by limiting the debate to three hours

Mr. SOWDEN. Make it three hours and ten minutes; I would like to have a little time

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And in support of that motion I will say that while I may not occupy one minute myself, yet I may want fifteen minutes. The gentleman from Georgia, however, has given no assurance that I may be permitted to discuss the bill if I desire to do so in the general debate, and in fact the intimation is clear that the whole time of the discussion will be allotted to the members of the Post-Office Committee. Unless, therefore, I can have an assurance that I can have a brief time in the discussion I shall insist upon the amendment.

Mr. LEE. Pending the consideration of this question I ask unanimous consent to introduce for reference a resolution.

Mr. BLOUNT. I must insist upon the regular order.

Mr. Speaker, I desire to have the time occupied by myself, which the chairman of the committee informed me was one half hour, deducted from the time that I have suggested the debate shall be closed, two hours, so that there will be one hour and a half remaining after we go into committee again.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, to limit the debate to three hours.

The question was taken; and on a division there were-ayes 32, noes

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore appointed Mr. Townshend and Mr. BLOUNT as tellers.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will make a concession, if agreeable to the gentleman from Illinois, and add fifteen minutes to the time if that will suit

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If I can get an assurance that I can be heard on the bill then I shall agree to that.

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, I can not assure the gentleman, for the mat-

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, I can not assure the gentleman, for the matter of recognition is in the option of the Chair exclusively.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Then I insist upon the amendment.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman from Illinois says that if he can have an assurance of fifteen minutes' extension of the debate he will be satisfied.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. No, I want one hour in addition. Mr. BLOUNT. That is altogether a different matter.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Because other gentlemen desire also to be heard. As I have said, I shall probably want less than fifteen minutes myself, if I occupy any time at all.

Mr. SOWDEN. I should like to have about fifteen minutes my-

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. If the Chair will recognize me I will yield them fifteen minutes each. [Laughter.]
Mr. BLOUNT. I am willing, if it will suit the gentleman, to extend the time for general debate forty minutes longer, of which time the other side shall be entitled to one hour and twenty minutes, and the remaining time, after deducting the half hour already occupied by myself, to be allotted to this side.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. BLOUNT. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move that when the House resolves itself into Committee of the Whole to further consider the Post-Office bill general debate shall be limited to two hours and ten minutes, one hour and twenty minutes of which shall be allotted to the other side and fifty minutes to this, which will equalize the debate on both sides, counting the half hour I have consumed myself.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BLOUNT. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to further consider general appropriation bills.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. HEMPHILL, Mr. COTHRAN, and Mr. GROUT as conferees on the part of the House on the bill (S. 3132) to provide for trial by jury in the police court of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

ADMISSION OF SOUTH DAKOTA.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, pending the motion of the gentleman from Georgia, I ask unanimous consent to present a conference report, and have it printed in the RECORD and lie over until Monday morning.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia has a motion pending.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman will yield to allow this request to be made.

Mr. BLOUNT. If it leads to no debate I have no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. It will not lead to any debate.
Mr. BLOUNT. Very well.
Mr. SPRINGER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I submit the following conference report on the bill (S. 185) providing for the admission of South Dakota.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill of the Senate (S. 185) entitled "An act to provide for the admission of the State of South Dakota into the Union and for the organization of the Territory of North Dakota," respectfully report that, having met, after full and free conference they have failed to agree.

WM. M. SPRINGER,
GEO. T. BARNES,
CHAS. S. BAKER,
Conferees on the part of the House.

O. H. PLATT,
S. M. CULLIOM,
M. C. BUTLER,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. Mr. Speaker, I submit and ask to have printed in the RECORD the following instructions to the conferees.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the instructions be printed in the RECORD. Mr. BLOUNT. I thought this was not going to lead to any discus-

Mr. SPRINGER. It will not. The gentleman from New York simply desires to offer a resolution of instructions to the committee of conference to be hereafter appointed, and I will call the matter up on Monday after the call of States and Territories.

Mr. BAKER, of New York. The purpose is to move a new conference, and I want this resolution to be passed upon by the House to instruct the conference committee when appointed.

Mr. PERKINS. Let the resolution be printed in the RECORD also. Mr. SPRINGER. That is the request of the gentleman from New York, that the resolution be printed in the RECORD. The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? There was no objection.

The resolution of instructions referred to by Mr. BAKER is as fol-

Resolved. That the House instruct the new conferees to recede from the amendments to the Senate bill 185 in the following respects:

1. That the Territory of New Mexico and the proposed new State thereof may be excluded from the bill.

2. That the bill may be so amended in conference as to provide for the admission of South Dakota by proclamation of the President, under the Sioux Falls constitution, to be resubmitted to the people of South Dakota, with provisions for a new election of State officers, and without a new vote on the question of division.

division.

3. Further providing that the proposed States of North Dakota, Montana, and Washington shall be admitted on the same basis, i. c.:

(a) All of them under proclamation by the President; or

(b) All of them by formal acts of admission.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state briefly, in order that the House may understand the matter fully, the points of difference bethe House may understand the matter fully, the points of difference between the conferees on the part of the Senate and those on the part of the House on this bill. The majority of the Senate conferees insist that the bill as it passed the House shall be amended, first, so as to exclude New Mexico; second, so as to admit South Dakota by proclamation under the Sioux Falls constitution, to be submitted to the people again, with new election of officers, and without a vote in that Territory on the question of division; third, to bring in the three Territories of Washington, Montana, and North Dakota on the same basis, all of them either by proclamation or all of them by a special act of adof them either by proclamation or all of them by a special act of admission at the next session of Congress mission at the next session of congress.

These are the chief points presented by the Senate conferees. It was suggested by them, further, that such matters as relate to the election of delegates and the apportionment of the districts in which the members are to be elected, the date of holding conventions, and the date of resubmission of the South Dakota constitution and the location of the temporary seat of government in South Dakota should be referred to the chairmen of the respective Committees on Territories of the Senate and House of Representatives.

As to these minor points I have no doubt an agreement could be reached without difficulty or delay.

A majority of the House conferees submitted in conference the following as a basis of agreement which would be satisfactory to them:

First. As to New Mexico, we were willing to submit the question of exclusion of that Territory from the bill to the two Houses of Congress and to be governed by such instructions as might be given thereon.

Second. That a vote on the question of division of Dakota would be insisted upon, but, in a spirit of compromise and to secure other portions of the bill as it passed the House, we were willing to recommend such amendment to the bill as would provide that the majority of all votes cast in the Territory of Dakota should be sufficient to decide the question of division instead of the provisions of the bill as it passed the House requiring a majority in both North and South Dakota on that question to authorize division.

Third. As to the admission of North Dakota, Montana, and Washington (and also New Mexico, if that Territory is retained in the bill), by proclamation or by special act of Congress, the House conferees were willing to recommend that Montana and Washington should be admitted on the constitutions formed by those Territories heretofore, as mitted on the constitutions formed by those refrictives helectoric, as provided in the bill as passed by the House as to Montana, and also as provided in a proposed amendment in reference to Washington Territory submitted by the Senator from Indiana, Mr. Voorhees. But we were unwilling to recommend that any State should be admitted by proclamation of the President unless the constitution framed by it should be first submitted to Congress; and hence if a majority of the Senate conferees shall insist upon a uniform rule as to these Territories, an agreement can be reached by requiring all to be admitted alike by special acts at the session of Congress beginning in December next. This does not apply to South Dakota, which the House conferees insist shall be admitted as provided in the seventh paragraph of the third section of the bill as it passed the House, which paragraph is known as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Perkins], and which was adopted by the House on his motion without objection.

Fourth. The majority of the House conferees will insist upon a resubmission of the question of the temporary seat of government for South Dakota.

Fifth. The House conferees will recommend the adoption of any amendments that the Senate conferees may suggest in reference to the donations of lands for educational and other purposes so as to secure such lands for school purposes only, or for the purposes mentioned in the bill as it passed the House.

These, Mr. Speaker, constitute the matters of disagreement at this time. I desire to say, however, that the conferees of both the Senate and the House have met in a spirit of liberality and a desire to secure a result which will meet the favorable action of the two Houses. And I have no doubt that such agreement will be reached at an early day with such aid as the two Houses may give us.

Mr. Speaker, I will not ask for the immediate consideration of this matter, but I desire to give notice that I will call it up on Monday next immediately after the call of the States for the introduction of

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.
Mr. BLOUNT. Regular order.

Mr. LEE. I want to offer a resolution for reference, if the gentle-man will give me consent. [Cries of "Regular order!"] Mr. BLOUNT. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

Mr. LEE. I hope the gentleman will yield to me for a single mo-There is no debate. [Cries of "Regular order!"

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The demand for the regular order is equivalent to an objection.

The motion of Mr. BLOUNT was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved i self into Committee of the Whole, Mr. CRISP in the chair.

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to yield to the gentleman from Illinois for revision.

Mr. MASON] fifty minutes.

Mr. MASON addressed the committee. He withholds his remarks or revision. [See Appendix.]

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, if no gentleman desires to speak, I ask for a vote.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Chairman, with the consent of my colleague [Mr. BLOUNT] I will say to the House that I do not intend to follow the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] in his discussion of an election case on an appropriation bill. I will state, however, that I have endeavored to have the House consider the case of Smalls vs. Elliott, and that when the gentleman speaks about the contestant waiting two years he greatly overstates the time, because this Congress met less than fifteen months ago. The case has been reported for some time; the committee have been anxious to have it tried; we still hope to do so, and I have no doubt that we shall. I have so stated to the gentleman from Illinois.

I will add that the record in the case does not sustain the speech which the gentleman has made here. I was going to say that there was not a word of truth in his presentation of the case. I will not say that; but I do say that the record in the case does not sustain the statements made by the gentleman; and if his friends or others will take the trouble to examine the record, they will feel sorry for the gentleman from Illinois because he has made such statements on this floor.

Mr. MASON. What day do you expect to have a hearing, I would sk? [Cries of "Regular order!"]
Mr. BINGHAM. I desire to yield ten minutes to the gentleman ask?

from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS].

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I shall occupy all the time that has been yielded to me. I wished, however, to say something on the extension of the free-delivery system, not in small something on the extension of the free-derivery system, how in small towns, but in the large cities where to a certain extent it now exists. I did not intend (although for the last half hour I have been led by the remarks of my colleague [Mr. Mason] to think of that matter) to discuss the election case on an appropriation bill. But I do want to say this, that, without regard to the special facts in this particular South Carolina case, it is a scandal and a wrong that any contestant for a seat in Carolina case, it is a white or black whether he be Republican or Congress, whether he be white or black, whether he be Republican or Democrat, whether he comes from the South or the North, should have

And in saying this I do not necessarily criticise the Elections Committee now existing in the House. I mean to say that we all ought to unite in the next Congress in framing some mode of procedure as a substitute for the present scandalous system under which so much delay is possible. If the election took place in November, 1886, the facts of that election should in case of a contest be tried near the place where the election occurred, and at or immediately following the time when it took place. The facts and the law should be decided by a judicial tribunal, which, even if an appeal were taken to the House, would enable the House to determine, first of all, when it comes together, what individual citizens of the United States constitute the House of Republications of the United States constitute the U resentatives. But that can only be achieved by a change in the law; and if I live and have my health, I intend to try to frame a bill on that subject for the consideration of the House in the next Congress.

Now, in regard to the free delivery of mail matter in the large cities of this country, I was struck by the observation of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Blount] that while the expense of the free-delivery system in this country had risen from $7,000,000 to $8,000,000, there was some consolation in the fact that the net revenue of the Post-Office Department has risen in a so much larger proportion that after all the increase would not to a great extent come out of the Treasury of the United States. To methere is no call for consolation. I think it is an erroneous theory that we need any consolation for the fact that the expense of the free-delivery system grows with the growth of the country. It is one element of the country's growth; and if we need any consola-tion and seek to find it in the fact that the net revenue of the free-delivery system is increasing rapidly, that consolation can hardly be valid to those who, like myself, represent in part a great city in which that net surplus revenue is mainly earned.

My purpose in suggesting this matter at this time is to enable me to put into the RECORD a statement of the increase of the postal business in Chicago last year, by which it will appear that the net income derived from the local mails delivered and collected in that city last year increased by the sum of $179,966.

I have here a statement of the postmaster at Chicago, some portions which I wish to print in the RECORD with my remarks.

In Chicago there are five deliveries each day by carriers. I am informed that in New York there are about nineteen daily deliveries. I see no reason why other large cities of the country outside of New York should not get the benefit of this frequent delivery by carrier. It is explained to me by the officials of the post-office there that five de-liveries in each day answer for the mail that comes from the different trains reaching that city during the day, and that five or six or seven deliveries in the city of New York would answer the same purpose equally well. But it was ascertained a few years ago that if the number of deliveries in the city of New York could be increased the number of persons who would take advantage of the facilities offered the Post-Office Department for carrying messages from one part of the city to another would greatly increase, and that therefore the increase in the number of daily deliveries of mail matter in a great city actually adds to the efficiency of that part of the service from which this enormous net revenue is derived. If, therefore, there were an appropriation in this bill for a larger number of carriers in the next fiscal year the expense would not be proportionate to the income which we should get from it. For instance, in the city of Chicago, if the number of car-riers were increased, a large number of messages which are sent by district telegraph or by personal messenger would be sent under a two-cent stamp through the mail, and thus a large additional sum of money would be carned, not for the benefit of Chicago alone, but for the benefit of the postal system throughout the country.

I notice in the report of the Postmaster-General that his estimate of the increased cost of the carrier system next year is founded partly on the enactment of the eight-hour law and partly on another consideration. tion which has no connection with any increase in the number of carriers. The aggregate number of carriers, I think, is about 8,000; the number of additional carriers that he thinks we ought to have in the next fiscal year is only 350, and the result is that my city would not get the number which it ought to have.

I was told recently by the officials in the post-office in Chicago, by way of illustration of how the fast mail from the West works in comparison with the local delivery there, that if a man in Omaha were to drop a letter in the box at 4 o'clock p. m., addressed to some point in Chicago, and a man anywhere in a large part of Chicago were to drop a letter similarly addressed in the box three hours previously—at 1 o'clock p. m.—the Omaha letter would reach its destination in Chicago as soon as the Chicago letter dropped in a Chicago box three hours

I do not regret the mail facility between Omaha and Chicago which allows that to be done. I am not blaming this particular committee, but only regret that the same facility granted to correspondents between Omaha and Chicago can not be granted to correspondents in all parts of the same city. My suggestion is that if that were done, not only in Chicago, but in Philadelphia and other cities of the Union, the net revenue under the free-delivery system would rise out of proportion to the number of additional letter-carriers which would need to be employed.

These considerations and the tabular statement of business at the Chicago post-office I should like to insert more at large in the RECORD.

Mr. BLOUNT. It has been suggested by other gentlemen besides the gentleman from Illinois, that, by unanimous consent, leave be granted to members to extend their remarks in the RECORD on this

Post-Office appropriation bill. Mr. DIBBLE. I object.

Mr. DIBBLE. I object.
Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, the only feature in this bill to which I desire to address myself, is the appropriation for inland railway transportation. This bill carries a larger appropriation than any Post-Office appropriation bill ever carried before. It carries an appropriation of over $66,000,000. In other words, it carries an appropriation of about $6,000,000 more than the entire annual expenses of all the Departments of the Government up to the last year of the administration of James Buchanan. Owing to its enormous magnitude it is a bill which should receive careful consideration from the House.

In looking over the appropriations contained in it I find that the item which makes the largest relative increase is that of pay to railroads for the transportation of the mails.

I would not interrupt the committee to give my views in reference to this matter if it were not that in the Forty-eighth Congress, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations I had charge of the Post-Office appropriation bill and studied the necessity of the postal service with the utmost care. I gave every part of it the most searching investiga-tion, and became satisfied the Government could make a large saving by readjusting the compensation of the railroads for carrying the mails. Some small roads, in thinly-settled portions of the country, were receiving inadequate compensation, but on the great main lines the compensation paid by the Government for carrying the mail was confessedly in excess of what it ought to be.

At the time I mention the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] was also on that committee with me. We looked into the question carefully and had the assistance of the Department when under the administration of Judge Gresham as Postmaster-General. We found that the Post-Office Department had already instituted an investiga-Its purpose was to ascertain whether a more equitable and fair basis of compensation could not be obtained. A commission was appointed, and they investigated the question. They went into an examination of what the true basis of compensation should be. The question of speed was not taken into consideration under the present law, except in an indirect way. Neither was the question of space taken into consideration, nor the question of accommodation on postal cars.

That commission was composed of the best experts in the Department that could be appointed, and after a most searching investigation they reported to the Postmaster-General a basis of compensation which many of the railroads declared would be satisfactory to them and which would result in a large saving to the Government. My friend from Indiana and I, looking to the interest of the Government and desiring to do justice to all, studied the plan which had been suggested, and we came to the conclusion that a large reduction might be made without injustice to the railroads. We brought that matter to the attention of the House in a section of the postal appropriation bill. It was assailed here. My friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] and others were assailants of that particular plan. He and those acting with him doubted the wisdom of the plan, and after a contest it was defeated. In the controversy which arose over that bill I predicted that it would be but a few years until the compensation for carrying the mails on the railroads would grow immensely. We then made an appropriation of something like

I then prophesied that the time would not be far off, under the present unreasonable, incongruous basis of compensation, which was not satisfactory to the railroads, and which was an injustice to the Government, that within a few years the appropriations for the railway mail transportation on that basis would reach the sum of $20,000,000 annually. Upon an examination of this bill I find that the prediction I then made has been nearly verified. The appropriation carried by the bill for that service now amounts to about $19,000,000, and the report that has been submitted by the Post-Office Committee shows that this year they have increased the appropriations over last year for the rail-way mail service $2,000,000. I am not speaking now of the pay of the railway postal clerks; I am not speaking of any expense connected with that branch of the service, except the mileage charges of the roads for carrying the mails. I am surprised and disappointed that the Post-Office Committee has not since then given more attention than they seem to have done to the question, and brought into the House a proposition which would do justice to the railroads and at the same time seek to do justice to the Government by retrenching the enormous, unwise, and unnecessary expenditures which are yearly being paid out for this service.

As I said in the beginning I say now, that some roads are receiving an immensely larger sum than they ought to receive because of the imperfect basis fixed some fifteen or twenty years ago for determining the compensation for railway mail transportation, while some are not receiving as much as they should receive. But what I had hoped for was that the gentleman from Georgia, who was mainly instrumental in defeating the reformatory measure of the gentleman from Indiana and myself in the Forty-eighth Congress, would bring his mind to bear upon some proposition which would furnish the country with a basis for compensating the railroads which would be fair and equitable to the Government and to the railroads, and an improvement upon the plan that we had suggested if it had been found ineffectual. I have official documents here to show that the postal authorities have themselves declared that if the plan suggested by them or by us had been adopted that we could have reduced the expenditures for the railway mail service from one and a half millions of dollars to two millions annually.

Now, sir, according to these figures we have since then, because of the defeat of that plan, imposed upon the Treasury a burden of from six to eight millions of dollars unnecessarily for this service.

I throw out these suggestions, Mr. Chairman, not for the purpose of presenting factious opposition to this bill, but simply as one who desires to promote economy in the public service, and to call from the gentleman from Georgia and the members of the Post-Office Committee some reason why action has not been taken on this subject.

some reason why action has not been taken on this subject.

I do not wish to detain the committee any further now. There is nothing in the bill or report that shows that the committee have given consideration to the matter. They have not, as they might have done, reported any bill for that purpose. The gentleman from Georgia has been chairman of that committee for four years.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that the gentleman from Illinois has seen fit to call to the attention of the House the important part he took in the previous Congress to save such large sums of money to the people of this country, and to contrast his magnanimous thought and purposes at that time with the delinquencies with which I and the committee I have the honor to be chairman of are which I and the committee I have the honor to be chairman of are chargeable with. It would perhaps be unimportant to suggest that the gentleman from Illinois at that time was not charged by this House or under its rules with legislating upon that business at all. He was not assigned specially to the consideration of reforms in the postal service, because that was a matter which belonged to the Post-Office Committee, of which the gentleman was not a member. His inquiry upon that subject, or his undertaking to inject it upon an appropriation bill, was in violation of the rules of the House, and the presumption is, as he did not have charge of the subject at all, that he did not have such experience or information as would authorize the House in adopting the plan he suggested.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. BLOUNT. I hope I will be permitted to proceed in my own

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Very well. I will reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman has stated to the House that he and the gentleman from Indiana brought that bill into the House and that I opposed it, and that it was rejected by the House. be in bad taste for me to undertake to repeat at this time the objections I had to the measure. I did not believe then, I do not believe now, that the result would have been accomplished that the gentleman alleges from that measure; that is to say, that it would have reduced expenditures. The gentleman from Illinois is not the only member of this House who has had consideration of this subject. I had the honor in the Forty-fourth Congress, with gentlemen of larger experience than myself, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL], to consider the very proposition that my friend so eagerly reported for the consideration of the House. We had information from various railroad men of the country and from the Department, and we proposed to report a measure embracing very similar features to that in the House. We concluded that we had information to justify us from the subordinate officials of the Department, but finally after an exhaustive examination we came to the conclusion that it would result in increasing compensation to the larger railroads and perhaps in doing injustice to the others.

The gentleman has called the attention of the committee to the fact that for the next fiscal year we have asked for an increased compensation for the railroads of this country amounting to $2,000,000. Chairman, is this a cause of regret? The gentleman at the time he had the appropriation bill before the House had a deficit larger than is proposed to-day. Notwithstanding the large increase of compensation to railroads we have a deficit of $4,000,000. At that time legislation was proposed, and his colleague [Mr. HOLMAN] brought in a deficit of somewhere near $8,000,000, and that money was raised, not as the bulk of this is raised, but that excess of cost was raised on postage larger than what is now proposed, and it was collected by taxation from the people of this country.

Not so with this large increased expenditure. Sir, it comes in the progress and as part of the progress in this great country. It comes in the increase of the railroad mileage, that has nearly doubled in the last twelve years. It comes with the increase of the population of this great land; it comes along with the multiplication of the business of this country-the proudest, and rightfully so, among the nations of the earth in prosperity and in the multiplication of the power of its people. He who stops and takes this surface view of things fails to recognize the fact that this gigantic structure of wealth, population, and resources for enlarging and expanding, does require a larger expenditure, and he is certainly oblivious of the situation.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman says that the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads does not show that it has made any effort in the direction of reducing the compensation of railroads. The gentleman regrets it, and contrasts it very painfully to myself with his own admirable efforts in a different direction. Mr. Chairman, I regret that something has not been done. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads are not alone responsible. From the Forty-fourth Congress until this hour various suggestions have been made on the subject. Postal commissions have been created and have traversed the country and made reports. They have been rejected. The Department have created a commission, and they have made their report, and it has not met with the assent of Congress. The Second Assistant Postmaster-General, toward the beginning of this Congress, had a plan proposed in his report. Again a lack of unanamity in that Department brought about no action. It was not approach by the Post of the Post of the Congress of about no action. It was not approved by the Postmaster-General, who was seeking to evolve a plan of his own. It was not satisfactory, and so it has gone on and gone on, and there have been no successful attempts to reach a basis satisfactory to all minds, so far as we know of, up to this period. My friend sees in his own effort during certain Congresses an oasis of this desolation on this question.

I have no objection to his pausing there and enjoying himself as much as he will. I will repeat that while he has been making this effort to secure a plan, some better informed than himself, men at the head of the postal department, and men in various branches of the public service, men of large information, have not been able to agree upon a plan. I confess, sir, that to my mind the present method of compensation or the basis of compensation is the best which has been proposed. I thought there should be some percentage reduction made upon it. The distinguished gentlemen with whom I have the honor to associate on the Committee or Post Officer and Post December 1. to associate on the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, the majority of them disagree with me, and so we are here to-day without any change of legislation. But I deny, sir, the fact that during all this period from the Forty-fourth Congress to this hour there has been one particle of change of compensation had, excepting in the Fortyfourth Congress, when the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Holman] brought in a bill reducing it 10 per cent. I have the honor of bringing in one reducing it 5 per cent., making 15 per cent. reduction. It has been done by greater per cent. in the increase and simply comes from the fact that more pounds are carried in the mails of the country.

and nothing more. The gentleman calls attention to the expenditure under this item of the bill, and makes a comparison with what it was during Mr. Buchanau's time. He might just as well go back and compare it with the time of George Washington. [Laughter.] If he can derive any satisfaction from these comparisons; if he can advertise him-self to the country for statesmanship by such methods as this, I shall leave him to pursue it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Georgia has wholly misconceived my purpose. I did not make these remarks for the purpose of magnifying the efforts that I have made as a member of Congress. My purpose was to draw the mind of the gentleman who to-day controls this bill and the legislation pertaining to the postal service to the fact that we are startled with figures here showing that the cost of transportation of the mails on the railroads has increased at the rate of $2,000,000 a year. This is not a creditable thing for the gentleman, who claims that he has been studying this proposition during the past four years that he has had charge of this legislation. Why has he not found a way in which we may improve upon the old plan of some twenty years ago? Every intelligent investigator of this question has arrived at the conclusion that the present condition of the railroads and the service warrants us in making a more favorable change in the basis of compensating railroads. The railroad men admit it, and all others who are conversant with the affairs pertaining to the postal service admit it, and yet the gentleman says that he has been unable to conceive of a plan which will improve upon the basis that was arranged twenty years ago.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman permit
Mr. TOWNSHEND. Do not interrupt me.

Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman would not misstate me. Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is my judgment that if the gentleman had kept his seat when the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and I were seeking to retrench the expenditures of this particular service, the Government would be to-day $6,000,000 better off than it is. I do not attribute to the gentleman any improper motive, but his unwise judgment, his unwisdom at that time and that of those acting with him, resulted in permitting this enormous increase of expenditure. I do not claim that I have knowledge superior to that of any one else. He seems to think that there are many persons better posted upon this question than I am, and of course he classes himself among those who are so. I may concede that to be true, but I will say to him that I did not rest alone upon my own judgment. I took the judgment of my friend, an old and experienced legislator, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Holman]. I took the judgment and the investigation of the experts of the postal department who had been engaged in the service, some of them for twenty years, and from the study which I made of the subject I saw that there was a grand opportunity to curtail the enormous expenditures that were being made for railway mail trans-

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLOUNT. A single word, Mr. Chairman. I can only add that whatever lack of judgment I displayed in not adopting the friendly suggestions of my friend from Illinois in reference to his scheme, is likewise to be charged against all of the Postmaster-Generals from that time on. [Laughter.] Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I have only one remark to make with reference to this bill. It is the result of careful consideration on the part of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and I think I can say that it comes from that committee with a unanimous It is a generous, liberal bill, and under its provisions indorsement. the postal facilities for the next fiscal year can be so administered as to meet the wants, demands, and conveniences of the people. There are one or two features in the bill that I will advert to. There is a reduction of $76,000 recommended by the committee from the recommendation of the Postmaster-General with reference to the compensation of postal clerks. Certainly I should have wished the appropriation recommended by the Department to have been made a part of the bill to its full extent, and I make this statement now so that, should the administration of that division be carried out upon the present basis, and should a deficiency occur in the next Congress, it will be remembered that timely warning has been given that the appropriation recommended by the present administration has not been acceded to by the Post-Office Committee of this House.

One other feature of the bill. We have incorporated a reorganization of the clerks in the first and second class post-offices of the country; in the first-class post-offices, embracing about five thousand subordinate force, and in the second-class offices, embracing about one thousand five hundred subordinate force. In recommending the appropriation in this bill we have given the full amount recommended by the present Post-master-General, an increase, unprecedented, of $600,000. I commend that increase and believe that it will give us a better service in all the first and second class post-offices; but in connection with this legislation which I approve, I want to give notice again now that I believe the carrying out of this legislation will create the necessity of a deficiency at the end of the next fiscal year which will have to be considered and provided for by the next Congress. I would have made, in accordance with the estimate of the Department, the necessary increase in the appropriation to cover a complete carrying out of this provision of the bill should it be enacted into law. Beyond the statements which I have made I desire again to repeat in behalf of the committee a cordial indorsement of all the legislation contained in the bill.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I would be glad to ask the gentleman what the es timate of the Department is to meet the proposed legislation in the bill touching clerks in the post-offices?

Mr. BINGHAM. The Postmaster-General, I believe, states in his report that it will increase the estimate submitted by $300,000.

Mr. CANNON. And that would increase the amount recommended by the committee by the same amount, $300,000.

Mr. BINGHAM. We have given the amount recommended by the Postmaster-General; but should this be enacted into law the increase necessary to carry it out would be $300,000.

Mr. CANNON. Three hundred thousand dollars more than is recommended in the bill?

Mr. BINGHAM. Three hundred thousand dollars more than is in the bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania whether it is not probable that the present appropriation, which is an increase of $600,000 over that of last year, will in some measure meet the requirements of the proposed legislation.

Mr. BINGHAM. I think it will; but the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] asked me the direct question, and I had but one answer to give him, which was the Postmaster-General's own statement.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. What is the deficiency for the present year?
Mr. BINGHAM. The deficiency in what? In the whole postal service?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes, sir.
Mr. BINGHAM. I think the chairman of our committee has the figures showing that matter; I have not.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BING-

HAM] allow me a question ?

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. I understand that an estimate has been made on the theory that this proposed change of classification shall not take place; and that estimate calls for a certain amount which is in the bill-

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, sir.

Mr. ADAMS. But if this change is made, then the gentleman thinks it will take $300,000 more?

Mr. BINGHAM. I think that our appropriation this year, being an increase of $600,000, is so full and so liberal that while there may be a deficiency, it will not reach $300,000. I merely desired to call attention to the fact, so that should we enact this law it shall not be claimed in the next Congress when we come to the consideration of deficiencies that there has been either an extravagant or an ill-considered administration of the Department.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman tell me what proportionate increase in the total number of clerical force is estimated for, both on the theory which the gentleman states would take the amount contained in this bill, and also on the theory on which the $300,000 more would be required?

Mr. BINGHAM. As I understand, the legislation is not framed with reference to a numerical increase

Mr. ADAMS. The gentleman did not understand me. We shall need probably in the next fiscal year more clerks in the post-offices.

Mr. BINGHAM. I think the chairman of the committee has the figures showing the probable increase in the number of clerks.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman state the percentage of increase as compared with the percentage of increase which has prevailed here-

Mr. BINGHAM. The percentage of increase is almost 7 per cent.
Mr. BLOUNT. More than that. But I think this matter had better be reserved until we come to take up these items in detail. I will say to the gentleman from Illinois that the increase is generally reached by a steady percentage of increases during a series of years.

Mr. ADAMS. That is what I meant.

Mr. BINGHAM. We can ascertain that matter when we come to discuss in detail the items of the bill.

Mr. PETERS. Being a member of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, I simply wish to say that, although I am in favor of the classification in this bill-that is, the general plan of the classification-I am not in favor of the compensation which has been adopted for the clerical force in second-class offices. I say this-and it is all I wish to say now-because there may come a time in the future when I may desire to have some action taken in regard to this matter; and I do not wish to have my mouth closed by reason of an impression going abroad that I am in favor of the compensation awarded under the classification in this bill.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, there are 497 second-class post-offices, I believe, in existence now in this country; and the proposition is to increase the salary of every assistant postmaster of this class from the amount he is now receiving to at least $1,500 per annum.

Mr. LIND. That is not correct.
Mr. SOWDEN. If not, I would be pleased to have the gentleman explain the bill in this particular.

Mr. LIND. If the gentleman will refer to the terms of the bill he will find that he is mistaken. Fifteen hundred dollars is the maxi-

Mr. SOWDEN. On page 2 of the bill, beginning at line 15, is the following:

Assistant postmaster, salary not exceeding 50 per cent, of the salary of the postmaster, as provided by act of March 3, 1883, graded in even hundreds of dollars, from $1,500 to not exceeding $3,000 per annum.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will my colleague allow me to make a statement?

Mr. SOWDEN. Certainly.
Mr. BINGHAM. The gentleman is reading from that paragraph of the bill which pertains to the ninety-seven first-class offices. Page 8 of the bill relates to the second-class offices.

Mr. SOWDEN. This is satisfactory. The provision just read misled me. What is the salary provided for the assistant postmasters of the second-class post-offices?

Mr. BINGHAM. From $700 to not exceeding $1,500.

Mr. LIND. If the gentleman will allow me a suggestion in this connection, I wish to say, expressing my individual opinion, that the classification in that respect is manifestly unjust in this, that it makes the maximum compensation of an assistant postmaster in a secondclass office the same as the minimum compensation of a person occupying a like position in a first-class office. That is unfair, I think. Hence if there is any cause for complaint it is that the classification is unjust so far as concerns assistants in second-class offices.

Mr. SOWDEN. When I took up the bill and examined the report I formed the impression that the salary of all the assistant postmasters provided for in this classification must be at least $1,500 per annum in lieu of the amount now paid them. It appears by the classification in lieu of the amount now paid them. It appears by the classification on page 8 of the bill, however, to which my attention has been called by my colleague [Mr. BINGHAM], that the salaries of the assistants in second-class offices range from $700 to not exceeding $1,500 a year. This is manifestly an injustice. Why give some of this class $1,500 per annum and others not more than $700? Why not rate them all alike? Why not provide equal salaries for all officers of this class? Why make this unjust discrimination? Whence the necessity for any increase of the salaries of these officers at this particular time, and thus add to the expenditures in the bill for this item alone several hundred thousand dollars? Will the efficiency of the postal service be correspondingly increased? What assurances can the committee give us on this point?

The CHAIRMAN. If no other person desires to be heard in debate the Clerk will read the bill by sections for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation to clerks in post-offices, $6,550,000; and that the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized to classify and fix the salaries of the clerks and employés attached to the first-class post-offices, from July 1, 1889, as hereinafter provided, namely.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] whether he will not consent that the paragraph in reference to the compensation of clerks in post-offices be passed over for the present, to be returned to after the legislation on the bill touching first and second class offices shall have been disposed of?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not see any advantage in doing that and prefer

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not see any advantage in doing that and prefer to go on with the bill in regular order.

Mr. CANNON. The reason I make the request is this: The amount recommended for the compensation of clerks in post-offices is $6,550,000. It is proposed by the legislation on the bill to classify clerks in the first and second class post-offices, some sixty-five hundred in number, and according to the statement of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] that classification will result in an increase of expenditures of competitive $200.000 per support. of something like $300,000 per annum. From my hurried examination of the tables in the report I am inclined to think that the gentleman from Pennsyivania is rather too low in his estimate. I believe this classification will result in an increase of twice the amount.

While I am not opposing this classification I suggest we pass over this appropriation fixing the amount until the legislation on the bill has been appropriation fixing the amount difference by a disposed of.

Mr. BLOUNT. The committee have studied this matter carefully, and I prefer to go on regularly in order. The gentleman can have what he wishes in the way of information by simply calling for it.

Mr. CANNON. I will then move to strike out "$6,550,000," and in lieu thereof insert "$6,850,000." That is adding $300,000, which is the estimate of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] of increase, to the $6,550,000 appropriated in the bill. I again appeal to the contleman from Georgia to allow this amendment to be passed to the gentleman from Georgia to allow this amendment to be passed over until after it is determined what action shall be taken on the legislation in the bill.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have already indicated that I prefer to go on in regular order. There is as much reasonableness to ask to pass over any other item in the bill. The reports of the Postmaster-General show whatever increase there may be. They are official, and no one can gainsay them.

Mr. CANNON. I will ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] what is the estimate of the Postmaster-General as to the increased appropriation necessary to carry out the proposed legislation.

Mr. BINGHAM. As I remember, the discussions in connection with that paragraph of the bill, the increase is $600,000 for the next fiscal year on the present appropriation for clerk-hire. That is the largest increase given, I believe, in the history of the increase of clerk-hire. That increase presupposes a larger compensation to the clerks than they are now receiving, and better administration of that division of the post-office service. Should this legislation be enacted, it is believed about $300,000 more would be required. Whether it will or not, it is the estimate of the Department as to untried legislation. If there shall be any deficiency in the next Congress, we can ask for an additional amount.

amount.

Mr. CANNON. That is all very well; but I live in a city of 15,000 inhabitants, and there are several other small cities in my district, and we know whenever there is a shortage it falls upon those small cities and not upon the large cities. The large cities are given what is necessary for their service whilst the small cities are left to carry on their business in the best way they can.

Mr. BLOUNT. Will the gentleman allow a suggestion?

Mr. CANNON. In a moment.

Now, all I want is just this: When the Postmaster-General recommends a scheme of classification of the service which may be wise, and says that it will cost, according to his best estimates, $300,000 more than is recommended, I say all I ask is that if that scheme is adopted that we give the $300,000 required to carry it into execution, because if we do not it falls upon the smaller class of cities. because if we do not it falls upon the smaller class of cities

Mr. DOCKERY. The proposed legislation fixes the salaries.
Mr. CANNON. Certainly the law fixes the salaries, but the PostOffice Department gives the number of clerks according to the money, and you say so much money shall be paid under the law to this class of clerks; and when we apply for clerks they will say Congress did not give within $300,000 of the amount the Postmaster-General said was necessary to meet the increased expenditure, and therefore the service can not get that proper care it ought to have.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Georgia if he chooses to make a suggestion.

make a suggestion.

Mr. BLOUNT. My purpose in rising was only to make a suggestion which the gentleman from Missouri has already made.

Mr. CANNON. What is that?

Mr. BLOUNT. That the law fixes the salary.

Mr. DOCKERY. The suggestion I made was this, that in the event of the adoption of this section the law, of course, would fix the salaries and the force would not be reduced. Then if there is no deficiency in the appropriation it would have to be provided for in the deficiency in the appropriation it would have to be provided for in the deficiency bill of the next Congres

[Here the hammer fell.]
Mr. CANNON. I would like to have a minute more on this subect. I merely want to get at the facts.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will yield to the gentleman such time as he wants, and if he does not occupy the entire time will myself use the remainder of it.

Mr. CANNON. Now let me understand the gentleman from Missouri. He says if this classification is adopted that the salary of the clerks is already fixed, and if there is a deficiency, that will be provided for in a deficiency bill without reference to this appropriation. I will ask the gentleman, without any reference to the amount of the appropriation here, can the Postmaster-General appoint all the clerks the service may require?

Mr. DOCKERY. All that this law authorizes. Under the authority of the proposed legislation the Postmaster-General would have the right to classify and fix the salaries, and if Congress fails to appropriate a sufficient amount it would be their duty to provide in a deficiency bill the amount necessary to carry out the law.

Mr. CANNON. But for how many clerks? Is there a specific number provided which he has the right to appoint?

Mr. BLOUNT. There never was, except by the approval of a roster.
Mr. CANNON. I do not understand the gentleman.
Mr. BLOUNT. I refer to rosters of the employés furnished from the post-offices of the country.

Mr. CANNON. Let me put a case in my own town, by way of illustration, a town of 15,000 people, a free-delivery town. Suppose it was necessary to transact the business there that there should be five clerks in the post-office, and when I come to the Postmaster-General and make application he tells me, "Mr. Cannon, the appropriation is short; I can not allow your postmaster there but three clerks." I say, "Very true, the appropriation is manifestly short; but, Mr. Postmaster-General and the postmaster of the postmaster o eral, you have under this law authority to give two more clerks to Danville and all other towns similarly situated, whether the money is appropriated or not." Will that be the effect under this legislation?

Mr. BLOUNT. I am not prepared to say that.

Mr. PETERS. It would, undoubtedly.

Mr. CANNON. Why, no; I do not so understand it. Because if that be correct then you have the Postmaster-General in this attitude, that without reference to the money given be could in the form that without reference to the money given he could increase the force of clerks one hundred or increase them one thousand, just as he pleases. Mr. PETERS. If the service demands additional clerks at Danville the Postmaster-General has a right to appoint them, and having made the appointment if the money is not sufficient to pay them they must be provided for in the deficiency bill.

Mr. CANNON. If there is no money appropriated?

Mr. PETERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Then why not appropriate a million dollars less here instead of increasing the amount $600,000; because, according to the statement of the gentleman from Kansas, the Postmaster-General, without reference to the appropriation, can appoint a hundred or a without reference to the appropriation, can appoint a numered or a thousand. I think the gentleman is mistaken in that.

Mr. BINGHAM. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CANNON. Certainly. I only want to get at the facts here.

Mr. BINGHAM. I want to state here that I am individually in favor of the classification bill of the clerical force of the first and second class post-offices; but the point raised by the gentleman from Illinois has been considered in committee, and I desire to raise it here, as I did there, in order that this House may definitely understand the legislation which we propose to incorporate on this bill.

I did there, in order that this House may definitely understand the legislation which we propose to incorporate on this bill.

I claim you, sir, that the legislation incorporated in this bill is simply a classification of the clerical force of these two classes of post-offices. Under that classification we appropriate in bulk $6,550,000. I claim that the Postmaster-General in allowing to the various offices included in the first and second class every subordinate clerk he can regulate their salaries in accordance with the classification in the bill, but that he can not exceed the appropriation given in the bill. Under the bill he can say in the gentleman's office in Illinois, your superintendent of delivery shall have such a salary, and so and-so shall have such a salary. He is governed and controlled in the allowance to the subordinate force in that office by the sum total that is appropriated. He can not inin that office by the sum total that is appropriated. He can not increase it under this bill. He can not go beyond his appropriation. He can classify under the appropriation, but I claim you, sir, that he has no right under the legislation contained in this bill to exceed the appropriation given by Congress in this legislation for the next fiscal

Mr. BLOUNT. There are two questions raised in this running disussion. One relates to the amount which should be appropriated, and he other as to the result of insufficient appropriation. It has already been stated that the increase in this item amounts to $600,000. In 1883 it amounted to $364,000, an unusual increase, growing out of the change of classification of postmasters, resulting in the large increase of the number, and, therefore, while it was far above the average amount, it was temporary and grew out of that legislation to which I have referred. Now, in 1884 over 1883 the increase of expense was $105,000; in 1885 over 1884 it was $104,000; in 1885 and 1886 $406,000 alone, which grew out of the transfer of the money-order clerks and in the matter of compensation from fees to the clerks in post-offices, thereby increasing this amount. Thus in 1887 over 1886 it was $119,000. I say that one-half of the sum that we have recommended in this bill—$300,-000-is far above the usual increase of compensation for clerks in postoffices

I wish to call attention to this fact, that during this fiscal year the increase nominally was $400,000, because of the failure to make a sufficient appropriation during the last year, and we make it this amount. The $400,000 embraces a rational increase for the last fiscal year and this fiscal year. I repeat that that sum of $400,000 was made thus large on the allegation of the Postmaster-General that under the law of the previous year, owing to the transfer of the compensation of the clerks in money-order offices from fees, it had largely increased the percentage of increase as it appeared, but had actually resulted in a decrease of several hundred thousand dollars; so that $300,000 is above the normal, regular increase percentage. Then you have $300,000 left. In relation to this classification, it is perfectly competent for the postmasters. There are grades. We are inaugurating this system. It is adjustable, but by it they can not increase or decrease the amount

Is adjustable, but by it they can not ircrease or decrease the amount they are paying their employés nor the hours of labor.

Mr. ADAMS. Will the gentleman permit a question there?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.

Mr. ADAMS. Suppose you appropriate this $6,550,000. Now, at the beginning of the next fiscal year the Postmaster-General doles that among the different post-offices of the country. Is not that so?

Mr. BLOUNT. I prefer the gentleman to state the whole of his question.

Mr. ADAMS. I understand that he doles this amount of money to Mr. ADAMS. I understand that he doles this amount of money to the different post-offices of the country. The question is whether, having at the first of the fiscal year doled out the appropriation to the Chicago post-office, its quota of money, which is so many hundred thousand dollars, there can be during the next fiscal year any additional sum appropriated for the payment of postal clerks in that office?

Mr. BLOUNT. Why, Mr. Chairman, most assuredly the expenditure for the hire of clerks at the beginning of the fiscal year is not so large as it is at the end. There is a gradual increase of expenditures in every branch of this service just as well as others. The rate of expenditure on the 31st of July 1889, may be one thing, and six months.

penditure on the 31st of July, 1889, may be one thing, and six months after that much greater.

Mr. ADAMS. The gentleman misunderstood me. I thought that at the beginning of the fiscal year the total appropriation made for post-office clerks was considered by the Department, and a determination arrived at as to what each post-office should have.

Mr. BLOUNT. Not at all.

Now, another thing, suggested by my friend from Illinois, and conformal training and conformal from the post-office should be at the state of t formed to in information by my friend from Pennsylvania, in reference to the question as to how the Department would meet this difficulty. The salaries being fixed, the amount of money limited, the Department presumably unable to expend more than the Congress of the United States had supplied it with, how it would meet that situation? Mr. Chairman, the same question might be asked in reference to postal clerks—how would the Department meet that situation? You have their salaries fixed. You might not have sufficient clerks to handle the mails on the railroads; and yet you are liable to the same criticism here with reference to letter-carriers. Their salaries are fixed. Their hours of labor are fixed. You can make no supplement to the defi-ciency by reducing a clerk's salary, or by making him work overtime, and yet it may happen to the Department that there has not been money enough appropriated. Now, sir, one remedy I think is this: When we have information it is to legislate for it.

The Postmaster-General has asked for a deficiency now in two or three items—I think in reference to postal clerks. Congress meets before these appropriations shall have been expended that have been prudently allotted to the various post-offices. When Congress meets he submits to Congress the statement that he has not enough money, and then you have the situation. I know of no particular way. It is true every year that the appropriations are excessive on some items. It is always the fact that in appropriations there are some items upon which there is too much appropriated, and too little on others.

I think the bill of last year shows a net surplus of about $2,000,000.

That is happening all the time. The Postmaster-General will simply rely upon the good sense of Congress, as he has had to do from time to time in the past, in reference to this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, but the Chair will recognize the gentleman to move a formal amendment if he desired to continue him.

desires to continue his remarks.

Mr. BLOUNT. I believe I have completed what I wished to say.
Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, there is evidently a misunderstand-Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, there is evidently a misunderstanding somewhere on this important subject, because we have had two different statements from two equally distinguished members of the same committee. My colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] has stated the proposition exactly as contended for by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], that there is an apportionment made of the amount appropriated for this clerk-hire. He contends that if this $6,500,000 shall be appropriated for the purpose of paying these clerks, an apportionment of it will be made by the Postmaster-General at the beginning of the next fiscal year, when this appropriation takes effect, amongst the different offices throughout the country, and that the expenditures will be limited to the amount appropriated; while. the expenditures will be limited to the amount appropriated; while, in response to a question by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon], the distinguished chairman of the committee alleges exactly the opposite; he says that any deficiency that might occur during the fiscal year can be provided for in some subsequent appropriation bill. My experience comports exactly with the position assumed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Cannon] in relation to the business transactions of the Post-Office Department. When we go to that Department and complain of these clerks receiving too small pay, we are told that the Department is limited in its apportionment by the amount of the appropriations made. If that be true, then the distinguished gentleman from my own State, who is also a member of this committee [Mr. Bing-HAM], takes exactly the correct position and the chairman of the committee must necessarily be in error. Now, what I am seeking is the exact truth. I want light upon this subject. Which of the two distinguished gentlemen is correct?

Mr. BLOUNT. I want to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Sowden] that it is not of much importance to the advancement of this legislation whether my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BING-HAM] or myself be correct. Without this bill, what is the situation? HAM] or myself be correct. Without this bill, what is the situation? Where there have been inadequate appropriations made in the past there has been a reduction of compensation, or perhaps a reduction of the number of employés. No worse thing can happen in reference to the service where there is a classification. The advantage of the classi-fication lies in the fact that you get a class of employés in the service with fixed salaries which can not be reduced by the accident of a failure to make adequate appropriations. They are ascertained by law. That is the advantage. So far as inconvenience comes from an insufficient appropriation, that comes with or without this legislation.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the suggestions of the entleman from Illinois I desire to call attention to this section of the bill for the purpose of giving my construction of its meaning and ef-

For compensation of clerks in post-offices, $6,550,000; and that the Postmaster-General be, and is hereby, authorized—to classify and fix the salaries of the clerks and employés.

To do what?

There is his authority to classify and to fix salaries.

Mr. CANNON. But how many clerks are there to be?
Mr. DOCKERY. That is within his discretion; he can fix the number at the beginning of the fiscal year. But he has the absolute authority to fix and classify. If the demands of the Danville post-office require five clerks, then the authority is vested in the Postmaster-General, according to my construction of this section, to classify the clerks and to fix the salaries of the clerks and employés.

Mr. CANNON. Although no money is appropriated for that? Mr. DOCKERY. When such classification is had and such fixing of salaries is determined, then it becomes the duty of Congress to provide for any deficiency that may result from that classification, because here is the specific authority of the law given to the Postmaster-General to fix the salaries.

The salary of the President is fixed at $50,000. Congress might appropriate only $25,000, but the salary is fixed by law, and if Congress oes not appropriate the full amount the President has a right under the law to secure the additional $25,000.

Mr. CANNON. What clause of the bill says how many of these clerks there shall be? That there is authority to classify and fix the salaries I concede. But these offices are not like the office of President-there can be only one President, but the law does not say how many clerks there shall be.

Mr. DOCKERY. The authority to classify carries with it the discretion as to the number of clerks—that is, the right to appoint a sufficient number to meet the demands of the public service.

Mr. CANNON. I think the gentleman is mistaken. Mr. DOCKERY. If it does not, then that provision If it does not, then that provision of the bill can be very easily amended.

Mr. CANNON. If the gentleman's construction is correct, I am not for that amendment, because I do not want Congress to be "run" by the Postmaster-General.

Mr. DOCKERY. But coming to the question of the amount and the necessity for the increase suggested by the amendment offered, I desire to say that I have been advised by the Postmaster-General that this very large and unusual increase of $600,000 in clerk-hire is proposed not simply with the idea of providing for the service for the next fiscal year on the basis of existing compensation, but with the intent of increasing the salaries of the present force. What the deficiency may be creasing the salaries of the present force. What the deficiency may be in the event that this legislation is adopted and the amount is retained as it appears in the bill no man of course can accurately determine. It is a new and untried legislative field, and it may be that the law can be executed with the amount at present carried in the bill. If, however, the amount should never the law can be interficient. I should extering the be executed with the amount at present carried in the bill. If, however, the amount should prove to be insufficient I should certainly be willing to vote for any sum that may be required. We can not now determine what the deficiency may be. The Department estimates that $300,000 will be the amount; but as I understand the situation, it is not a deficiency of $300,000 additional to the amount carried here, because that amount was estimated for the purpose of increasing the compensation of the present clerical force in first and second class offices. So I think it is entirely safe, Mr. Chairman, to retain this amount just as it appears in the bill; and if in the execution of the law, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], it should become necessary to provide for a deficiency. I am quite sure should become necessary to provide for a deficiency, I am quite sure there will be no hesitation on the part of members on this side of the House in their support of such a measure.

Mr. CANNON. I want to say a word; and then, so far as I am concerned, I shall be ready to vote. If I agreed with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] in his construction of this provision I would oppose the proposed legislation, because according to his statement it would be in the power of the Postmaster-General, without reference to the appropriations, to control Congress, instead of Congress controlling the Postmaster-General. That I would not assent to; nor would my the Postmaster-General. That I would not assent to, and that the friend from Georgia. Now, I again call attention to the fact that the Postmaster-General himself says it will take the $300,000 provided by my amendment to meet this expenditure, if this legislation is had.

think we ought to give this amount.

But there is one other thing to which I want to call the attention of my friend from Georgia, and then I shall have said all I want to say about this bill from beginning to end. This item is not only to pay postoffice clerks of the first and second grades, but it is the item from which the clerks are paid in separating offices-the third and fourth class that are numbered by thousands; and it is offices of that kind in which my friend from Georgia and myself are largely interested, as well as most gentlemen here. Wherever there is a railway crossing which separates mail (and there are many in the various parts of this country), although the office may not pay $500 or $400 or $100 a year, the Postmaster-General under the law has now a discretion to make an allowance for separating.

Mr. PETERS. That applies only to the star-route lines

Mr. CANNON. It is broader than that, I will say to my friend. In practice it runs very largely on the star routes, but there are separating offices on railroad routes also. Now the expenses of these separating offices are paid from this appropriation. Enact the provision here proposed, which is to involve an expense of $300,000 more than you appropriate, and not only shall we have an insufficient number of clerks in the large offices, but this sum will be consumed in paying these clerks in the large offices; and you will have nothing left for the small offices—the separating offices. Therefore I must insist on my amendment adding $300,000 to this appropriation, according to the estimate of the Postmaster-General, or I must vote against the proposed legislation. I ask for a vote.

Mr. ADAMS. I move to amend pro forma by striking out the last word. The position of my colleague [Mr. CANNON] is that the committee has proposed an appropriation on one plan, and has immediately proposed to adopt another plan. Of course there is division of opinion among members of the committee as to the difference in cost of the two plans. The answer which was made by the chairman of the committee to the observations of my colleague from Illinois was that this would not, in any event, interfere with the efficiency of the service, because we can always fall back on a deficiency.

In saying that he is undoubtedly theoretically right, but practically wrong, because it is not true a Postmaster-General will allow the postmaster at Chicago, for instance, a sufficient sum to run that office as it should be run, regardless of the entire amount of funds in the appropriation bill for the fiscal year. Of course, theoretically, he might do so, and run the Department for the first six months and then come to Congress for the deficiency; but practically he will not do so.

I desire to state that the postmaster in my own city has found great difficulty in getting allowance for clerks to do a large part of the work which is necessary for the efficiency of the railway mail service and the free-delivery system. For instance, the mail comes in the railway car, and while it is in the railway car the postal clerks have charge of it. After it has reached the post-office and has been handed to the carrier, then it is in charge of the carrier system. During the intervening time after it has left the railway car and till it is put in the pouches for the carriers it is in charge of post-office clerks. The postmaster at Chicago has inaugurated a valuable improvement by which part of the time is saved by sorting the mail for the carriers before it leaves the car.

In the fast train, for instance, from Omaha to Chicago there is a certain number of clerks-not carriers, but postal clerks, I believe they are called-who sort the mail for delivery to the carriers, and in that way shorten the intervening time between handling the mail by the railway clerks and handling it by the carriers. But the postmaster of the city of Chicago has had the greatest difficulty in getting an allowance for this purpose, simply because it is understood there is not enough money available. The fact that the Postmaster-General can come in in the second half of the year to make up for the deficiency in the first half of the year does not seem to enable him in the first part of the year to do what is required.

In my judgment, Mr. Chairman, a more reasonable request could not be made than that which was made by my colleague [Mr. Can-NON], that this provision making appropriations for postal clerks should be passed over until we get to the end of that part of the bill which decides the matter of classification. Then we shall know whether the new plan or the old plan will be adopted. By that time we can get information whether appropriations are to be based on the old or the

Mr. BLOUNT. I wish to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Adams], who says that the postmaster of Chicago could not get clerical force enough, that I think any gentleman who has had the honor to preside as Postmaster-General over the Post-Office Department will say there never was a time when there was not a complaint made of that cost and when in a large measure it was not any pressonable. of that sort, and when in a large measure it was not unreasonable. There has always been a desire on the part of certain persons to have their compensation increased; and if my friend from Illinois expects to get to that point of perfection when men will be content with their salaries as they are and do not desire any more, he will live for a very long period.

Mr. ADAMS. I do not talk of increase of salaries. I was talking of the increase of the number of clerks to do the increased work in the Northwest, which is necessary to be done because of the increase in busi-

Mr. REED. Mr. Chairman, I want to add to what has been said by the gentleman from Illinois my personal belief that the Post-Office Department has been very much cramped and hampered in these appropriations. Of course, I found my views upon it on the local conditions which exist at home. I find that there has been for the last eight years, or nearly so to my personal knowledge, very great complaint, not only as to the amount of the salaries, but as to the amount of work which has been imposed upon the employés of the post-office at Portland, Me. There has been but very little increase of the force there, while there has been an enormous increase in the work to be done. As one single the year 1888, and only 36,981 in 1887, showing an extraordinary increase. Such an increase in a community as settled, if I may so express it, as my own State would indicate that there must necessarily be a large increase of business in the post-offices generally throughout

The allowance for this office has always been meager; and the Post-Office Department has kept them down to such an extent that if I can believe the testimony, not merely of persons of my own party who would naturally come to me with their complaints, but the testimony as well of persons belonging to the other party, who might not naturally expect any particular help or sympathy from me in that direction; I say if I can believe the unanimous testimony of all persons there they are overworked, they have not a sufficient number to do the work of the office, and I know it is the universal testimony of the patrons of the office that the service on the part of the United States is not well done.

I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that this is attributable to the change in politics, or perhaps even to a change of officials, but it is owing to the fact of the increased work which has been thrown upon a small force.

There is another difficulty which is peculiar to that office, and I want to bring it up now, which is the result of the fact that the salary is gauged upon the gross receipts of the office. That is a good general rule, undoubtedly. But there are exceptions. The amount of pay is usually the measure of the work done, but there are very many exceptions, and it seems to me, upon hastily looking over this bill, that these exceptions are not previded for. The compensation of the office in Portland, Me., for instance, is arranged upon the basis of the gross receipts.

It so happens, however, that a large measure of the business done through that office is done by an establishment which is of such a character that it receives in the course of its business annually an immense sum in postage-stamps. The consequence is, that it never buys stamps; indeed, it rather has them for sale, and the gross receipts at the office are lower for that reason than they should be. Consequently, measuring the salary on that basis is an injustice not only to the people who do the work but to the community which is served thereby.

Mr. BLOUNT. Allow me to suggest that that relates to the compensation of the postmaster.

Mr. REED. No, not in the bill. Provision is made here for the compensation of the assistant postmaster also, and the amount of the allowance to the office in some measure rests in the discretion of the Post-Office Department. If the Post-Office Department has a reasonable appropriation it may make more of what may be called the discretionary allowances which should be made to an office than otherwise; and therefore I think the gentleman from Georgia, having in view the real advantage of the postal system of the country, ought to consent to the change asked by the gentleman from Illinois. Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman does not ask any change of legisla-

Mr. REED. He asks a change in the amount.

Now, the truth about it, as is well said by his colleague from Illinois, the truth about it is that the Postmaster-General, having in view a deficiency, is not likely to make the allowance which he would make in a case such as is presented at the office at Portland, Me., an allowance not so much in the interest of the clerks, or the postmaster, or the assistant postmaster, as of the community which is really served; for if the clerks that are granted there are granted solely with reference to the receipts of the office, and nevertheless the office does work for which there are no receipts, or rather the receipts do not show themselves in the business of that particular office, then an injustice is done to the community at large, and you increase that injustice when you impair the discretionary power of the Postmaster-General by bringing him face to face with a certain deficiency. In this sense it seems to me that the argument of the gentleman from Illinois is a sound one.

Mr. BLOUNT. But the gentleman from Maine will bear in mind the fact that this very bill increases the assistant postmaster's salary $400.

Mr. REED. In this bill? Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir. Mr. REED. Not at all. It reduces it $400, or from $2,000 to $1,600.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. REED. And that, too, notwithstanding the fact that Augusta, a smaller office, has a superintendent of mails at $1,500, duties which this assistant in Portland performs.

I brought that up simply because it could be used as illustrating the general situation.

Mr. BLOUNT.

I want to respond, Mr. Chairman, in reference to the office of Portland, Me. The rosters are not arranged so accurately with reference to the amount given to the individual clerks in the office as to the amount of compensation assigned to the office. In this instance it may have been that the postmaster in arranging his roster would recommend this postmaster the sum of $2,000 and take it off the salaries of others.

Mr. REED. I know that has been the salary for twelve years. Mr. BLOUNT. I do not know anything about that particular case nor how long it may have been the salary. It may have been that compared with other offices the assistant postmaster received a much larger salary than at other places where the clerical allowance was

Mr. REED. Such is not the fact. A comparison would not show it. Mr. BLOUNT. That may be true, Mr. Chairman. I think that while a comparison may not show it in this particular case, the system of making up the rosters is in a large degree to give a given sum to a

Mr. REED. I think the gentleman is correct.
Mr. BLOUNT. I know I am correct, and that the postmaster's salary where the receipts were the same as at another would be very much larger, and that their clerks' would be very much lower, the gross sum allotted to the office being the same. This legislation is to bring about a uniform rule. It is brought out from the study and from the consideration of averages, and from the reports of inspectors, etc. It may have been that in a particular case the salary might be reduced. It may quite sure that it is in my own town. The salary of the assistant postmaster there is out of proportion to that of the other employés.

Mr. REED. The reason why the salary of $1,400, while it bears the usual ratio to the usual salary received, and why it is not a fair salary at Portland while it may be at another town showing as large gross receipts, is owing to the presence of this establishment.

Mr. BLOUNT. What establishment?

Mr. REED. An establishment which furnishes a certain class of papers just the same as the others at Augusta, Me., where the postal business has a very much larger proportion than at other places. They send out their publications and receive letters from all parts of the United States, and while it does not contribute largely to the increased receipts of the office it very largely increases the work of the office.

But inasmuch as they do not buy postage-stamps they do not contribute to the gross receipts, although contributing thus largely to the work. Therefore an injustice is done to this particular office, and hence there ought to be either an exception of this office or else there ought to be some change-some general words-allowing the Postmaster-General to make some variations where the rule does not apply. In other words, the reasoning upon which the classification is founded is the ratio between the salary and the gross receipts, because that is supposed to be the ratio between the salary and the work done. But where the gross receipts do not represent the work done then the relation between the salary and the work ceases to be a good one or a correct one. This is the difficulty at this particular office. They get their stamps from other places.

Mr. MILLIKEN. At Augusta, where there are publishing houses of a similar character to that to which the gentleman has referred, while the proprietor of one of the publishing houses pays $100,000 a year to the Government for stamps it does not exhaust the stamps that it gets from abroad, but has to sell a large amount in stamps other-Therefore the office at Augusta does not sell them stamps, and for that reason the sale of stamps does not represent the amount of business done; and the same is true to a certain extent at Portland.

Mr. PETERS. The exceptions to which attention has been called by the gentlemen from Maine in that respect will apply to other offices than those mentioned, and there are a large number of them in the United States where it would really extend. You take the land offices. There are two of them in my own district. A large amount of Government mail is transported in large envelopes that are furnished by the Government on which no postage is paid. No postagestamps are purchased at a land office, and the result of that is that in those cities the work of the post-office is largely increased; and yet there is no adequate compensation for that work, because, as the gentleman from Maine has said, the compensation is based upon the gross receipts and the gross receipts are not enhanced by the Government purphases done there. business done there.

business done there.

But now I want to call attention to one difficulty that has been stated by the gentleman from Illinois. That is, the point which he makes against this bill, that it does not allow the Postmaster-General to fix the number of clerks. Now, I think that it is impossible in a bill of this kind (this being the first of this kind) to classify these clerks in point of numbers as they are classified in the appropriation bills for the legislative department of the Government, so many clerks of such a class, and so many of such another class, and so on. In fact, this legislation being tentative and being placed on the bill for the first time it. lation being tentative and being placed on the bill for the first time, it would be almost impossible to arrive at any fair basis upon which the number of clerks could be determined. You can not do it upon the roster that is furnished by the postmasters now, because in all post-offices of the second and third classes, and especially in the offices of the second class, the postmasters in many cities have been compelled to pay their clerk-hire out of their own pockets. Consequently the roster in any such case does not show the amount of clerical force the ostmaster has been absolutely required to employ in order to transact the business of the Government,

That is true of offices in every State. In other words, the Department has been stinting the second-class offices, and has not been giving them a sufficient amount of money necessary to carry on the work, and it has been doing this upon the false theory that the gross receipts of an office ought to be the criterion by which to regulate the amount of money allowed.

Mr. JOSEPH D. TAYLOR. And would not this bill further stint

Mr. PETERS. That is the objection I have to fixing the remuneration under this classification. I do not want to be understood as being in favor of the remuneration being apportioned under this classification, because the result of it will be in all second-class offices that there will be no clerk or employé who will secure the maximum salary, but all of them will receive the minimum. Why? Because the first-class offices, being large in their gross receipts, will be taken care of by the Department just as they have been in time past, and the second-class offices will be compelled to accept what is left, and that, as we know from experience, has been a very small crumb.

Under this classification in all cases there would be a minimum amount allowed to the second-class offices. So, while I am in favor of amount arrowed to the second-class offices. So, while I aim in the first of the classification, I am not in favor of the compensation being fixed for second-class offices in this way. But I was overruled upon this point in the committee, and not desiring to make any great contention, particularly when I found myself in the minority, I have not seen fit to come in here and make a fight on this point. I have abstained from doing that also because I am anxious that this legislation in regard to classification shall become a law, and I will trust to the future to regulate and remedy the inequality that exists between the compensation of the clerical force in first and in second class offices. I am willing to accord to the first-class offices all the credit they are entitled to for their gross receipts, but it should be borne in mind that every second-class office in the country contributes to the gross receipts which the first-class offices show, and that the second-class offices do not get the benefit of that in the compensation which is paid to their employés.

Mr. BLOUNT was recognized.
Mr. McCULLOGH. Will the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] yield to me a few minutes?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly. Mr. McCULLOGH. Mr. Chairman, I want to cite to the House a practical case, and I will try to do it as briefly and as practically as I can. In the town in which I live there are thirty-four trains daily, seventeen each way. There are also two star routes. On the south side of the town there is a railroad which is at least 40 miles long. On the north side there are two railroads, each perhaps 8 or 9 miles long. That secondclass office, with a second-class clerical force, has to take the mails from those trains. Of course all the trains are not mail-trains, but a large number of them are, and that office has to take the mail from all those trains and has to distribute them to the three side roads and also to the two star routes, and the employés of that office receive only second-class compensation.

Many are the mornings when at that office it takes an hour and a half to handle that mail, though not a stamp is canceled. Yet at that office they get but second-class rates. Now, this is why the Post-Office Department ought to have a discretion in this matter. That office, instead of having simply a postmaster and a clerk, or, as you may say, a clerk and a half, ought to have, in addition to the postmaster, five clerks, because there is handled there perhaps a wagon-load of

mail every day.

Mr. BLOUNT. This bill does not prevent such increase of force.

Mr. McCULLOGH. There is no discretion to increase this force.

Mr. BLOUNT. Oh, yes, there is.

Mr. McCULLOGH. I think not.

Mr. BINGHAM. I desire, Mr. Chairman, in this debate to emphasize and make clear just how far the legislation contained in this bill is either to control the Postmaster-General in carrying out its provisions or to give him an independence of action whereby he may control ions, or to give him an independence of action whereby he may control Congress in the expenditure of public moneys. I claim that if this legislation going into details as to the clerical force of the first and second class post-offices is enacted into law it will never hereafter appear in an appropriation bill for the Post-Office Department. It will become a part and parcel of the statutes of the United States; and hereafter when the Postmaster-General asks Congress to appropriate for clerical force it will be the same in effect as when he asks an appropriation for either the letter-carrier force or the railway postal clerks. He submits in his estimate a round bulk amount for the railway postal clerks; he submits in his estimate a round bulk amount for the carriers at letter-carrier offices: he submits at the same time what increase he desires to have effected under the legislation he may recommend to Congress. If Congress does not appropriate the full amount he asks for the letter-carrier service or for the railway postal clerks, he simply employs during the fiscal year for which you make the appropriation the amount of subordinate force that the money you appropriate will allow him to employ.

Now, I claim that this bill simply fixes a classification of the subordinate force in the first and second class post-offices. Similar legisla-tion heretofore has said there shall be five classes of railway postal clerks, with salaries ranging from $900 up to $1,500; that there shall be three classes of letter-carriers, with salaries ranging from $600 up to $1,000. So in the statute book in the future will appear this detailed classification here proposed, in regard to which the Postmaster-General will be under the obligation to see that he does not exceed the amount appropriated by Congress

This simply classifies the subordinate force. Under this very bill the postmasters of the first and second class offices will have to send up on the 1st day of July of each fiscal year an estimate of the subordinate force which they desire. The Postmaster-General, taking the sum total of your appropriation for clerical force, will say, for instance, to the postmaster at Philadelphia, "Your roster recommends twenty mail distributors, sixteen messengers, fourteen watchmen, ten case distributors, but the appropriation for clerical force is not in amount that which I asked from Congress; and although you ask for sixty men I can give you only fifty." But he fixes under the law the compensation that those fifty shall receive; and in doing so he can not, unless he violates the law, exceed the appropriation given to him in your appropriation bill.

One word more. This classification, of course, is based upon an entirely different principle from your compensation to railways or your compensation to postmasters. The railways by statute are paid so much per pound on mail matter carried; the postmasters by statute are paid in accordance with the gross receipts. In those matters the law leaves no discretion to the Postmaster-General. But in this bill his discretion runs in every classification, from a sum total salary of $700 up to a sum total salary of $2,500. I say, therefore, that in the classification of the clerks he exercises discretion, and in the exercise of that discretion he is controlled by the appropriation made by Congress; he dare exercise it only to the limit of the amount you appropriate under

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, no rule can be suggested in reference to classifying clerks in post-offices throughout this country which would not operate in some cases in an unsatisfactory manner. All that we can hope to do is to adopt a rule the general effect of which shall avoid some or many of the evils of the present system. It is possible—indeed, it is probably true—that some of the officers do not have a sufficient clerical allowance. It is likewise true sometimes they have it and they complain they do not have it. It is untrue that the Postmaster-General is guided entirely by gross receipts. Sometimes that complaint is made and an inspector is sent. The construction of the office, facilities about the office, all these things are taken into consideration.

The Postmaster-General is not bound by any fixed rule to get at the truth. He has many methods, and doubtless he has used the best method in his power and has done far better than we could who criticise him.

It has been said if this classification shall become the law of the land the Postmaster-General will not adhere to, but will exceed, the amount of the appropriation. He will take the fund and see how many employés he can put in the offices of the country, and he is then at the end of it.

Mr. ROGERS. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him at this point?

Mr. BLOUNT. Certainly.

Mr. ROGERS. I am interested greatly in the line which the gentleman is pursuing, and I wish to understand the question. I want to find the law as it now exists which authorizes the Postmaster-General to employ these clerks.

Mr. BLOUNT. I can not find the page.

Mr. ROGERS. I have the page here, and will read it if the gentleman will permit me. Perhaps I can help you to elucidate the matter.

Mr. BLOUNT. I will elucidate it in my own way.

Mr. ROGERS. I will ask the chairman of the committee to recognize me, then, in my own time, as I wish to get it before the House.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have no doubt that the gentleman from Arkansas will instruct the House, as he usually does when he addresses it. will pardon me, however, if I prefer to state it in my own way. I do not mean the slightest discourtesy to the gentleman, as he is well aware.

You have a law for clerks in post-offices. You have an amount appropriated in the bill. When you come to assigning clerks, their salaries being fixed, you may find at some place you have not a sufficient force. That is exactly what you have found during the past year. It is what you may find anywhere.

The Postmaster-General commences his fiscal year on the 1st of July and in a few months he has reached December. He sees the condition and presents reasons to Congress for supplying the deficiency. If you recognize the reasons he presents you give it, and if you do not you We shall never get away from that situation, that relation between the Executive Department and Congress. It is impossible for it to be otherwise. The Postmaster-General, without the perfection of infinity, can not estimate the exact increase of your mails and tell how many clerks are necessary to handle it. So this difficulty you speak of will continue to the end of time. It adjusts itself by the submission of additional estimates to Congress thereon.

Now, I wish to call the attention of the House to an actual deficiency in reference to the compensation of railroads. It has been declared the Postmaster-General shall not exceed the amount contained in the appropriation bill for any given service. For compensation to railroads during the fiscal year 1888 it was estimated there would be an increase of 7,000 miles of railroad constructed in this country. The course of time developed the increase was 13,000 miles during the fiscal year.

The increase in the mails has been beyond precedent and beyond expectation when the estimate was made.

What does the Department do? What has it always done? Finding itself in this situation, it has put mail on all the railroads all over the country although the money had not been allotted to it, and in a ment pending, and I move now to add what I have sent to the desk.

few months, when Congress assembled, reported its action in the matter and asked a deficiency to pay for the additional service required by this unexpected condition. If the Postmaster-General had erred in leaving some routes without the mails upon them it was for Congress to judge. It was the exercise of a discretion on the part of the Department, subject to the ratification of Congress when it assembled whether it would allow that increase or not.

Sir, these imperfections in relation to deficiencies are just as certain as that the action of the human intellect is liable to error; so that we need not rush away from the scheme of classification proposed in this bill because of a possible deficiency. When you are accustomed to them in other items in the service, and they are happening under all administrations, I see no necessity for alarm. I trust, sir, that because we could not make a perfect plan gentlemen will not refuse to do what has been clamored for by every Postmaster-General for the last ten years, that has been dilated upon by the press, and with reason, and which has found expression in the complaint of the clerks all over the country.

I do importune gentlemen on either side of the House to let no imperfections, if there be imperfections in the bill, or if there may be imperfection existing in the service, consign us to the disastrous policy which we have experienced in the past.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. Rogers having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the President protempore of the Senate had appointed as tellers, in pursuance of the resolution providing for the counting of the electoral votes, Mr. MANDERSON and Mr. HARRIS on the part of the Senate.

Also, that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 11917) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

Also, that the Senate had passed the bill (S.7799) for the relief of the Albemarle and Chesapeake Canal Company.

The message further announced that the Senate disagreed to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 139) to credit and pay to the several States and Territories and to the District of Columbia all moneys collected under the direct tax levied by act of Congress approved August 5, 1861, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. MORRILL, and Mr. HARRIS managers on the part of the Senate.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. Chairman, several gentlemen in this debate seem to have an impression that an insufficient appropriation for the postal service would tell mainly on the second-class offices, because, in the words of my friend from Kansas, the first-class offices would be taken care of anyway. That is not true in the one first-class office with which I am best acquainted, and I attribute it largely to the rapid growth of the postal business in Chicago. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, to have printed in the RECORD an extract of a very few lines, not exceeding perhaps ten in length, being a tabular statement sent to me recently from that office, showing the increase in the city delivery in the single fiscal year from 1887 to 1888. There was no objection.

The table is as follows:

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to add, after the word "pro-

The Clerk read as follows:

Add, after "provided," in line 14 of page 2, the words:
"Provided, however, That the aggregate salaries as fixed by such classification shall not exceed the sum hereby appropriated."

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to be conceded, if I understood the gentleman from Georgia correctly, that this classification would have the effect of law in fixing the salaries, and I know of no reason why it should not have. I believe that also is the view expressed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BINGHAM. Certainly.

Mr. HOLMAN. That would be a most extraordinary power, the most extraordinary, I think, ever conferred upon a head of a Department in the history of the light in the light of the conferred upon a head of a Department in the history of the light in the light of ment in the history of our legislation, if that is a proper construction of the provision as stated by these gentlemen, that in a wide field of public employment, involving an immense number of employés and vast sums of public money, power is vested in the hands of a single officer to so classify that force as to absolutely make and control legislation; for whether we appropriate the money by this bill for it or not is immaterial so far as the salaries are concerned, for the salaries will still be a demand upon the Government for any deficiency created by an insufficient appropriation.

I am not willing for myself to see Congress abdicate the important power of fixing salaries. It can of course be said that we have appropriated sums in gross in an appropriation bill, and under such appropriation the Postmaster-General had the power to determine the amount that should be received by each clerk employed by the Department. But the answer is that Congress determines and regulates the sum that should be expended. It regulates the charge against the Government and says how great the sum shall be, while this provision is a complete abandonment by Congress of the power to determine what shall be the limit of the legal demand for salaries against the United States. propose to appropriate $6,500,000, leaving it in the power of the Postmaster-General to fix the amount of the salaries without limit. Instead of $6,500,000, any sum beyond that may, in his judgment, be proper for the classification of the clerks in his Department—may be made a legal charge upon the Treasury.

Do gentlemen propose to go to that extent? Do gentlemen propose to place upon the statute-books a law which empowers the head of a Department to determine how millions of money beyond that appropriated shall be expended? It has been said on this side of the House, as well as on the other side of the House, and by the whole country with rare exceptions, that the Post-Office Department has been well administered during the last four years, and indeed for many years past. I represent a portion of the country westward, where an average degree of interest in the postal system will be found, say the latitude of Cincinnati, Ohio. I feel safe in saying that our post-office system has been well administered, not only under the present but under the former administration; and yet the unusual measure proposed would indicate a state of public necessity so imperative as to require this extraordinary legislation, which is almost an entire abdication of a great power by Congress, and confer it upon the head of a Department.

From the days of Franklin to the present hour there has never been a public officer at the head of that Department who should be intrusted with such an extraordinary power. Where are we drifting? We appropriated for this particular service in 1888, $5,450,000; in 1889, $5,900,000, and for 1890 it is proposed to appropriate $6,550,000, being $100,000 increase in ratio beyond any former experience for one year, I believe and yet this bill proposed to appropriate $6,550,000. lieve; and yet this bill proposes to confer power upon this Department to increase that sum virtually almost without limit. The overweening anxiety of my friend to see a great Department of the Government already well sustained and supported invested with this great power of real legislation as to official salaries grows out of his anxiety to perfect the system even beyond the perfection already attained. This wish has very naturally influenced the action of my friend from Georgia in inducing him to consent to legislation of such an extraordinary character; but I think my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], so well known for his prudence and ability in legislation, when he comes to consider this subject will see that the power conferred by this paragraph is too great a power to give to any Department and not necessary to the efficiency of the system.

The history of none of the Departments of the Government justifies such legislation. I have noticed, sir, in the progress of current history that those Departments of Government, those agencies of Government which are of the highest moment, which come nearest to the people and involve their dearest interests are those most exposed to peril and mistakes of legislation, which could not have occurred in other Departments less beneficent. A few years ago there was in the Post-Office Department a striking illustration of this. Can my friend from Georgia afford to run the risk of vesting in a single officer of the Government such a power as this when there is no impending demand nor imperative necessity for it? That Department is now well administered, and so far as I am aware its employés are generally well paid, and paid greatly beyond the average of those who are employed in private employments requiring corresponding capacity and integrity. For one, I am opposed to any increase of salaries and do not believe that the public good requires it in any Department of the Government.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am surprised at the speech of my friend from Indiana, and yet I do not see why I should be.

Mr. REED. Nor do I.

Mr. BLOUNT. I have heard him make such a speech before. yet there is no reason for it. The gentleman says that the Post-Office Department is well managed, admirably managed, and yet he opposes the proposition in this bill. I can state to the gentleman that it is commended by the Postmaster-General. This kind of legislation has been recommended during a series of years by various Postmasters-General. The President of the United States has seen fit to call special attention to it in his message. It is not of the character that the gentleman from Indiana claims-to give to the Postmaster-General the power to say what the salary of each particular clerk in this country shall be. On the contrary, it is for the purpose of determining that for a certain class of labor there shall be a minimum salary and a maximum salary for one given grade, and the maximum salary is not an extraordinary one in any single instance. Where, then, is the enormous power of abdicating the right on the part of Congress to fix the salary of employés?

Mr. HOLMAN. Can not he put in any number that he thinks proper in the higher salary grade?

Mr. BLOUNT. Why, of course he can; and the gentleman from Indiana knows that he may now in the Department put any of the employés in the higher class.

Mr. HOLMAN. He can not increase the number of any class. That within the power of Congress, and has been up to this time. Mr. BLOUNT. Take your railway clerks; their salaries are fixed by law absolutely. Take your letter-carriers; their salaries are fixed by law absolutely. Take the salary of the gentleman from Indiana himself—but that is not in the control of the Department. [Laugh-

Mr. HOLMAN. Ah, but you fix the sum that shall be expended, and any expenditure beyond that would not be a claim upon your

Treasury

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, Mr. Chairman, it would be a claim upon the Treasury, and that is just exactly the situation in which we should be. If you have a mail to distribute at a given point, you should not undertake to do it by cutting down the salaries of employés, or by turning out trained men and putting in a class of inferior men, whom you will be glad to get rid of whenever you are in a condition to pay higher compensation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Has my friend heard of any resignations lately?

Mr. BLOUNT. I have, sir. I have known of such cases in my own city, and I have known of the refusal of clerks who were in the employ of the post-office to remain.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have not heard of any such instances.

Mr. BLOUNT. Oh, my friend sometimes does not hear of these things, but they have been heard of all over this House, and all over this country. The Postmaster-General who preceded the present Postmaster-General had a clamor about his ears from offices all over the country; that complaint was voiced here through members upon this floor, and it was to the effect that the post-office clerks were paid insufficient compensation because the allowance was too low. The business men of the country were clamorous about that condition of things, the press and the people everywhere were clamorous about it, yet my friend from Indiana never heard about it!

Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman has seen fit to refer to my views in the past in relation to this matter, I will take his own record on this subject, and will call attention to his own course. I happened to be on a subcommittee on the Post-Office appropriation bill in the Forty-fourth Congress with the gentleman from Indiana. I was young and inexperienced, and knew nothing about this matter of clerks in How much the gentleman from Indiana knew I do not know, but I do know that he cut down the clerical force, and it was cut down again the next year, and that process of cutting down resulted in the reduction of the salaries of the employés, and, after a time, it resulted in an inefficient handling of the mails, and finally came the reaction, through the press, on this floor, and through every channel by which it could show itself. We were told that the allowance for post-office clerks was of such an insufficient character that the mails were not being properly handled; there was a general and universal complaint throughout the country about it, and the complaint grew until the present Postmaster-General recognized it and asked for a revision of the estimates, and Congress voted some $400,000 instead of the $100,000 they had given before. Now, sir, I hold that with sixtyodd millions of revenue gathered from the post-offices of the country, most of it not raised by taxation, but by the rates of postage charged to the people, it is the duty of Congress to put the post-offices of this country, so far as clerical hire is concerned, upon a business basis.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I always view with jealousy any proposition to part with power which belongs to the House of Representatives or to the Congress of the United States and give it to any other department of the Government I have not had time, however, to investigate this bill with reference to that aspect of it, but there is an aspect that I have given some cursory examination while this debate has been proceeding, and which I think ought to have the careful consideration of the committee. I tried to elicit the point by asking my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] to tell me just where the law was to be found which gave the Postmaster-General the right to appoint these clerks, and I have been referred to two or three different sections of the statutes, to which I desire to invite the attention of the House.

I hold in my hand the postal laws of 1887, the second section of which is general in its terms, and, among other things, requires the Postmaster-General "to superintend the general business of the Department and execute all laws relative to the postal service," etc.; but nobody, I take it, will contend that that is authority for the Postmaster-General to provide clerks without reference to appropriations to pay them. There is also cited to me another provision, a section of the Revised Statutes, which is to be found on page 119 of these regulations. It reads as follows:

The Postmaster-General may allow to the postmaster at New York City, and to the postmasters at offices of the first and second class, out of the surplus revenues of their respective offices—that is to say, the excess of box-rents and commissions over and above the salary assigned to the office—a reasonable sum for the necessary cost of rent, fuel, lights, furniture, stationery, printing, clerks, and necessary incidentals, to be adjusted on a satisfactory exhibit of the facts, and no such allowance shall be made except upon the order of the Postmaster-General.

Now, it will be seen at a glance that this section of the Revised Statutes is in force now, while we are operating under the commission system. This bill contemplates a salary system; and if it goes into effect this provision of the Revised Statutes must of necessity be repealed by the operation of this new law. So that this provision would furnish no authority for the action of the Postmaster-General in this matter. It would be repealed by implication.

Again, I am referred to other sections in this book. It is on page 32, and reads as follows:

Except when a different compensation is expressly prescribed by law, any clerk temporarily employed to perform the same or similar duties to those belonging to clerks of either class is entitled to the same salary as is allowed to the clerks of that class.

Then in a note I find the following:

Special salaries are from year to year prescribed by the acts of appropriation in some cases. When no special provision is made this statute governs the compensation of those employes mentioned.

Now, the statute referred to is to be found in section 13, page 32, of this volume, and is in these words:

The annual salaries of clerks and employés in the Departments whose compensation is not otherwise prescribed shall be as follows.

Then it goes on to specify the clerks of the first, second, third, and fourth classes as well as other classes of employés, there being nine classes in all.

Then follows the section I have just read beginning—

Except when a different compensation is expressly prescribed by law.

I feel certain that all this applies to the Post-Office Department, and not to clerks in post-offices.

It thus appears, as I understand (though I am not clear on the point, because I have not had opportunity to give the matter investigation)—it appears, as I conceive and as has been stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] that the power of the Postmaster-General to appoint these clerks or to authorize the employment of clerks for different offices throughout the country is to be found in the several appropriation acts, and is limited to the aggregate sum thereby appropriated. If not, where is the statute that provides otherwise? I insist that there is none.

This brings me to the consideration of the more important question which has enlisted my attention at this time. I regret, Mr. Chairman, that I am not prepared to indulge in eulogy similar to that which my friend from Indiana has indulged in, with reference to the postal service during a portion at least of the last four years. For the last year I have seen no occasion for complaint; "further than that deponent saith not."

Now, if we are going to inaugurate a new system we ought to inaugurate it with reference to the evils which have attended the operations of the old system; and under a part of the present Administration it must be said that a large portion of this country, whatever may have been the case in Indiana, was given the most inferior postal service that the country has ever known since I have taken any interest in the postal service. Why, sir, I say without reservation from my personal knowledge that in the office in my own town some of the clerks were compelled to work from fourteen to seventeen hours a day, beginning at from 4 to 5 o'clock in the morning, when the first mails were delivered, and often working until 1 o'clock at night, when the last mails were received, so that clerk after clerk resigned, thus crippling the efficiency of the service until the postmaster found it difficult to maintain the service at all.

maintain the service at all.

Worn out himself by actual and constant labor from ten to twelve hours per day for months and months, with all the care and responsibility attached to an office of that kind, and dogged in the public press and by private parties, in which the Department took some hand also, he at last tendered his resignation, on the sole ground that he could not do the work with the help allowed, notwithstanding he had paid out from four hundred to twelve hundred dollars of his salary per annum for necessary and additional help; but the Department would not accept it, but after a delay of two months or more gave him partial relief. And the Department was not in ignorance of this condition of things, for I went in person, and wrote letters, stating the facts, and laid letters from the postmaster before the Department, and did all that I knew how to do to be purposed.

I knew how to do, to no purpose.

But it is true, Mr. Chairman, that there was an abnormal condition of things at that office; and that brings me to another important consideration in connection with this legislation. No Post-Office Department can regulate, and no postal service can be properly regulated, under iron rules. There must of necessity be some discretion vested in the Post-master-General. For instance, that town has sprung from a population of 3,000 to an estimated population of 17,000 or 20,000 within the last four years. Under this law, by a rigid rule, the salary and number of the clerks would be fixed for a whole year. Under this bill if the Postmaster-General is not allowed some discretion in raising the salary of clerks before the end of the fiscal year for which the salary is fixed and in increasing the force when there is absolute necessity, the postal service will be practically destroyed in some places.

The Postmaster-General should not only have discretion with ref-

The Postmaster-General should not only have discretion with reference to the annual salary, reducing it if necessary, and raising it if necessary—I mean as to the amounts allowed to the office for clerk-hire—but unless there is authority of law for him to employ force in excess of the appropriations, and ask for deficiency, then the appropriation ought to be large enough to meet the growing demands of the service. There is no such power found in this bill, and I do not know of any in existing law. I undertake to speak for the country upon this proposition, and to say that the people of the country will never complain of a properly administered and efficient postal service, whatever the cost may be.

[Here the hammer fell.]

One observation more. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that my honorable friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT] who has given this matter most careful and conscientious consideration, and for whose judgment I have the highest regard, if he is not fully satisfied that the amount proposed in this bill is ample to meet the demands of this growing service, will not hesitate for a moment to accept an amendment increasing the amount to whatever sum the Post-Office Department believes will be essential to a proper and efficient administration of the service.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. ROGERS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CRISP reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12490) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1890, had come to no resolution thereon.

SALARIES OF HOUSE MESSENGERS.

Mr. HAYES. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution embraced in Miscellaneous Document No. 41, and the report thereon, in relation to the equalization of salaries of messengers of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it is too late to transact any business of that kind

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Indiana object?

Mr. HOLMAN. I think we had better adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana objects.

Mr. SAYERS. Has the resolution been modified as suggested?

Mr. McCREARY. What modification does the gentleman suggest?

He also presented a petition of the Legislative Assembly of the Territory of Dakota, praying for an amendment of what is known as the omnibus bill for the admission of certain Territories; which was reoffinition of the calmistee on Territories.

Mr. DAWES. I present the petition of Thomas L. Sloan and 110 other Indian students at Hampton Normal Institute, in which they represent that they believe that "the present ration system is not productive of good results, but, on the contrary, encourages idleness and dependence. It unfits for citizenship or progress those who are fed in this manner." They believe that "if those who so elect might be allowed to receive instead of rations their equivalent value in farming implements or stock, they would be encouraged in the settlement of lands and improvement thereon, reaching in the end that independence necessary for good citizenship. It would also work out the discontinuance of rations, which is desired by both the Government and the advanced Indians."

I have read this passage from the petition not only because of the remarkably wise and sagacious ideas contained in it, but from the fact that the petition is in the handwriting off one of these students, and is signed in their own handwriting by every one but three of the one hundred and ten. It is their own idea, to which they have not been prompted by any one on the outside.

It is a little singular that there should be any law in the way of an Indian changing the rations which the Government is bound to furnish him into agricultural or other implements, so that if he is willing by his own labor to support himself he may have the benefit of the very rations which he receives. But the law as it exists forbids any such transaction as that.

I happen to know of one agent, who was very much enlisted in the welfare of the Indians, who induced them to go to work and sustain themselves on the promise that so much as they did not need of their rations should be saved for them to be used in building them homes, and he saved in one year out of the rations of the Government which the Government was bound by treaty to furnish them $6,000, only to find at the end of the year that that $6,000 must be turned into the Treasury of the United States. Such a condition of things in the law forbids any encouragement to be held out to an Indian to attain the condition of self-support. It seems to me as if the law had set about devising a policy with the Indians that would throw obstacles in the way of any effort on the part of the Indian to sustain himself.

This petition comes from a body of young men who got it up them-selves and signed it with their own hands. I should like to have it referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and I hope that they will see fit to so provide that the appropriation of money for the support of the Indians this year at least shall carry along with it the condition that when an Indian will support himself he may have the equivalent of his rations devoted to civilization.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.
